PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-FIFTH CONGRESS THIRD SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 2, 1918.

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the third session of the Sixty-fifth Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

The VICE PRESIDENT (THOMAS R. MARSHALL, of Indiana) called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock noon.

PRAYER.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we have come to Thee at the opening of this session of the Senate amid the joy of a great Nation, with the acclaim of victory ringing through the hearts and over all the land. Thy mighty power has gotten us the victory. Thou hast led us into a large place. Thou hast brought us out into a vital relation with questions and issues of the world's life. Thou art using us as an evangel of peace and good will among all men. We pray Thy guidance that we may so discharge the duties of the office that has come to us in Thy providence as that the security and peace of the Nation may be perpetuated and the honor and glory of Thy name held above all other questions. Guide us in the discharge of these great duties this day and always. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the certificate of the governor of Delaware certifying to the election of LEWIS HEISLER BALL for the term beginning March 4 next. The credentials will be inserted in the RECORD and placed on file.

The credentials are as follows:

By authority of the State of Delaware.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

Be it known an election was held in the State of Delaware on Tuesday, the 5th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1918, that being the Tuesday next after the first Monday in said month, in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the State of Delaware, in that behalf, for the election of a Senator for the people of the said State in the Senate of the United States.

Whereas the official certificates of returns of the said election held in the several counties of the said State, in due manner made out, signed, and executed, have been delivered to me according to the laws of the said State by the superior court of the said counties, and having examined said returns and enumerated and ascertained the number of votes for each and every candidate or person voted for for such Senator I have found LEWIS HEISLER BALL to be the person highest in vote, and therefore duly elected Senator of and for the said State in the Senate of the United States for the constitutional term to commence on the 4th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1919.

I, John G. Townsend, jr., governor, do, therefore, according to the form of the act of the General Assembly of the said State and of the act of Congress of the United States in such case made and provided, declare the said LEWIS HEISLER BALL the person highest in vote at the election aforesaid and therefore duly and legally elected Senator of and for the said State of Delaware in the Senate of the United States for the constitutional term to commence on the 4th day of March in the year of our Lord 1919.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 355), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 356), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such a committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia and Mr. LODGE as the committee under the resolution.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 357), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian until otherwise ordered.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, it was Ordered, That the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. POLLOCK] be assigned to the chairmanship of the Committee on National Banks, and that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] be assigned to the chairmanship of the Committee on Coast and Insular Survey.

On motion of Mr. WARREN, it was Ordered, That the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] be assigned to membership on the Committee on Canadian Relations, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, and the Committee on Indian Affairs.

STATUE OF FREEDOM.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators, my attention has been called to an historic event occurring 55 years ago at 12 o'clock meridian of December 2, which I deem of sufficient moment to recall to your memory.

At that hour the bronze Statue of Freedom which surmounts the Dome of the Capitol was raised to its present position. It was the work of and cast at the foundry of Clark Mills on the Bladensburg Road, about 3 miles from the Capitol. The plaster model was by Thomas Crawford and is now in the National Museum.

This statue was erected in the midst of a Civil War, in moments of doubt and uncertainty. Calm and implacable it looked out over the Capital City and over the war-ravished fields of the adjacent territory. It seemed to be a promise that out of the awful tumult should come the eternal calm of freedom to the Republic. It stood with equal fortitude and confidence when the Republic took arms in the defense of stricken Cuba. To-day, when all of us are wondering what is to come as the aftermath of the world's war to the freedom of America and the freedom of the world, let us be reassured that while this statue stands freedom for us will be safe though all the tempests of evil and unlawful purposes may beat with fury round its base.

UPBUILDING OF MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, is morning business in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has always felt that, except as to such business as is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Senate, no business is in order until the Congress of the United States is regularly in session.

Mr. PENROSE. Would it be in order to present a resolution? It does not matter if it is not in order at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know whether the resolution would be in order or not. What is its purport?

Mr. PENROSE. What is in order now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Everything that has to do with the Senate of the United States and not with the Congress of the United States.

Mr. PENROSE. This is a resolution for the Senate. If there is no objection, I will present a resolution adopted by the Philadelphia Bourse favoring the upbuilding of the United States merchant marine. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

THE PRESIDENT'S TRIP TO EUROPE.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to present from the New York Times of December 2, 1918, and to have read from the desk by the Secretary the part I have marked. It shows the preparations for the trip abroad of the President, the employment of 50 cooks and confectioners, a chef from the Biltmore Hotel, and an orchestra of many pieces, consisting of both wind and string instruments. Proper eclat will be provided, according to this news report, to impress the crowned heads abroad. I should like to ask, Mr. President, that the article be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. PHELAN. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the article be read?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I raise a question of order. The Chair, in my judgment, after giving some consideration to the question, has no right to put the motion as to whether or not anything shall be printed after objection has been made or a request has been made for unanimous consent. The motion should come from the floor of the Senate, in my judgment. That objection met me in my effort to protect the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD from statements which I thought were unnecessary.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I call the Senator's attention——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I raise the point of order that such a motion must come from the proponent of the request or from some other Senator and not be put by the Chair.

Mr. GRONNA. May I correct the Senator? The question is not whether the article shall be printed. The question is, Shall this article which has been sent to the desk by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] be read?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is just the same thing. If it is read, it will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GRONNA. It is not the same thing.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is exactly the same thing.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I will make the motion for the reading of the article, if there is any question about the parliamentary situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the rule that when the reading of any paper is called for and objected to the question shall be determined by a vote of the Senate without debate. The rule is perfectly plain.

Mr. GRONNA. Regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All in favor of the request of the Senator from Illinois will say "aye." [A pause.] Those opposed "no." [A pause.] The "ayes" seem to have it. The "ayes" have it, and the Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask for a division, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All in favor of the reading of the article will rise. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise.

Mr. PENROSE. The motion was declared carried.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, it is carried again. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the article, as follows:

TRANSPORT READY FOR THE PRESIDENT—SPECIAL CHEF AND STAFF OF WAITERS AND KITCHEN HELPERS DRAFTED FROM BILTMORE—EVERY COMFORT PROVIDED—ORCHESTRA TO PLAY DURING MEALS AND NAVY YARD BAND FOR DECK MUSIC TO MAKE THE TRIP TO BREST.

Through arrangements that are being made by naval officers, under orders of Admiral Gleaves, President Wilson and his guests, including M. Jusserand, the French ambassador, will have every comfort possible on the trip of the transport George Washington to Brest, which will begin late to-morrow or early Wednesday.

The naval cooks, who provide for the wardroom of the officers as well as the crew, will not be required to cater to the presidential party, quartered on the promenade decks. Louis Ceres, the chef at the Hotel Biltmore, with his staff and a crew of waiters, will board the George Washington to-day at Hoboken and make the kitchen, pantry, and dining rooms ready for the guests when they go on board to-morrow. The catering will be under the direction of J. J. Menotti, a restaurant manager at the Biltmore. He will have 50 cooks, confectioners, bakers, waiters, and so on with him.

It is expected that the peace delegates and the other guests will board the George Washington at Pier 4, Hoboken, on Tuesday before 3 o'clock, at which hour she will steam out to Gravesend Bay and anchor to await the arrival of President Wilson. The battleship Pennsylvania, flying the flag of Admiral Henry T. Mayo, commander of the American fleet, will steam from the Brooklyn Navy Yard to meet the George Washington, with an escort of five of the latest and fastest destroyers, which are said to be capable of steaming 40 knots.

During the afternoon yesterday several officers belonging to the Army and Navy, with their friends, who had obtained special passes from the Navy Department, visited the transport and inspected the suites and cabins on C deck, which are to be occupied by the President and Mrs. Wilson and the guests. An orchestra will go along to play during luncheon and dinner, and the brass band from the navy yard will play on deck and when the George Washington enters the harbor of Brest, which is expected to be on December 11 or 12, depending upon the time she leaves New York.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia and Mr. LODGE, the committee on the part of the Senate appointed to wait on the President of the United States, appeared, and

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia said: Mr. President, the committee appointed to act with a like committee on the part of the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States, to inform him of the organization of the two Houses of Congress and to receive information from him as to any communication he may desire to make, have performed that duty and beg leave to report that the President has expressed his purpose, by the consent of both Houses, to communicate to them in joint session in the Hall of the House of Representatives on to-day, at 1 o'clock p. m.

COMMITTEE TO ATTEND PEACE CONFERENCE.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I submit a resolution, which I ask to have read and then referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 358) was read, as follows:

Whereas the peace conference about to assemble in Paris will involve not only a settlement of the issues between the United States and her enemies in the existing war, but will include in its consideration proposed treaties with practically all the civilized nations of the earth; and

Whereas the subjects for disposition are the most comprehensive, far-reaching, and vital ever submitted to the treaty-making powers of the world; and

Whereas no treaty can be entered into by the United States without the consent of the Senate; and

Whereas the President is to conduct the negotiations at Paris in person; and

Whereas it is supremely important that the Senate be promptly, fully, and accurately informed of all the facts which may be pertinent to the proposed readjustment in the affairs of the various powers concerned in these treaties and of all the reasons which may be urged for and against the proposed compacts while the negotiations therefor are in progress. It is therefore

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That there be created a committee, to be composed of eight Senators, one-half from the majority and one-half from the minority, which shall be charged with the duty of proceeding to Paris at the proper time, in order to be there present during the said peace conference.

The committee shall diligently inquire with respect to all the facts pertaining to or material for the future consideration of the proposed treaties by the Senate, and make itself familiar with all the conditions and circumstances surrounding the subject and all the reasons which may exist for and against the action to be taken. It shall report to the Senate upon all such matters as often as it may deem it advisable to do so, and it shall make a final report at or before the time that the treaties growing out of the conference are laid before the Senate for approval, rejection, or modification.

The committee shall be chosen in the manner provided in the rules of the Senate for the selection of its standing committees.

It is authorized to employ such secretaries, clerks, stenographers, and messengers as it may deem necessary for the discharge of the duties herein imposed upon it.

All the expenses incident to its work in the United States and Europe shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon the certificate of the Senator who shall be chosen chairman of the committee.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the proposer of this resolution that it is customary to send such resolutions first to a committee to consider the resolution upon its merits, and after that to have it referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I think that if the Senator would request that the resolution first go to the Committee on Foreign Relations it would be more in accordance with the usual practice.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not so understand the practice of the Senate. The law imperatively requires the reference of a resolution of this character to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. It can not even be considered by the Senate until a report from that committee is had. I have no objection whatever to a reference at the proper time to the Committee on Foreign Relations; indeed, I expect that it will be referred to that committee for consideration; and I submit to the Chair, and will be entirely satisfied with whatever ruling the Chair may make, the question as to which committee should first consider the resolution. I may remark that I intend to press it with all the energy I have and at every convenient opportunity, and all I ask from either committee is prompt consideration and report.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I make the suggestion, Mr. President, from my memory of the practice of the Senate. It seems much more reasonable to me that the committee that passes upon the merits of the question should first consider the resolution, and then, after that committee has affirmatively passed upon the resolution, that it should go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, which will merely consider the question of expense.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have never, Mr. President, been quite sure with regard to the scope of the jurisdiction of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I assume that it may pass upon the merits of a resolution; I know nothing of a rule to the contrary; but whatever the Chair may rule upon the subject, with that I will be content, because I have no disposition to exclude either the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate or the Committee on Foreign Relations. I want the judgment of both.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I was a member of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate for a number of years, and the rule which we followed at that time was always to treat a resolution not upon its merits, but as a matter that should be passed upon after the merits had been determined by the proper committee. It can readily be seen that that is quite natural, because expenditures ought not to be authorized until it is determined that they are necessary. It seems to me, therefore, that the resolution should be referred first to the Committee on Foreign Relations before the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate is asked to pass upon it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I may answer that by saying that, if the Committee on Foreign Relations shall vote that this inquiry is necessary, it would seem to me that the action of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate would be merely perfunctory, because I assume that it would be quite willing to do whatever is necessary to be done.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the law specifically says that whenever a resolution is offered in the Senate incurring expenses to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, it must be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. It is mandatory; it is not a rule of the body; it is the law; and it has been the practice of the Senate to do so. After that committee decides as to whether the amount of money that will be required to make the investigation, if it is an investigation that is proposed, can be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, then the Senate can decide as to whether they want to proceed with it on the report of the committee or send it to another committee, and in this case it would be to the Committee on Foreign Relations—not necessarily, of course, but that, in all probability, is the committee to which it would be sent. What the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate decide is whether the expenditures involved shall be or can be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate. In my opinion, that is the committee to which the resolution should first be referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the law:

> Hereafter no payment shall be made from the contingent fund of the Senate unless sanctioned by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, or from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives unless sanctioned by the Committee on Accounts of the House of Representatives.

It is not that a resolution shall first be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but that no payment shall be made until it has been sanctioned by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The Chair has uniformly adopted the rule of referring resolutions which call for the expenditure of money to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; but the Chair does not believe that that prevents a motion being made from the floor to refer a resolution first to another committee. Unless the motion be made from the floor to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Chair refers it to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think the practice of the Senate has, as a rule, been that described by the Chair, as to the soundness of whose ruling I have no question. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate is to determine the question of the expenditure of the money when the Senate reaches the point of asking for the money for a given purpose; but that may come at any time. I have always felt that where the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate undertook to go into the merits of a case, as they have done in more than one instance, it was a usurpation; that their sole duty is to say whether the money is in the contingent fund and whether, in their judgment, the fund will permit its expenditure. The merits belong to the committee having charge of the subject and to the Senate itself.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption at that point?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that that is the logic of the situation, because if the Committee on Foreign Relations should disapprove the resolution there would be no reason for sending it to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Exactly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I trust that the Senate will not pass upon this motion in a perfunctory manner. Heretofore I have called to the attention of the Senate this question of procedure. As a member of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, in the summer of last year I called the attention of the Senate to a resolution which was then introduced directing an investigation of a strike upon the railways of this city. I thought at that time that some committee of this body should consider whether or not the investigation should be made. At that time the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate made a report upon the resolution, recommending that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The Senate did not act favorably upon that recommendation. The result was that no committee of the Senate considered the propriety or advisability of having the investigation made. From that time down to the present there have been a large number of resolutions directing investigations to be made. They have been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and on some occasions I have insisted that that committee, in view of the previous action of the Senate, should consider the question as to whether or not the investigation should be made, but objection has been invariably made by Members of this body. Just a few weeks ago, as the Senate will remember, in connection with a proposed investigation of an explosion in the State of New Jersey, I stated to this body that the Senator who submitted the resolution objected to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate making any examination of the question as to whether or not an investigation should be made. So it has been the practice since I have been in this body that no investigation has been made by any committee of the advisability of the adoption of such resolutions as this.

I believe it must be apparent to all Senators that a resolution of this importance, and, in fact, a resolution authorizing the investigation of any subject, should be passed upon by some committee of this body, so that we may know that there is merit behind the resolution. I do not intend to enter into the question of the merits of this resolution. It may be meritorious. It may be that there is an urgent need for this information to be obtained; but I do want to insist that some committee of this body shall pass upon this question.

Heretofore the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate has not done it. I do not believe that the resolution should be referred to that committee for the purpose of making a merely perfunctory report, a pro forma report. This body has invariably acted upon such reports from that committee without further investigation. It is my judgment that this resolution should go first to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and if that committee, after investigation, believes that the work should be done, then it should be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to see whether or not the funds at the disposal of the Senate will justify the expense.

I hope that the Senators will consider this matter in a serious way, and at this time adopt a procedure which will be right and will meet the well-considered views of the Senate for the future.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, before saying a few words as to the committee to which the resolution should be referred, I wish to take the first opportunity to say, as one Republican, that I am not in favor of the resolution and shall oppose it on the merits. It does seem to me, however, that a resolution so vitally affecting our relations with foreign governments should not first be passed upon by a mere auditing committee, but should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, where I hope it will be killed.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I hope that every friend of the resolution, at least, will vote to refer it to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I would much rather have it considered by that committee in the first instance than by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I only suggested the reference to the Committee on Contingent Expenses because I was under the impression, confirmed by the practice that had been pursued, that all such resolutions must be referred in the first instance to that committee.

I therefore make no objection whatever to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska and hope that it may be adopted.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, without expressing any opinion for or against the resolution introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], it has occurred to me that no committee so small from this body would have any influence with the Senate if it should be appointed, go to Paris, return, and report. The impressions received by eight Members of this body and the conclusions they might draw from their observations in Paris would hardly satisfy the other Members of the Senate; and the report, while it might give cause for debate, would not, in my opinion, facilitate action on the part of this body.

Therefore, in order that the matter may be considered by whatever committee the resolution is referred to, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada proposes an amendment to the resolution, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the word "eight" and insert "ninety-six."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to read the law to which I referred just a moment ago. As I stated, the practice has been to send all such resolutions to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The law reads as follows:

> Hereafter no payment shall be made from the contingent fund of the Senate unless sanctioned by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, or from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives unless sanctioned by the Committee on Accounts of the House of Representatives. And hereafter payments made upon vouchers approved by the aforesaid respective committees shall be deemed, held, and taken, and are hereby declared to be conclusive upon all the departments and officers of the Government—

And so forth. Of course, it has been held in the past, and it has been the practice of the Senate, and was thrashed out in this body when the resolution to investigate the street railways of the District of Columbia was under consideration. I made the statement that I did upon the basis of the precedents of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, when this subject was comparatively new to the present occupant of the chair, the Chair ruled that the proper practice was to refer the matter first to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but upon further consideration the Vice President said as follows. I read from volume 2 of the Precedents, page 127:

> The VICE PRESIDENT (Mr. MARSHALL). The Chair thinks that the Chair was not properly advised as to the statute of the United States the other day in referring the above-noted resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The Chair believes now that the statute simply provides that money shall not be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate until the payment has met with the approval of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. So, if any committee proceeds to make expenditures without the consent of that committee it is taking a chance that the money will never be paid.
> The Chair is very glad to reverse his ruling and to refer the resolution to the Committee on Education and Labor, with the view that if reported from the Committee on Education and Labor it shall subsequently be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, in order that there may be no complication with reference thereto.

And then the venerable and lamented late Senator Gallinger, who was perhaps as well advised about the rules of the Senate as any Member thereof, said:

> Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on this point I will venture merely to suggest that in the past that procedure has frequently been followed; the resolution has been referred to the committee having control of the subject matter, and subsequently it would necessarily, under the law, be sent to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.
> The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was trying to explain the ruling he made the other day under a misapprehension as to the terms of the statute.

I read this in view of the statement, quite positively made, that the uniform practice has been otherwise.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks he has ruled this morning in accordance with the statement read by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. Quite so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. South, the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared, and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

Also, that a committee of three Members were appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House to join the committee on the part of the Senate to wait upon the President and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may have to make, and that Mr. KITCHIN, Mr. SHERLEY, and Mr. MANN were appointed as a committee on the part of the House.

Also, that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing that the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Monday, December 2, 1918, at 1 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I ask that the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives providing for a joint session of the two Houses be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

> Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Monday, the 2d day of December, 1918, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.). The hour having arrived at which, in accordance with the concurrent resolution of the two Houses, the Senate is to proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives to receive a communication from the President of the United States, the Sergeant at Arms will take charge.

Thereupon the Senate, preceded by its Sergeant at Arms and headed by the Vice President and the Secretary, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The address of the President of the United States, this day delivered at a joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress, is as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONGRESS: The year that has elapsed since I last stood before you to fulfil my constitutional duty to give to the Congress from time to time information on the state of the Union has been so crowded with great events, great processes, and great results that I cannot hope to give you an adequate picture of its transactions or of the far-reaching changes which have been wrought in the life of our nation and of the world. You have yourselves witnessed these things, as I have. It is too soon to assess them; and we who stand in the midst of them and are part of them are less qualified than men of another generation will be to say what they mean, or even what they have been. But some great outstanding facts are unmistakable and constitute, in a sense, part of the public business with which it is our duty to deal. To state them is to set the stage for the legislative and executive action which must grow out of them and which we have yet to shape and determine.

A year ago we had sent 145,918 men overseas. Since then we have sent 1,950,513, an average of 162,542 each month, the number in fact rising, in May last to 245,951, in June to 278,760, in July to 307,182, and continuing to reach similar figures in August and September,—in August 289,570 and in September 257,438. No such movement of troops ever took place before, across three thousand miles of sea, followed by adequate equipment and supplies, and carried safely through extraordinary dangers of attack,—dangers which were alike strange and infinitely difficult to guard against. In all this movement only seven hundred and fifty-eight men were lost by enemy attack,—six hundred and thirty of whom were upon a single English transport which was sunk near the Orkney Islands.

I need not tell you what lay back of this great movement of men and material. It is not invidious to say that back of it lay a supporting organization of the industries of the country and of all its productive activities more complete, more thorough in method and effective in result, more spirited and unanimous in purpose and effort than any other great belligerent had been able to effect. We profited greatly by the experience of the nations which had already been engaged for nearly three years in the exigent and exacting business, their every resource and every executive proficiency taxed to the utmost. We were their pupils. But we learned quickly and acted with a promptness and a readiness of cooperation that justify our great pride that we were able to serve the world with unparalleled energy and quick accomplishment.

But it is not the physical scale and executive efficiency of preparation, supply, equipment and despatch that I would dwell upon, but the mettle and quality of the officers and men we sent over and of the sailors who kept the seas, and the spirit of the nation that stood behind them. No soldiers or sailors ever proved themselves more quickly ready for the test of battle or acquitted themselves with more splendid courage and achievement when put to the test. Those of us who played some part in directing the great processes by which the war was pushed irresistibly forward to the final triumph may now forget all that and delight our thoughts with the story of what our men did. Their officers understood the grim and exacting task they had undertaken and performed it with an audacity, efficiency, and unhesitating courage that touch the story of convoy and battle with imperishable distinction at every turn, whether the enterprise were great or small,—from their great chiefs, Pershing and Sims, down to the youngest lieutenant; and their men were worthy of them,—such men as hardly need to be commanded, and go to their terrible adventure blithely and with the quick intelligence of those who know just what it is they would accomplish. I am proud to be the fellow-countryman of men of such stuff and valour. Those of us who stayed at home did our duty; the war could not have been won or the gallant men who fought it given their opportunity to win it otherwise; but for many a long day we shall think ourselves "accurs'd we were not there, and hold our manhoods cheap while any speaks that fought" with these at St. Mihiel or Thierry. The memory of those days of triumphant battle will go with these fortunate men to their graves; and each will have his favourite memory. "Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot, but he'll remember with advantages what feats he did that day!"

What we all thank God for with deepest gratitude is that our men went in force into the line of battle just at the critical moment when the whole fate of the world seemed to hang in the balance and threw their fresh strength into the ranks of freedom in time to turn the whole tide and sweep of the fateful struggle,—turn it once for all, so that thenceforth it was back, back, back for their enemies, always back, never again forward! After that it was only a scant four months before the commanders of the Central Empires knew themselves beaten; and now their very empires are in liquidation!

And throughout it all how fine the spirit of the nation was: what unity of purpose, what untiring zeal! What elevation of purpose ran through all its splendid display of strength, its untiring accomplishment. I have said that those of us who stayed at home to do the work of organization and supply will always wish that we had been with the men whom we sustained by our labour; but we can never be ashamed. It has been an inspiring thing to be here in the midst of fine men who had turned aside from every private interest of their own and devoted the whole of their trained capacity to the tasks that supplied the sinews of the whole great undertaking! The patriotism, the unselfishness, the thoroughgoing devotion and distinguished capacity that marked their toilsome labours, day after day, month after month, have made them fit mates and comrades of the men in the trenches and on the sea. And not the men here in Washington only. They have but directed the vast achievement. Throughout innumerable factories, upon innumerable farms, in the depths of coal mines and iron mines and copper mines, wherever the stuffs of industry were to be obtained and prepared, in the shipyards, on the railways, at the docks, on the sea, in every labour that was needed to sustain the battle lines, men have vied with each other to do their part and do it well. They can look any man-at-arms in the face, and say, We also strove to win and gave the best that was in us to make our fleets and armies sure of their triumph!

And what shall we say of the women,—of their instant intelligence, quickening every task that they touched; their capacity for organization and cooperation, which gave their action discipline and enhanced the effectiveness of everything they attempted; their aptitude at tasks to which they had never before set their hands; their utter self-sacrifice alike in what they did and in what they gave? Their contribution to the great result is beyond appraisal. They have added a new lustre to the annals of American womanhood.

The least tribute we can pay them is to make them the equals of men in political rights as they have proved themselves their equals in every field of practical work they have entered, whether for themselves or for their country. These great days of completed achievement would be sadly marred were we to omit that act of justice. Besides the immense practical services they have rendered, the women of the country have been the moving spirits in the systematic economies by which our people have voluntarily assisted to supply the suffering peoples of the world and the armies upon every front with food and everything else that we had that might serve the common cause. The details of such a story can never be fully written, but we carry them at our hearts and thank God that we can say that we are the kinsmen of such.

And now we are sure of the great triumph for which every sacrifice was made. It has come, come in its completeness, and with the pride and inspiration of these days of achievement quick within us we turn to the tasks of peace again,—a peace secure against the violence of irresponsible monarchs and ambitious military coteries and made ready for a new order, for new foundations of justice and fair dealing.

We are about to give order and organization to this peace not only for ourselves but for the other peoples of the world as well, so far as they will suffer us to serve them. It is international justice that we seek, not domestic safety merely. Our thoughts have dwelt of late upon Europe, upon Asia, upon the near and the far East, very little upon the acts of peace and accommodation that wait to be performed at our own doors. While we are adjusting our relations with the rest of the world is it not of capital importance that we should clear away all grounds of misunderstanding with our immediate neighbors and give proof of the friendship we really feel? I hope that the members of the Senate will permit me to speak once more of the unratified treaty of friendship and adjustment with the Republic of Colombia. I very earnestly urge upon them an early and favorable action upon that vital matter. I believe that they will feel, with me, that the stage of affairs is now set for such action as will be not only just but generous and in the spirit of the new age upon which we have so happily entered.

So far as our domestic affairs are concerned the problem of our return to peace is a problem of economic and industrial readjustment. That problem is less serious for us than it may turn out to be for the nations which have suffered the disarrangements and the losses of war longer than we. Our people, moreover, do not wait to be coached and led. They know their own business, are quick and resourceful at every readjustment, definite in purpose, and self-reliant in action. Any leading strings we might seek to put them in would speedily become hopelessly tangled because they would pay no attention to them and go their own way. All that we can do as their legislative and executive servants is to mediate the process of change here, there, and elsewhere as we may. I have heard much counsel as to the plans that should be formed and personally conducted to a happy consummation, but from no quarter have I seen any general scheme of "reconstruction" emerge which I thought it likely we could force our spirited business men and self-reliant labourers to accept with due pliancy and obedience.

While the war lasted we set up many agencies by which to direct the industries of the country in the services it was necessary for them to render, by which to make sure of an abundant supply of the materials needed, by which to check undertakings that could for the time be dispensed with and stimulate those that were most serviceable in war by which to gain for the purchasing departments of the Government a certain control over the prices of essential articles and materials, by which to restrain trade with alien enemies, make the most of the available shipping, and systematize financial transactions, both public and private, so that there would be no unnecessary conflict or confusion—by which, in short, to put every material energy of the country in harness to draw the common load and make of us one team in the accomplishment of a great task. But the moment we knew the armistice to have been signed we took the harness off. Raw materials upon which the Government had kept its hand for fear there should not be enough for the industries that supplied the armies have been released and put into the general market again. Great industrial plants whose whole output and machinery had been taken over for the uses of the Government have been set free to return to the uses to which they were put before the war. It has not been possible to remove so readily or so quickly the control of foodstuffs and of shipping, because the world has still to be fed from our granaries and the ships are still needed to send supplies to our men oversea and to bring the men back as fast as the disturbed conditions on the other side of the water permit; but even there restraints are being relaxed as much as possible and more and more as the weeks go by.

Never before have there been agencies in existence in this country which knew so much of the field of supply, of labour, and of industry as the War Industries Board, the War Trade Board, the Labour Department, the Food Administration, and the Fuel Administration have known since their labours became thoroughly systematized; and they have not been isolated agencies; they have been directed by men which represented the permanent Departments of the Government and so have been the centres of unified and cooperative action. It has been the policy of the Executive, therefore, since the armistice was assured (which is in effect a complete submission of the enemy) to put the knowledge of these bodies at the disposal of the business men of the country and to offer their intelligent mediation at every point and in every matter where it was desired. It is surprising how fast the process of return to a peace footing has moved in the three weeks since the fighting stopped. It promises to outrun any inquiry that may be instituted and any aid that may be offered. It will not be easy to direct it any better than it will direct itself. The American business man is of quick initiative.

The ordinary and normal processes of private initiative will not, however, provide immediate employment for all of the men of our returning armies. Those who are of trained capacity, those who are skilled workmen, those who have acquired familiarity with established businesses, those who are ready and willing to go to the farms, all those whose aptitudes are known or will be sought out by employers will find no difficulty, it is safe to say, in finding place and employment. But there will be others who will be at a loss where to gain a livelihood unless pains are taken to guide them and put them in the way of work. There will be a large floating residuum of labour which should not be left wholly to shift for itself. It seems to me important, therefore, that the development of public works of every sort should be promptly resumed, in order that opportunities should be created for unskilled labour in particular, and that plans should be made for such developments of our unused lands and our natural resources as we have hitherto lacked stimulation to undertake.

I particularly direct your attention to the very practical plans which the Secretary of the Interior has developed in his annual report and before your Committees for the reclamation of arid, swamp, and cut-over lands which might, if the States were willing and able to cooperate, redeem some three hundred million acres of land for cultivation. There are said to be fifteen or twenty million acres of land in the West, at present arid, for whose reclamation water is available, if properly conserved. There are about two hundred and thirty million acres from which the forests have been cut but which have never yet been cleared for the plow and which lie waste and desolate. These lie scattered all over the Union. And there are nearly eighty million acres of land that lie under swamps or subject to periodical overflow or too wet for anything but grazing which it is perfectly feasible to drain and protect and redeem. The Congress can at once direct thousands of the returning soldiers to the reclamation of the arid lands which it has already undertaken, if it will but enlarge the plans and the appropriations which it has entrusted to the Department of the Interior. It is possible in dealing with our unused land to effect a great rural and agricultural development which will afford the best sort of opportunity to men who want to help themselves; and the Secretary of the Interior has thought the possible methods out in a way which is worthy of your most friendly attention.

I have spoken of the control which must yet for a while, perhaps for a long while, be exercised over shipping because of the priority of service to which our forces overseas are entitled and which should also be accorded the shipments which are to save recently liberated peoples from starvation and many devasted regions from permanent ruin. May I not say a special word about the needs of Belgium and northern France? No sums of money paid by way of indemnity will serve of themselves to save them from hopeless disadvantage for years to come. Something more must be done than merely find the money. If they had money and raw materials in abundance to-morrow they could not resume their place in the industry of the world to-morrow,—the very important place they held before the flame of war swept across them. Many of their factories are razed to the ground. Much of their machinery is destroyed or has been taken away. Their people are scattered and many of their best workmen are dead. Their markets will be taken by others, if they are not in some special way assisted to rebuild their factories and replace their lost instruments of manufacture. They should not be left to the vicissitudes of the sharp competition for materials and for industrial facilities which is now to set in. I hope, therefore, that the Congress will not be unwilling, if it should become necessary, to grant to some such agency as the War Trade Board the right to establish priorities of export and supply for the benefit of these people whom we have been so happy to assist in saving from the German terror and whom we must not now thoughtlessly leave to shift for themselves in a pitiless competitive market.

For the steadying and facilitation of our own domestic business readjustments nothing is more important than the immediate determination of the taxes that are to be levied for 1918, 1919, and 1920. As much of the burden of taxation must be lifted from business as sound methods of financing the Government will permit, and those who conduct the great essential industries of the country must be told as exactly as possible what obligations to the Government they will be expected to meet in the years immediately ahead of them. It will be of serious consequence to the country to delay removing all uncertainties in this matter a single day longer than the right processes of debate justify. It is idle to talk of successful and confident business reconstruction before those uncertainties are resolved.

If the war had continued it would have been necessary to raise at least eight billion dollars by taxation payable in the year 1919; but the war has ended and I agree with the Secretary of the Treasury that it will be safe to reduce the amount to six billions. An immediate rapid decline in the expenses of the Government is not to be looked for. Contracts made for war supplies will, indeed, be rapidly cancelled and liquidated, but their immediate liquidation will make heavy drains on the Treasury for the months just ahead of us. The maintenance of our forces on the other side of the sea is still necessary. A considerable proportion of those forces must remain in Europe during the period of occupation, and those which are brought home will be transported and demobilized at heavy expense for months to come. The interest on our war debt must of course be paid and provision made for the retirement of the obligations of the Government which represent it. But these demands will of course fall much below what a continuation of military operations would have entailed and six billions should suffice to supply a sound foundation for the financial operations of the year.

I entirely concur with the Secretary of the Treasury in recommending that the two billions needed in addition to the four billions provided by existing law be obtained from the profits which have accrued and shall accrue from war contracts and distinctively war business, but that these taxes be confined to the war profits accuring in 1918, or in 1919 from business originating in war contracts. I urge your acceptance of his recommendation that provision be made now, not subsequently, that the taxes to be paid in 1920 should be reduced from six to four billions. Any arrangements less definite than these would add elements of doubt and confusion to the critical period of industrial readjustment through which the country must now immediately pass, and which no true friend of the nation's essential business interests can afford to be responsible for creating or prolonging. Clearly determined conditions, clearly and simply charted, are indispensable to the economic revival and rapid industrial development which may confidently be expected if we act now and sweep all interrogation points away.

I take it for granted that the Congress will carry out the naval programme which was undertaken before we entered the war. The Secretary of the Navy has submitted to your Committees for authorization that part of the programme which covers the building plans of the next three years. These plans have been prepared along the lines and in accordance with the policy which the Congress established, not under the exceptional conditions of the war, but with the intention of adhering to a definite method of development for the navy. I earnestly recommend the uninterrupted pursuit of that policy. It would clearly be unwise for us to attempt to adjust our programmes to a future world policy as yet undetermined.

The question which causes me the greatest concern is the question of the policy to be adopted towards the railroads. I frankly turn to you for counsel upon it. I have no confident judgment of my own. I do not see how any thoughtful man can have who knows anything of the complexity of the problem. It is a problem which must be studied, studied immediately, and studied without bias or prejudice. Nothing can be gained by becoming partisans of any particular plan of settlement.

It was necessary that the administration of the railways should be taken over by the Government so long as the war lasted. It would have been impossible otherwise to establish and carry through under a single direction the necessary priorities of shipment. It would have been impossible otherwise to combine maximum production at the factories and mines and farms with the maximum possible car supply to take the products to the ports and markets; impossible to route troop shipments and freight shipments without regard to the advantage or disadvantage of the roads employed; impossible to subordinate, when necessary, all questions of convenience to the public necessity; impossible to give the necessary financial support to the roads from the public treasury. But all these necessities have now been served, and the question is, What is best for the railroads and for the public in the future?

Exceptional circumstances and exceptional methods of administration were not needed to convince us that the railroads were not equal to the immense tasks of transportation imposed upon them by the rapid and continuous development of the industries of the country. We knew that already. And we knew that they were unequal to it partly because their full cooperation was rendered impossible by law and their competition made obligatory, so that it has been impossible to assign to them severally the traffic which could best be carried by their respective lines in the interest of expedition and national economy.

We may hope, I believe, for the formal conclusion of the war by treaty by the time Spring has come. The twenty-one months to which the present control of the railways is limited after formal proclamation of peace shall have been made will run at the farthest, I take it for granted, only to the January of 1921. The full equipment of the railways which the federal administration had planned could not be completed within any such period. The present law does not permit the use of the revenues of the several roads for the execution of such plans except by formal contract with their directors, some of whom will consent while some will not, and therefore does not afford sufficient authority to undertake improvements upon the scale upon which it would be necessary to undertake them. Every approach to this difficult subject-matter of decision brings us face to face, therefore, with this unanswered question: What is it right that we should do with the railroads, in the interest of the public and in fairness to their owners?

Let me say at once that I have no answer ready. The only thing that is perfectly clear to me is that it is not fair either to the public or to the owners of the railroads to leave the question unanswered and that it will presently become my duty to relinquish control of the roads, even before the expiration of the statutory period, unless there should appear some clear prospect in the meantime of a legislative solution. Their release would at least produce one element of a solution, namely certainty and a quick stimulation of private initiative.

I believe that it will be serviceable for me to set forth as explicitly as possible the alternative courses that lie open to our choice. We can simply release the roads and go back to the old conditions of private management, unrestricted competition, and multiform regulation by both state and federal authorities; or we can go to the opposite extreme and establish complete government control, accompanied, if necessary, by actual government ownership; or we can adopt an intermediate course of modified private control, under a more unified and affirmative public regulation and under such alterations of the law as will permit wasteful competition to be avoided and a considerable degree of unification of administration to be effected, as, for example, by regional corporations under which the railways of definable areas would be in effect combined in single systems.

The one conclusion that I am ready to state with confidence is that it would be a disservice alike to the country and to the owners of the railroads to return to the old conditions unmodified. Those are conditions of restraint without development. There is nothing affirmative or helpful about them. What the country chiefly needs is that all its means of transportation should be developed, its railways, its waterways, its highways, and its countryside roads. Some new element of policy, therefore, is absolutely necessary,—necessary for the service of the public, necessary for the release of credit to those who are administering the railways, necessary for the protection of their security holders. The old policy may be changed much or little, but surely it cannot wisely be left as it was. I hope that the Congress will have a complete and impartial study of the whole problem instituted at once and prosecuted as rapidly as possible. I stand ready and anxious to release the roads from the present control and I must do so at a very early date if by waiting until the statutory limit of time is reached I shall be merely prolonging the period of doubt and uncertainty which is hurtful to every interest concerned.

I welcome this occasion to announce to the Congress my purpose to join in Paris the representatives of the governments with which we have been associated in the war against the Central Empires for the purpose of discussing with them the main features of the treaty of peace. I realize the great inconveniences that will attend my leaving the country, particularly at this time, but the conclusion that it was my paramount duty to go has been forced upon me by considerations which I hope will seem as conclusive to you as they have seemed to me.

The allied governments have accepted the bases of peace which I outlined to the Congress on the eighth of January last, as the Central Empires also have, and very reasonably desire my personal counsel in their interpretation and application, and it is highly desirable that I should give it in order that the sincere desire of our Government to contribute without selfish purpose of any kind to settlements that will be of common benefit to all the nations concerned may be made fully manifest. The peace settlements which are now to be agreed upon are of transcendent importance both to us and to the rest of the world, and I know of no business or interest which should take precedence of them. The gallant men of our armed forces on land and sea have consciously fought for the ideals which they knew to be the ideals of their country; I have sought to express those ideals; they have accepted my statements of them as the substance of their own thought and purpose, as the associated governments have accepted them; I owe it to them to see to it, so far as in me lies, that no false or mistaken interpretation is put upon them, and no possible effort omitted to realize them. It is now my duty to play my full part in making good what they offered their life's blood to obtain. I can think of no call to service which could transcend this.

I shall be in close touch with you and with affairs on this side the water, and you will know all that I do. At my request, the French and English governments have absolutely removed the censorship of cable news which until within a fortnight they had maintained and there is now no censorship whatever exercised at this end except upon attempted trade communications with enemy countries. It has been necessary to keep an open wire constantly available between Paris and the Department of State and another between France and the Department of War. In order that this might be done with the least possible interference with the other uses of the cables, I have temporarily taken over the control of both cables in order that they may be used as a single system. I did so at the advice of the most experienced cable officials, and I hope that the results will justify my hope that the news of the next few months may pass with the utmost freedom and with the least possible delay from each side of the sea to the other.

May I not hope, Gentlemen of the Congress, that in the delicate tasks I shall have to perform on the other side of the sea, in my efforts truly and faithfully to interpret the principles and purposes of the country we love, I may have the encouragement and the added strength of your united support? I realize the magnitude and difficulty of the duty I am undertaking; I am poignantly aware of its grave responsibilities. I am the servant of the nation. I can have no private thought or purpose of my own in performing such an errand. I go to give the best that is in me to the common settlements which I must now assist in arriving at in conference with the other working heads of the associated governments. I shall count upon your friendly countenance and encouragement. I shall not be inaccessible. The cables and the wireless will render me available for any counsel or service you may desire of me, and I shall be happy in the thought that I am constantly in touch with the weighty matters of domestic policy with which we shall have to deal. I shall make my absence as brief as possible and shall hope to return with the happy assurance that it has been possible to translate into action the great ideals for which America has striven.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 1 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m., and the Vice President resumed the chair.

SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections I present the report which I send to the desk. It is accompanied by a resolution (S. Res. 360) that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject matter. I desire to have the report and resolution read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the report (No. 614), as follows:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the resolutions of the Minnesota Commission of Public Safety petitioning the Senate of the United States to institute proceedings looking to the expulsion of ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE from the Senate as a teacher of disloyalty and sedition, giving aid and comfort to our enemies, and hindering the conduct of the war, respectfully report that they have fully considered said resolutions and the charges contained therein, as well as the speech made by Senator LA FOLLETTE at St. Paul, Minn., on the 20th of September, 1917, to which speech said resolutions referred, and upon which speech is based the petition contained therein, having considered the entire case as presented the committee recommend that the petition preferred by said Minnesota commission of public safety be dismissed for the reason that the speech in question does not justify any action by the Senate.

Your committee also recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the resolutions of the Minnesota commission of public safety petitioning the Senate of the United States to institute proceedings looking to the expulsion of ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE from the Senate be, and the same hereby are, dismissed for the reason that the speech in question does not justify any action by the Senate."

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I ask that under the rule the matter may go over for the present. I may say that, while of course I have been advised as to the substance of the report, I have not seen it nor heard it read until this moment. I expect to prepare and to present within the next few days, at as early a moment as my duties in the Senate will permit, a minority report; and I think the matter should not be disposed of until that report has been made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will lie over under the rule and be printed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 2, 1918.

This being the day designated by the Constitution for the annual meeting of Congress, the Members of the House of Representatives assembled in their Hall for the third session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and, at 12 o'clock noon, were called to order by the Speaker, who on taking the chair was greeted with general applause.

PRAYER.

Rev. Earle Wilfley, pastor of the Vermont Avenue Christian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and most merciful God, who dost inhabit eternity, and in whose hands are the destinies of nations, for this moment we stand before Thy throne to supplicate Thy pardon for all our wrongdoings and to ask Thy blessing and guidance for the days to come.

If, as a Nation, we have sinned or come short of Thy will, we pray that the record may be made clean this morning by Thy divine forgiveness, and that we may stand with a clear record before Thee.

O Lord, the world is bathed in tears, and precious lives have been snuffed out. Wrecks are on every hand, and we pray, O God, that Thy love may manifest itself to us in divine and fullest measure. We pray Thy blessing upon our beloved country and all its righteous interests, upon the Congress assembled, upon all in authority, for the Army and Navy, and every part of the Government service. Give us open eyes to see, ears to hear aright, and the fullest understanding of duty and privilege.

Especially we pray, O God, that upon the President of the United States may rest the fullest, largest measure of Thy holy spirit. In this momentous hour may he speak not only the words of truth and soberness, but speak with wisdom, justice, and courage; and as we hear, may it be with hearts ready to discern the truth and wills highly purposed to do the right. In this supreme hour, O our God, we crave Thy guidance, Thy blessing, Thy forgiveness, and Thy love, for Thy name's sake. Amen.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

That in compliance with the foregoing resolution the Vice President had appointed as said Committee Mr. MARTIN of Virginia and Mr. LODGE.

Also:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

NOTIFICATION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask immediate consideration for the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks immediate consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

House resolution 453.

Resolved, That a committee of three Members be appointed on the part of the House to join the committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may have to make.

The resolution was agreed to, and the Speaker appointed as the committee on the part of the House Messrs. KITCHIN, SHERLEY, and MANN.

NOTIFICATION OF THE SENATE.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

House resolution 454.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The resolution was agreed to.

JOINT SESSION OF SENATE AND HOUSE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask immediate consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 62.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Monday, the 2d day of December, 1918, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is such an unusual procedure for the House to invite a joint meeting of the House and Senate to receive a message from the President in person, before the President has been officially informed by the committees appointed by the two Houses that Congress has assembled and has a quorum and is ready to do business, that it seems to me that in order to prevent it being taken as a precedent hereafter the gentleman from North Carolina ought to explain the reason for this very hasty action. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I think everybody understands this hasty action and why it is necessary.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 10 minutes of 1 o'clock p. m.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 10 minutes of 1. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 12 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, the committee to wait upon the President and advise him that a quorum of the House is present and is ready to receive any communication he might make have, in conjunction with a like committee on the part of the Senate, performed that duty, and the President wishes us to inform the House that he will be pleased to address a joint session of the two Houses at 1 o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the Senate and the House, I introduce to you the President of the United States. [Applause.]

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT.

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONGRESS: The year that has elapsed since I last stood before you to fulfil my constitutional duty to give to the Congress from time to time information on the state of the Union has been so crowded with great events, great processes, and great results that I cannot hope to give you an adequate picture of its transactions or of the far-reaching changes which have been wrought in the life of our nation and of the world. You have yourselves witnessed these things, as I have. It is too soon to assess them; and we who stand in the midst of them and are part of them are less qualified than men of another generation will be to say what they mean, or even what they have been. But some great outstanding facts are unmistakable and constitute, in a sense, part of the public business with which it is our duty to deal. To state them is to set the stage for the legislative and executive action which must grow out of them and which we have yet to shape and determine.

A year ago we had sent 145,918 men overseas. Since then we have sent 1,950,513, an average of 162,542 each month, the number in fact rising, in May last to 245,951, in June to 278,760, in July to 307,182, and continuing to reach similar figures in August and September,—in August 289,570 and in September 257,438. No such movement of troops ever took place before, across three thousand miles of sea, followed by adequate equipment and supplies, and carried safely through extraordinary dangers of attack,—dangers which were alike strange and infinitely difficult to guard against. In all this movement only seven hundred and fifty-eight men were lost by enemy attack,—six hundred and thirty of whom were upon a single English transport which was sunk near the Orkney Islands.

I need not tell you what lay back of this great movement of men and material. It is not invidious to say that back of it lay a supporting organization of the industries of the country and of all its productive activities more complete, more thorough in method and effective in result, more spirited and unanimous in purpose and effort than any other great belligerent had been able to effect. We profited greatly by the experience of the nations which had already been engaged for nearly three years in the exigent and exacting business, their every resource and every executive proficiency taxed to the utmost. We were their pupils. But we learned quickly and acted with a promptness and a readiness of cooperation that justify our great pride that we were able to serve the world with unparalleled energy and quick accomplishment. [Applause.]

But it is not the physical scale and executive efficiency of preparation, supply, equipment and despatch that I would dwell upon, but the mettle and quality of the officers and men we sent over and of the sailors who kept the seas, and the spirit of the nation that stood behind them. [Applause.] No soldiers or sailors ever proved themselves more quickly ready for the test of battle or acquitted themselves with more splendid courage and achievement when put to the test. [Applause.] Those of us who played some part in directing the great processes by which the war was pushed irresistably forward to the final triumph may now forget all that and delight our thoughts with the story of what our men did. Their officers understood the grim and exacting task they had undertaken and performed it with an audacity, efficiency, and unhesitating courage that touch the story of convoy and battle with imperishable distinction at every turn, whether the enterprise were great or small,—from their great chiefs, Pershing and Sims, down to the youngest lieutenant [applause]; and their men were worthy of them,—such men as hardly need to be commanded, and go to their terrible adventure blithely and with the quick intelligence of those who know just what it is they would accomplish. I am proud to be the fellow-countryman of men of such stuff and valour. [Applause.] Those of us who stayed at home did our duty; the war could not have been won or the gallant men who fought it given their opportunity to win it otherwise; but for many a long day we shall think ourselves "accurs'd we were not there, and hold our manhoods cheap while any speaks that fought" with these at St. Mihiel or Thierry. [Applause.] The memory of those days of triumphant battle will go with these fortunate men to their graves; and each will have his favourite memory. "Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot, but he'll remember with advantages what feats he did that day!"

What we all thank God for with deepest gratitude is that our men went in force into the line of battle just at the critical moment when the whole fate of the world seemed to hang in the balance and threw their fresh strength into the ranks of freedom in time to turn the whole tide and sweep of the fateful struggle,—turn it once for all, so that thenceforth it was back, back, back for their enemies, always back, never again forward! [Applause.] After that it was only a scant four months before the commanders of the Central Empires knew themselves beaten; and now their very empires are in liquidation!

And throughout it all how fine the spirit of the nation was: what unity of purpose, what untiring zeal! What elevation of purpose ran through all its splendid display of strength, its untiring accomplishment. I have said that those of us who stayed at home to do the work of organization and supply will always wish that we had been with the men whom we sustained by our labour; but we can never be ashamed. It has been an inspiring thing to be here in the midst of fine men who had turned aside from every private interest of their own and devoted the whole of their trained capacity to the tasks that supplied the sinews of the whole great undertaking! The patriotism, the unselfishness, the thoroughgoing devotion and distinguished capacity that marked their toilsome labours, day after day, month after month, have made them fit mates and comrades of the men in the trenches and on the sea. And not the men here in Washington only. They have but directed the vast achievement. Throughout innumerable factories, upon innumerable farms, in the depths of coal mines and iron mines and copper mines, wherever the stuffs of industry were to be obtained and prepared, in the shipyards, on the railways, at the docks, on the sea, in every labour that was needed to sustain the battle lines, men have vied with each other to do their part and do it well. They can look any man-at-arms in the face, and say, We also strove to win and gave the best that was in us to make our fleets and armies sure of their triumph!

And what shall we say of the women,—of their instant intelligence, quickening every task that they touched; their capacity for organization and cooperation, which gave their action discipline and enhanced the effectiveness of everything they attempted; their aptitude at tasks to which they had never before set their hands; their utter self-sacrifice alike in what they did and in what they gave? Their contribution to the great result is beyond appraisal. They have added a new lustre to the annals of American womanhood. [Applause.]

The least tribute we can pay them is to make them the equals of men in political rights [applause] as they have proved themselves their equals in every field of practical work they have entered, whether for themselves or for their country. These great days of completed achievement would be sadly marred were we to omit that act of justice. [Applause.] Besides the immense practical services they have rendered, the women of the country have been the moving spirits in the systematic economies by which our people have voluntarily assisted to supply the suffering peoples of the world and the armies upon every front with food and everything else that we had that might serve the common cause. The details of such a story can never be fully written, but we carry them at our hearts and thank God that we can say that we are the kinsmen of such.

And now we are sure of the great triumph for which every sacrifice was made. It has come, come in its completeness, and with the pride and inspiration of these days of achievement quick within us we turn to the tasks of peace again,—a peace secure against the violence of irresponsible monarchs and ambitious military coteries and made ready for a new order, for new foundations of justice and fair dealing.

We are about to give order and organization to this peace not only for ourselves but for the other peoples of the world as well, so far as they will suffer us to serve them. It is international justice that we seek, not domestic safety merely. Our thoughts have dwelt of late upon Europe, upon Asia, upon the near and the far East, very little upon the acts of peace and accommodation that wait to be performed at our own doors. While we are adjusting our relations with the rest of the world is it not of capital importance that we should clear away all grounds of misunderstanding with our immediate neighbors and give proof of the friendship we really feel? I hope that the members of the Senate will permit me to speak once more of the unratified treaty of friendship and adjustment with the Republic of Colombia. I very earnestly urge upon them an early and favourable action upon that vital matter. I believe that they will feel, with me, that the stage of affairs is now set for such action as will be not only just but generous and in the spirit of the new age upon which we have so happily entered.

So far as our domestic affairs are concerned the problem of our return to peace is a problem of economic and industrial readjustment. That problem is less serious for us than it may turn out to be for the nations which have suffered the disarrangements and the losses of war longer than we. Our people, moreover, do not wait to be coached and led. They know their own business, are quick and resourceful at every readjustment, definite in purpose, and self-reliant in action. Any leading strings we might seek to put them in would speedily become hopelessly tangled because they would pay no attention to them and go their own way. All that we can do as their legislative and executive servants is to mediate the process of change here, there, and elsewhere as we may. I have heard much counsel as to the plans that should be formed and personally conducted to a happy consummation, but from no quarter have I seen any general scheme of "reconstruction" emerge which I thought it likely we could force our spirited business men and self-reliant labourers to accept with due pliancy and obedience.

While the war lasted we set up many agencies by which to direct the industries of the country in the services it was necessary for them to render, by which to make sure of an abundant supply of the materials needed, by which to check undertakings that could for the time be dispensed with and stimulate those that were most serviceable in war, by which to gain for the purchasing departments of the Government a certain control over the prices of essential articles and materials, by which to restrain trade with alien enemies, make the most of the available shipping, and systematize financial transactions, both public and private, so that there would be no unnecessary conflict or confusion,—by which, in short, to put every material energy of the country in harness to draw the common load and make of us one team in the accomplishment of a great task. But the moment we knew the armistice to have been signed we took the harness off. Raw materials upon which the Government had kept its hand for fear there should not be enough for the industries that supplied the armies have been released and put into the general market again. Great industrial plants whose whole output and machinery had been taken over for the uses of the Government have been set free to return to the uses to which they were put before the war. It has not been possible to remove so readily or so quickly the control of foodstuffs and of shipping, because the world has still to be fed from our granaries and the ships are still needed to send supplies to our men oversea and to bring the men back as fast as the disturbed conditions on the other side of the water permit; but even there restraints are being relaxed as much as possible and more and more as the weeks go by.

Never before have there been agencies in existence in this country which knew so much of the field of supply, of labour, and of industry as the War Industries Board, the War Trade Board, the Labour Department, the Food Administration, and the Fuel Administration have known since their labours became thoroughly systematized; and they have not been isolated agencies; they have been directed by men who represented the permanent Departments of the Government and so have been the centres of unified and cooperative action. It has been the policy of the Executive, therefore, since the armistice was assured (which is in effect a complete submission of the enemy) to put the knowledge of these bodies at the disposal of the business men of the country and to offer their intelligent mediation at every point and in every matter where it was desired. It is surprising how fast the process of return to a peace footing has moved in the three weeks since the fighting stopped. It promises to outrun any inquiry that may be instituted and any aid that may be offered. It will not be easy to direct it any better than it will direct itself. The American business man is of quick initiative.

The ordinary and normal processes of private initiative will not, however, provide immediate employment for all of the men of our returning armies. Those who are of trained capacity, those who are skilled workmen, those who have acquired familiarity with established businesses, those who are ready and willing to go to the farms, all those whose aptitudes are known or will be sought out by employers will find no difficulty, it is safe to say, in finding place and employment. But there will be others who will be at a loss where to gain a livelihood unless pains are taken to guide them and put them in the way of work. There will be a large floating residuum of labour which should not be left wholly to shift for itself. It seems to me important, therefore, that the development of public works of every sort should be promptly resumed, in order that opportunities should be created for unskilled labour in particular, and that plans should be made for such developments of our unused lands and our natural resources as we have hitherto lacked stimulation to undertake.

I particularly direct your attention to the very practical plans which the Secretary of the Interior has developed in his annual report and before your Committees for the reclamation of arid, swamp, and cut-over lands which might, if the States were willing and able to cooperate, redeem some three hundred million acres of land for cultivation. There are said to be fifteen or twenty million acres of land in the West, at present arid, for whose reclamation water is available, if properly conserved. There are about two hundred and thirty million acres from which the forests have been cut but which have never yet been cleared for the plow and which lie waste and desolate. These lie scattered all over the Union. And there are nearly eighty million acres of land that lie under swamps or subject to periodical overflow or too wet for anything but grazing which it is perfectly feasible to drain and protect and redeem. The Congress can at once direct thousands of the returning soldiers to the reclamation of the arid lands which it has already undertaken, if it will but enlarge the plans and the appropriations which it has entrusted to the Department of the Interior. It is possible in dealing with our unused land to effect a great rural and agricultural development which will afford the best sort of opportunity to men who want to help themselves; and the Secretary of the Interior has thought the possible methods out in a way which is worthy of your most friendly attention.

I have spoken of the control which must yet for a while, perhaps for a long while, be exercised over shipping because of the priority of service to which our forces overseas are entitled and which should also be accorded the shipments which are to save recently liberated peoples from starvation and many devasted regions from permanent ruin. May I not say a special word about the needs of Belgium and northern France? No sums of money paid by way of indemnity will serve of themselves to save them from hopeless disadvantage for years to come. Something more must be done than merely find the money. If they had money and raw materials in abundance to-morrow they could not resume their place in the industry of the world to-morrow,—the very important place they held before the flame of war swept across them. Many of their factories are razed to the ground. Much of their machinery is destroyed or has been taken away. Their people are scattered and many of their best workmen are dead. Their markets will be taken by others, if they are not in some special way assisted to rebuild their factories and replace their lost instruments of manufacture. They should not be left to the vicissitudes of the sharp competition for materials and for industrial facilities which is now to set in. I hope, therefore, that the Congress will not be unwilling, if it should become necessary, to grant to some such agency as the War Trade Board the right to establish priorities of export and supply for the benefit of these people whom we have been so happy to assist in saving from the German terror and whom we must not now thoughtlessly leave to shift for themselves in a pitiless competitive market.

For the steadying and facilitation of our own domestic business readjustments nothing is more important than the immediate determination of the taxes that are to be levied for 1918, 1919, and 1920. As much of the burden of taxation must be lifted from business as sound methods of financing the Government will permit, and those who conduct the great essential industries of the country must be told as exactly as possible what obligations to the Government they will be expected to meet in the years immediately ahead of them. It will be of serious consequence to the country to delay removing all uncertainties in this matter a single day longer than the right processes of debate justify. It is idle to talk of successful and confident business reconstruction before those uncertainties are resolved.

If the war had continued it would have been necessary to raise at least eight billion dollars by taxation payable in the year 1919; but the war has ended and I agree with the Secretary of the Treasury that it will be safe to reduce the amount to six billions. An immediate rapid decline in the expenses of the Government is not to be looked for. Contracts made for war supplies will, indeed, be rapidly cancelled and liquidated, but their immediate liquidation will make heavy drains on the Treasury for the months just ahead of us. The maintenance of our forces on the other side of the sea is still necessary. A considerable proportion of those forces must remain in Europe during the period of occupation, and those which are brought home will be transported and demobilized at heavy expense for months to come. The interest on our war debt must of course be paid and provision made for the retirement of the obligations of the Government which represent it. But these demands will of course fall much below what a continuation of military operations would have entailed and six billions should suffice to supply a sound foundation for the financial operations of the year.

I entirely concur with the Secretary of the Treasury in recommending that the two billions needed in addition to the four billions provided by existing law be obtained from the profits which have accrued and shall accrue from war contracts and distinctively war business, but that these taxes be confined to the war profits accruing in 1918, or in 1919 from business originating in war contracts. I urge your acceptance of his recommendation that provision be made now, not subsequently, that the taxes to be paid in 1920 should be reduced from six to four billions. Any arrangements less definite than these would add elements of doubt and confusion to the critical period of industrial readjustment through which the country must now immediately pass, and which no true friend of the nation's essential business interests can afford to be responsible for creating or prolonging. Clearly determined conditions, clearly and simply charted, are indispensable to the economic revival and rapid industrial development which may confidently be expected if we act now and sweep all interrogation points away.

I take it for granted that the Congress will carry out the naval programme which was undertaken before we entered the war. The Secretary of the Navy has submitted to your Committees for authorization that part of the programme which covers the building plans of the next three years. These plans have been prepared along the lines and in accordance with the policy which the Congress established, not under the exceptional conditions of the war, but with the intention of adhering to a definite method of development for the navy. I earnestly recommend the uninterrupted pursuit of that policy. It would clearly be unwise for us to attempt to adjust our programmes to a future world policy as yet undetermined.

The question which causes me the greatest concern is the question of the policy to be adopted towards the railroads. I frankly turn to you for counsel upon it. I have no confident judgment of my own. I do not see how any thoughtful man can have who knows anything of the complexity of the problem. It is a problem which must be studied, studied immediately, and studied without bias or prejudice. Nothing can be gained by becoming partisans of any particular plan of settlement.

It was necessary that the administration of the railways should be taken over by the Government so long as the war lasted. It would have been impossible otherwise to establish and carry through under a single direction the necessary priorities of shipment. It would have been impossible otherwise to combine maximum production at the factories and mines and farms with the maximum possible car supply to take the products to the ports and markets; impossible to route troop shipments and freight shipments without regard to the advantage or disadvantage of the roads employed; impossible to subordinate, when necessary, all questions of convenience to the public necessity; impossible to give the necessary financial support to the roads from the public treasury. But all these necessities have now been served, and the question is, What is best for the railroads and for the public in the future?

Exceptional circumstances and exceptional methods of administration were not needed to convince us that the railroads were not equal to the immense tasks of transportation imposed upon them by the rapid and continuous development of the industries of the country. We knew that already. And we knew that they were unequal to it partly because their full cooperation was rendered impossible by law and their competition made obligatory, so that it has been impossible to assign to them severally the traffic which could best be carried by their respective lines in the interest of expedition and national economy.

We may hope, I believe, for the formal conclusion of the war by treaty by the time Spring has come. The twenty-one months to which the present control of the railways is limited after formal proclamation of peace shall have been made will run at the farthest, I take it for granted, only to the January of 1921. The full equipment of the railways which the federal administration had planned could not be completed within any such period. The present law does not permit the use of the revenues of the several roads for the execution of such plans except by formal contract with their directors, some of whom will consent while some will not, and therefore does not afford sufficient authority to undertake improvements upon the scale upon which it would be necessary to undertake them. Every approach to this difficult subject-matter of decision brings us face to face, therefore, with this unanswered question: What is it right that we should do with the railroads, in the interest of the public and in fairness to their owners?

Let me say at once that I have no answer ready. The only thing that is perfectly clear to me is that it is not fair either to the public or to the owners of the railroads to leave the question unanswered and that it will presently become my duty to relinquish control of the roads, even before the expiration of the statutory period, unless there should appear some clear prospect in the meantime of a legislative solution. Their release would at least produce one element of a solution, namely certainty and a quick stimulation of private initiative.

I believe that it will be serviceable for me to set forth as explicitly as possible the alternative courses that lie open to our choice. We can simply release the roads and go back to the old conditions of private management, unrestricted competition, and multiform regulation by both state and federal authorities; or we can go to the opposite extreme and establish complete government control, accompanied, if necessary, by actual government ownership; or we can adopt an intermediate course of modified private control, under a more unified and affirmative public regulation and under such alterations of the law as will permit wasteful competition to be avoided and a considerable degree of unification of administration to be effected, as, for example, by regional corporations under which the railways of definable areas would be in effect combined in single systems.

The one conclusion that I am ready to state with confidence is that it would be a disservice alike to the country and to the owners of the railroads to return to the old conditions unmodified. Those are conditions of restraint without development. There is nothing affirmative or helpful about them. What the country chiefly needs is that all its means of transportation should be developed, its railways, its waterways, its highways, and its countryside roads. Some new element of policy, therefore, is absolutely necessary,—necessary for the service of the public, necessary for the release of credit to those who are administering the railways, necessary for the protection of their security holders. The old policy may be changed much or little, but surely it cannot wisely be left as it was. I hope that the Congress will have a complete and impartial study of the whole problem instituted at once and prosecuted as rapidly as possible. I stand ready and anxious to release the roads from the present control and I must do so at a very early date if by waiting until the statutory limit of time is reached I shall be merely prolonging the period of doubt and uncertainty which is hurtful to every interest concerned.

I welcome this occasion to announce to the Congress my purpose to join in Paris the representatives of the governments with which we have been associated in the war against the Central Empires for the purpose of discussing with them the main features of the treaty of peace. [Applause.] I realize the great inconveniences that will attend my leaving the country, particularly at this time, but the conclusion that it was my paramount duty to go has been forced upon me by considerations which I hope will seem as conclusive to you as they have seemed to me.

The allied governments have accepted the bases of peace which I outlined to the Congress on the eighth of January last, as the Central Empires also have, and very reasonably desire my personal counsel in their interpretation and application, and it is highly desirable that I should give it in order that the sincere desire of our Government to contribute without selfish purpose of any kind to settlements that will be of common benefit to all the nations concerned may be made fully manifest. The peace settlements which are now to be agreed upon are of transcendent importance both to us and to the rest of the world, and I know of no business or interest which should take precedence of them. The gallant men of our armed forces on land and sea have consciously fought for the ideals which they knew to be the ideals of their country; I have sought to express those ideals; they have accepted my statements of them as the substance of their own thought and purpose, as the associated governments have accepted them; I owe it to them to see to it, so far as in me lies, that no false or mistaken interpretation is put upon them, and no possible effort omitted to realize them. It is now my duty to play my full part in making good what they offered their life's blood to obtain. [Applause.] I can think of no call to service which could transcend this.

I shall be in close touch with you and with affairs on this side the water, and you will know all that I do. At my request, the French and English governments have absolutely removed the censorship of cable news which until within a fortnight they had maintained and there is now no censorship whatever exercised at this end except upon attempted trade communications with enemy countries. It has been necessary to keep an open wire constantly available between Paris and the Department of State and another between France and the Department of War. In order that this might be done with the least possible interference with the other uses of the cables, I have temporarily taken over the control of both cables in order that they may be used as a single system. I did so at the advice of the most experienced cable officials, and I hope that the results will justify my hope that the news of the next few months may pass with the utmost freedom and with the least possible delay from each side of the sea to the other. [Applause.]

May I not hope, Gentlemen of the Congress, that in the delicate tasks I shall have to perform on the other side of the sea, in my efforts truly and faithfully to interpret the principles and purposes of the country we love, I may have the encouragement and the added strength of your united support? [Applause.] I realize the magnitude and difficulty of the duty I am undertaking; I am poignantly aware of its grave responsibilities. I am the servant of the nation. I can have no private thought or purpose of my own in performing such an errand. I go to give the best that is in me to the common settlements which I must now assist in arriving at in conference with the other working heads of the associated governments. I shall count upon your friendly countenance and encouragement. I shall not be inaccessible. The cables and the wireless will render me available for any counsel or service you may desire of me, and I shall be happy in the thought that I am constantly in touch with the weighty matters of domestic policy with which we shall have to deal. I shall make my absence as brief as possible and shall hope to return with the happy assurance that it has been possible to translate into action the great ideals for which America has striven. [Applause.]

At 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m. the President retired from the Hall of the House.

Thereupon the Vice President and the Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Arkansas yield for a question?

Mr. WINGO. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. What is the necessity of taking this bill up to-day? It is not yet on the calendar.

Mr. WINGO. It comes to-day with a unanimous report from the committee, and is not yet on the calendar.

Mr. MANN. What is the necessity for passing it to-day?

Mr. WINGO. The necessity for prompt action arises out of these facts: Authority for the construction of this bridge was granted by a legislative act creating an improvement district several years ago. Unless the time to construct this bridge across this stream is extended this public improvement will be practically defeated, because they must advertise for bids and let the contract before the 1st of January. They have no authority to let that contract until they have full authority to construct the bridge, which includes the permission of the Federal Government.

Mr. MANN. But this is the 2d day of December. There is quite a time yet until the 1st of January. We could pass this bill to-morrow. It is very unusual to take up matters by unanimous consent on the first day of the session. Why not pass the bill to-morrow or Wednesday?

Mr. WINGO. I appreciate that fact, and I sought to impress it upon the House on the last day of the last session of Congress. I was then assured that if I would not press it at that time over the gentleman's agreement that it should be passed the first day of this session. The necessity which the gentleman wants to get at is this: I want it passed to-day so that it can be passed by the Senate to-morrow and be presented to the President for his signature before he goes to Europe.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but the Constitution provides a method of having a bill enacted into law without the signature of the President. I take it the President would not leave the country with the gentleman's bill in a position where it could not become a law or where Congress could not act upon anything. If the gentleman's bill were passed to-morrow, and passed by the Senate within a short time, it would become a law before the 1st of January, after it is presented to the President and he does not sign it and the period of 10 days elapses. Why does not the gentleman wait and present the bill to the President?

Mr. WINGO. To be perfectly frank with the gentleman, under the peculiar conditions that exist legally with reference to this bridge district I want to take the surest and most expeditious route, and upon the assurance of the House that it would permit me to pass it on the first day I did not press it during the existence of the gentleman's agreement during the last session.

Mr. MANN. That excuse is not a good one. Not pressing a bill on the last day of a session does not amount to anything at all. Lots of men do not press bills then if they think they can not pass them. Gentlemen do not press the bill because they could not pass it. Now, here is the situation: I am not criticizing the President for going abroad. I am inclined to think if I were in his position I would feel inclined to do the same thing, but the gentleman is afraid to trust his bill becoming the law by the 1st of January to its presentation to the President for fear he can not find the President to whom to present it, and if his fear is right about a bridge bill what is his fear to be about important legislation? The President will not be in this country. He will not be accessible. The bill enrolled and duly passed by both Houses can not be presented to him personally. It has been the custom to take bills to the White House. That is the custom. A presentation to an official at the White House is a presentation to the President. But if the President is abroad and is not capable of receiving the message the question is whether somebody else is entitled to act in that capacity. The Constitution of the United States says that when the President is incapacitated or can not be reached in some way the Vice President is to perform the duties of his office. Now, are we going to be put in a position that for the next six weeks Congress can not by any method it wishes to pursue accomplish anything? We pass a bill or a resolution. The gentleman's course indicates that he thinks if it were sent to the White House that would not be a presentation to the President, so that it could not become a law by failure of the President to sign it. It can not become a law by the President signing it, because he can not get at it.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I should not want by my silence to leave the impression that I agree with the gentleman's interpretation——

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman's course agrees with it.

Mr. WINGO. Before I get to that I want to suggest the practical fact that confronts me. Even if the President were not abroad, there is something else to be done in the letting of this contract besides this. It has to be advertised, and the board has not authority to advertise for bids even before this should become a law. I think, to be perfectly frank with the gentleman, I am fearful rather we will not get through in time to comply with the peculiar requirements of the statute governing the erection of this bridge. Now, the gentleman has suggested that my course leads to the conclusion that I am afraid the bill can not be presented to the President. I will be frank with the gentleman, as he has asked my opinion, and state that my conclusion as a lawyer, humble as my opinion may be, is that the President when he receives a bill from Congress is acting as an official and not as a person and a presentation at the President's office is a presentation to the President of the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any authority?

Mr. WINGO. None but sound reasoning and common sense.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will remember that the President has officially informed us that he will not be at his office. That is official information.

Mr. WINGO. Yes; the President has done that. He has informed us officially, and the country has recognized even before the President informed us officially, that the situation was such as to make it his duty to go abroad, and certainly I should not want the President to stay at home on account of a bridge bill, even if I held the gentleman's view, and forego the discharge of his duty in the international crisis that exists.

Mr. MANN. I have not objected to the consideration of the gentleman's bill; that has been given.

Mr. WINGO. I appreciate——

Mr. MANN. I am not objecting to the President's going abroad, but I think sometime some wise gentlemen on the majority side of the House ought to be able to inform the Congress what course is to be pursued when these matters come before us. Is there any way by which we may make into law anything through Congress before the President returns?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WINGO. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman may recall it has been on many occasions the presidential custom to hand the pen with which he signed a bill for some favored project to the gentleman interested in it. How would the gentleman from Arkansas attempt to get the pen in this case?

Mr. WINGO. I am willing, if I get the law, to let some one else have the pen. We want the bridge and have for years, and the Capital Issues Committee held it up until the time expired, and now we have to pass this extension act in order that this much-needed bridge can be promptly constructed.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. As I understand it, the gentleman from Arkansas gives it as his legal opinion—and I am sure that he is a good lawyer—that the delivery of the bill at the White House is equivalent to the delivery of the bill to the President or presentation to the President. Now, following that view of the matter, the gentleman's bill, if it passes any time in the near future, could be delivered to the White House and in due course would become a law. So, from the gentleman's own view of the matter, there does not seem to be any urgency concerning it.

Mr. WINGO. It is not only necessary to pass it through this House and through another House, but then bids have to be advertised for, considered, and one accepted, and all that under the law requires time.

Mr. MONDELL. As I understand the gentleman from Arkansas, the absence of the President from the White House would have no effect upon his bill at all, except to insure its becoming a law at the end of 10 days.

Mr. WINGO. That is my humble opinion.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is it the gentleman's opinion that the presentation of a bill to an empty White House is equivalent to giving it to a Democratic President?

Mr. WINGO. No; I think not; nor to a Republican President.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. GILLETT. Suppose the President officially notified the House that he was to be at his summer residence in New Jersey, would you under those circumstances say that the presenting of a bill at the White House was all that was necessary?

Mr. WINGO. I think so. When he has been absent from the White House in the past, bills have been delivered there.

Mr. GILLETT. And if it laid there for 10 days it would become a law?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Does not the gentleman presume that if the President of the United States goes beyond the 3-mile limit and takes himself out of position to perform his duty in reference to his bridge bill, that the Vice President of the United States will consider it his duty to assume it at once?

Mr. WINGO. I am not going to indulge in presumptions as to how an executive will perform his duty. I concern myself only with the discharge of my duties, confident that the executive officers will discharge theirs.

Mr. SLOAN. I would like to ask the gentleman if he would not understand it to be a fact that when the President of the United States puts it out of his own power to perform the ordinary functions of President of the United States by leaving the country over which he is supposed to preside, the contingent officer, also elected by the people, would have the courage to do what he should and occupy the White House and perform the duties of the President of the United States?

Mr. WINGO. I never cross a bridge until I get to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. But the gentleman's bill is a bridge bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Is it any part of the gentleman's purpose in advocating this important legislation to make a test case of this question as to the President leaving the country when legislation is pending?

Mr. WINGO. Certainly not. I have no desire to test any question that might be involved. I am confident no question will be raised.

Mr. WALSH. That is why the gentleman is so free with his legal opinion?

Mr. WINGO. No; I was asked for my opinion. I did not volunteer it. It costs nothing. The gentleman is not bound to take it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WINGO, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 3, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to introduce a bill prepared by Mr. W. W. Cook, of the New York bar, and the author of a work upon corporations. It is a bill for the creation of Federal railroad companies and for their regional classification, somewhat along the lines presented by the suggestions of the President yesterday. It has been very carefully and thoughtfully prepared, and I ask to have it printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The bill (S. 5077) to provide for the creation of Federal railroad companies, to establish a more effective supervision of railroads in the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That wherever the words "Federal railroad company" are used in this act the words shall be construed to refer to each of the five corporations to be organized under this act as herein provided.

The words "Federal railroad board" used in this act shall be construed to mean the board of six members herein provided for.

The words "secretary of railroads" used in this act shall be construed to be the head, at the seat of government, of an executive department to be known as the department of railroads, said head to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. SEC. 5. That the capital stock of each Federal railroad company shall be divided into shares of $10 each. The outstanding capital stock may be increased from time to time as authorized by the board of directors. SEC. 6. That dividends on the stock of each Federal railroad company shall not exceed 6 per cent.

SEC. 7. That the United States Government hereby guarantees the payment of 3 per cent dividends on the shares of the stock of the several Federal railroad companies, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to sign the name of the United States of America to a guaranty to that effect on the face of the certificates of stock issued by the corporation (the guaranty on canceled certificates to be canceled when the certificates are canceled by transfer), the form of said guaranty to be as follows:

"The United States of America hereby guarantees to the record holder of this certificate of stock the payment by the Federal railroad company issuing the same 3 per cent annual dividends on the shares of the capital stock represented by this certificate payable semiannually on the 1st days of January and July of each year after the date of this guaranty.

"If at any time the United States of America by act of Congress ceases to pay said guaranty, the United States of America shall pay to the holders of said certificates of stock the price at which they were originally issued or the value at the time of issue of the property for which they were originally issued."

The said guaranteed rate of dividend may be varied by Congress from time to time, but not as to any issue already made.

SEC. 8. That the United States Government shall be entitled to all the profits of the several Federal railroad companies in excess of said 6 per cent dividends, and shall apply such excess profits to extensions

SEC. 9. That national banks and Federal reserve banks may invest and deal in the shares of stock of the said Federal railroad companies or any of them, and such shares may be transferred to and deposited with the Treasurer of the United States in lieu of United States bonds as prescribed by sections 5159 to 5189, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended, and by section 4, subdivision 8, of the Federal reserve act, and may be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States as security for deposits by said Treasurer of funds of the United States in national banks, and may be deposited as security for and in accordance with the act of Congress of May 30, 1908, amending the national banking laws. The board of trustees, established by act of Congress of June 25, 1910, to establish postal savings depositories, may invest postal-savings funds in such shares as securities of the United States within the meaning of that act. Said shares of the capital stock of said Federal railroad companies or any of them shall be receivable at part as a satisfactory collateral security for Federal reserve notes and as a reserve available as eligible paper under the Federal reserve act and as investments by Federal reserve banks.

SEC. 10. That the Federal railroad companies shall proceed with all reasonable dispatch to acquire sufficient of the outstanding capital stock of the Pennsylvania; New York Central; Illinois Central; Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul; Chicago & North Western; Union Pacific; Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, and Southern Pacific Railroad systems, to control those railroad companies; each Federal railroad company so to acquire the stock of any said railroad system or systems within its district. Such acquisition may be by purchase or by exchange of Federal railroad company's stock for the stock of said railroad system or systems, or by condemnation proceedings.

FEDERAL RAILROAD BOARD.

SEC. 11. That a Federal railroad board is hereby created, which shall consist of six members, one to be the secretary of railroads and the remaining five members to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The governor of the Federal railroad board, subject to its supervision, shall be the active executive officer. A majority of the members at a meeting duly called shall constitute a quorum, and a majority of those present at such meeting shall be sufficient for affirmative action. SEC. 12. That said Federal railroad board is hereby given the power to fix and determine all interstate railroad rates and service, and also such intrastate rates and service as Congress has the power to regulate under the Constitution of the United States. All financial operations of every Federal railroad company shall be approved by the Federal railroad board before becoming effective.

SEC. 14. That this act may be altered from time to time or repealed.

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I introduce a bill to provide for extending the rights of stock-raising homesteaders. I desire to call attention at this time to the bill, so that it may have the attention of Senators interested in the subject, and that it may also receive attention from the people at large.

Under the existing law no more than one section of land can be taken up as a homestead. It is well known that in many sections of the country this is not sufficient area to enable the homesteaders to make a living. I have thought for some time that some provision should be made to extend the rights of these homesteaders, and I am introducing this bill for the purpose of extending to such homesteaders the right during the period when they are complying with the homestead law to lease additional areas of land, and at the conclusion of the acts to be performed in order to acquire title to the homestead they may have an option to purchase the lands which may be leased in the meantime.

The area to be leased and also to be optioned to the homesteader I have left blank, so that the people throughout the western country and the members of the Public Lands Committee may give to that question their best consideration and judgment.

There are some other provisions in the bill which likewise need to be carefully considered. That the country may be invited to consider the provisions of the bill, I am going to ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

I may say that this is a time when we should provide homes for the returning soldiers, and that we should have those homes of such an extent that the soldiers can make a good living upon them and establish real and prosperous homes. I introduce the bill and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 5069) to extend the rights of stock-raising homesteaders was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 5069) to extend the rights of stock-raising homesteaders.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act any person who has made entry for public lands under the provisions of the act of Congress approved December 29, 1916, entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," and who is complying with the requirements of said act and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder shall have the right to file application with the Secretary of the Interior for the lease of not more than — acres of unappropriated contiguous public lands of the same or inferior character to which no lawful claim has attached. Such applications shall be filed with and received by the register and receiver of the land district in which said land is located, and suspended until it shall have been determined by the Secretary of the Interior whether the land is of the character subject to lease and appraised as to its rental value under regulations to be prescribed by him. That during such suspension the land described in the application for lease shall not be disposed of, and if found subject to lease to the applicant a lease shall be made for a period not exceeding five years, subject to the payment of annual rental as determined by the appraisement hereinbefore provided for; otherwise the application shall be rejected subject to appeal, but no right to occupy or use such lands shall be acquired by reason of such application to lease until after lease is made as hereinafter provided. Such lease when executed shall contain a provision that the same shall be terminated if and when the lessee shall, with respect to his entry under the said act of Congress approved December 29, 1916, fail to comply with the requirements of said act and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder.

SEC. 2. That any such lessee who shall have complied with the requirements of this act may, from and after the issuance of patent to him upon his homestead entry made under the act of December 29, 1916, have the right to purchase any or all of the lands so leased at their appraised value under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, the purchase money to be paid in 20 annual installments, deferred payments to draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, payable annually.

SEC. 3. That all leases and entries made and patents issued under the provisions of this act shall be subject to and contain a reservation to the United States of all the coal and other minerals in the lands so entered and patented, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same. The coal and other mineral deposits in such lands shall be subject to disposal by the United States in accordance with the provisions of the coal and mineral land laws in force at the time of such disposal. Any person qualified to locate and enter the coal or other mineral deposits, or having the right to mine and remove the same under the laws of the United States, shall have the right at all times to enter upon the lands entered or patented, as provided by this act, for the purpose of prospecting for coal or other mineral therein, provided he shall not injure, damage, or destroy the permanent improvements of the entryman or patentee, and shall be liable to and shall compensate the entryman or patentee for all damages to the crops on such lands by reason of such prospecting. Any person who has acquired from the United States the coal or other mineral deposits in any such land, or the right to mine and remove the same, may reenter and occupy so much of the surface thereof as may be required for all purposes reasonably incident to the mining or removal of the coal or other minerals, first, upon securing the written consent or waiver of the homestead entryman or patentee; second, upon payment of the damages to crops or other tangible improvements to the owner thereof where agreement may be had as to the amount thereof; or, third, in lieu of either of the foregoing provisions, upon the execution of a good and sufficient bond or undertaking to the United States for the use and benefit of the entryman or owner of the land to secure the payment of such damages to the crops or tangible improvements of the entryman or owner, as may be determined and fixed in an action brought upon the bond or undertaking in a court of competent jurisdiction against the principal and sureties thereon, such bond or undertaking to be in form and in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and to be filed with and approved by the register and receiver of the local land office of the district wherein the land is situate, subject to appeal to the Commissioner of the General Land Office: Provided, That all patents issued for the coal or other mineral deposits herein reserved shall contain appropriate notations declaring them to be subject to the provisions of this act with reference to the disposition, occupancy, and use of the land as permitted to an entryman under this act.

SEC. 4. That one-half of the proceeds from leases and sales of land under this act shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as are receipts from the sales of other public lands, and the balance shall be paid to the State or Territory wherein the lands sold are situate, to be used for the construction of public highways or of irrigation and drainage works.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make all necessary rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying this act into effect.

AMENDMENT OF ESPIONAGE LAW.

Mr. BORAH. I introduce a bill which I desire to have referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I will state that the bill is for the purpose of repealing those provisions of the espionage act which permit the Postmaster General to determine what matter shall go through the mails.

The bill (S. 5070) to repeal certain sections of the espionage act and the act amendatory thereof was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I send to the desk an order for filling committee vacancies, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That Senator REED be assigned to the chairmanship of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and that he, on his own request, be relieved from further service as chairman of the Committee on Manufactures, but not from membership thereon.

THE PRESIDENTIAL OFFICE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer a concurrent resolution which I desire to have lie on the table. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 26), as follows:

Whereas Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, is about to depart from the territorial limits thereof and go beyond the jurisdiction of its Constitution and laws and be and remain upon foreign territory, within the limits of another sovereignty, the Republic of France; and

Whereas among the powers and duties of the President as the Chief Executive Civil Magistrate of the Government are the following: To receive ambassadors and other public ministers of foreign powers; to appoint ambassadors and other public ministers, consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States not otherwise provided for; to protect every State against domestic violence on the application of its legislature or executive; to perform, if it shall be required, a guaranty of the United States of a republican form of government to each State, and to protect each of such States against invasion; to pardon and reprieve for offenses against the United States; and to take care that the laws be faithfully executed; and

Whereas Villa is still at large in Mexico pillaging and creating disorders threatening the safety of the border States of the Union, and the I. W. W., as they are commonly known as organizations for disorderly and seditious purposes, now actively engaged in threatening civil commotion with others, making the constant presence of the Executive at the seat of government necessary to preserve orderly conditions and execute the law in the United States and the several States thereof; and

Whereas Congress having convened in regular session on the first Monday in December, A. D. 1918, and will continue in session at the seat of government in the city of Washington, D. C., until March 4, 1919, with pending legislation and the passage of bills requiring Executive action in due course of legislation, and the President being further required from time to time to give Congress information of the state of the Union and to recommend to their consideration such measures as he may deem necessary and expedient; and

Whereas Congress did by an act approved July 16, 1790, provide that on the first Monday in December, A. D. 1800, the seat of government of the United States should by virtue of that act be transferred to Washington, D. C., and all offices attached to the said seat of government should accordingly be removed thereto by their respective holders, and shall after the said day cease to be exercised elsewhere, which was accordingly done pursuant to said act, so that the city of Washington, in said District, thereby became and still is the seat of government of the United States and the place where legislative and executive powers and duties shall and must be exercised; and

Whereas the Constitution provides in cases of the removal of the President from office or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice President and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability shall be removed or a President shall be elected, pursuant to which power Congress did by an act of January 19, A. D. 1886, known as the presidential-succession act, duly approved, provide therefor, but no legislation has been provided declaring what shall constitute inability of the President and devolving such powers and duties upon and the assumption and exercise of the same by the Vice President: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the departure by the President and his absence from the territory of the United States and from the seat of government so fixed and declared by law be, and the same are hereby, declared to constitute an inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office of President of the United States, and is hereby declared to constitute a vacancy in such office of President, and that the powers and duties thereof shall immediately upon such departure and absence by the President from the territorial limits of the United States and the seat of government thereof devolve upon and be exercised by the Vice President of the United States, who shall qualify and assume the powers and duties of the office of said President of the United States until a President shall be duly elected, and all official acts of the Vice President while such powers and duties are so devolved upon him shall be, and are hereby, declared to be valid for all intents and purposes and shall be received and accepted as the act of the President of the United States.

Mr. KNOX. I send to the desk and ask to have read a resolution to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to inquire what disposition was made of the resolution offered by the Senator from Illinois.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator asked that it lie on the table. It goes over under the rule.

PEACE CONFERENCE.

Mr. KNOX submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 361), which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas the United States of America entered the war with Germany and Austria-Hungary in order to vindicate the ancient rights of navigation as established under international law and in order to remove forever the German menace to our peace; and

Whereas the splendid effort of the American people and the valor of our soldiers and sailors during a year and a half, when added to the enormous sacrifices, the steadfast fortitude, and the noble courage displayed by our allies during more than four years, have made possible the attainment of those aims, now best expressed as restitution, reparation, and guaranties against the German menace; and

Whereas the surrender of Germany and Austria-Hungary to the terms of the armistice has attained a great part and has rendered enforcible the remainder of those aims; and

Whereas conferences are about to take place with the purpose to complete, to perfect, and to guarantee the attainment of the war aims aforesaid and thus to pass to the state of formal peace: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the purposes of the United States of America in those conferences should be confined to the aforesaid aims and matters germane thereto.

Second, That for the safeguarding of those aims the first essential is a definite understanding that, the same necessity arising in the future, there shall be the same complete accord and cooperation with our chief cobelligerents for the defense of civilization.

Third. That any project for any general league of nations or for any sweeping change in the ancient laws of the sea as hitherto recognized as international law and violated by the Teutonic powers should be postponed for separate consideration not alone by the victorious belligerents but by all the nations if and when at some future time general conferences on those subjects might be deemed useful.

Further resolved, That immediately upon compliance with the terms of the armistice and the guaranteed attainment of the war aims as aforesaid the Army and Navy of the United States should be withdrawn from foreign territories and waters except in so far as their retention might be temporarily necessary to establish the status contemplated by the armistice; and, further, that the extraordinary powers conferred upon the President for the prosecution of the war should be withdrawn and the country restored to a normal condition of peace, with the greatest possible celerity consistent with the national interest.

GOVERNMENT OF COSTA RICA.

Mr. MOSES submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 362), which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas the President of the United States, in an address delivered at a joint session of the two Houses of Congress, December 2, 1918, has emphasized the "capital importance" of action which shall "clear away all grounds of misunderstanding with our immediate neighbors and give proof of the friendship we really feel"; and

Whereas there now exists in the Republic of Costa Rica a government, constitutional in form and stable in character, which has maintained itself for two years in the face of a grave menace, which has given proof of undoubted adherence to the allied cause and of special friendliness to the United States, and which has been formally recognized by all the Governments of the Western Hemisphere, save only those of Nicaragua and the United States: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the opinion of the Senate that the President, having declared that "the stage of affairs is now set for such action as will be not only just but generous and in the spirit of the new age upon which we have so happily entered," should forthwith extend formal recognition to the existing Government of Costa Rica and should immediately enter into full diplomatic relations therewith.

PAYMENT TO HON. CHRISTIE BENET.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 363), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to the Hon. Christie Benet the sum of $554.79, being the compensation of a Senator of the United States for 27 days, November 6 to December 2, 1918, both dates inclusive, during which he served as Senator from the State of South Carolina.

PROPOSED TREATY WITH COLOMBIA.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Monday next, at the close of the morning business, I shall submit some remarks to the Senate on the pending proposed treaty with Colombia.

BREWERS' GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I ask the permission of the Senate that the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary to investigate the brewers' German propaganda be granted leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, leave will be granted.

REPORT ON AERONAUTICS (S. DOC. NO. 307).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The recommendation of the committee as outlined in the closing paragraphs of its report for the continuance of the scientific study of the problem of flight and the development of aviation for all purposes has my hearty approval. Attention is also invited to the recommendation of the committee that the appendixes of this report be published with the report as a public document.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

THE WHITE HOUSE, 3 December, 1918.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 13153, an act extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River, at the foot of Garrison Avenue, at Fort Smith, Ark., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THE PRESIDENTIAL OFFICE.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I should like about 15 minutes before adjournment to-day, by unanimous consent, to submit some remarks on the absence of the President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, in order that what my views are on this subject when they shall have been expressed may be beyond question, I have, contrary to my usual custom, placed them on paper.

The President's absence from the seat of government and the territorial limits of the United States by his contemplated attendance at Versailles, France, as a member of the peace commission suspends the legislative power of the Government during that absence. Congress can pass bills, but can not present them to the President for his approval or veto. Neither can the 10-day limit result in the passive Executive approval of a bill, because the 10 days do not begin to run until it is presented to him. A bill can not as a practical matter be presented to the President when he is in Europe, nor, if he vetoed it while there, being at the American ambassador's, could it be returned to the House in which it originated in such a way as to legislate as the Constitution contemplates it. A necessary constitutional legislative agent is no longer in his normal relation with other essential constitutional legislative agents so that legislation can be perfected.

The act of July 16, 1790, fixed the seat of government on and after the first Monday in December, A. D. 1800, at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and provided that all offices attached to the seat of government should accordingly be removed thereto by their respective holders and should after the said day cease to be exercised elsewhere. This is a legislative declaration fixing the place where the powers of the Federal Government shall be exercised. Contemporaneous with this act all Federal powers and duties of an executive and legislative character have been performed at the seat of government so fixed. Such power has been uniformly administered at the seat of government for 118 years. No President has ever undertaken to exercise or administer his great civil functions elsewhere. Federal sovereignty resides at the Capital. It can not be transferred to any other point even on the soil of the United States and within the jurisdiction of its Constitution and laws pursuant thereto except by act of Congress approved in due form by the President. It is a palpable violation of the act of 1790, approved by George Washington, to attempt to exercise the constitutional sovereign powers of the President within the domain of another Government, outside the territory of this country, and with the Atlantic Ocean intervening between the President and the seat of government.

No imperious necessity justifies the pernicious mischief likely to result. National legislation, vast appropriations of money, the legislation incident to the readjustment from war to peace conditions, all crowd as urgent measures. The uncertainty, the risk of litigation, the confusion imminent on the invalidity of both legislation and Executive orders fill the President's absence with grave menace. The public peace profoundly affected in the changes from war to peace levels, the signs of disorder, the frequent threats of lawless assemblages, the dangers hanging upon our Mexican border, all join to require the Chief Magistrate to be at his post of duty at the seat of government. His office is an executive one. It is a corporation sole. When its occupant is absent its quorum does not exist; unless a Vice President can assume the office or the Executive powers and duties can be devolved upon him, the President's office becomes vacant. The presidential succession act does not apply so long as the Vice President is eligible and competent; and he is both.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield for a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMAS. In order to explain the question more fully I will read that provision of the Constitution which applies to the subject matter of the Senator's discussion:

> In case of the removal of the President from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly, until the disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

My question is whether, in the absence of previous legislation upon the subject, Congress being expressly authorized to enact such legislation, there can be such a thing as disability or inability of the Executive? The Senator may intend to discuss that phase of the subject. To me it is a most interesting one.

Mr. SHERMAN. That, Mr. President, is the point I intended to cover by the resolution I offered this morning, which lies on the table, declaring by congressional definition what "executive inability" is.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, I asked the question because I inferred from my understanding of the resolution that it was to act retrospectively, and that, in the event of its adoption by Congress, it would take effect with the departure of the President. Am I correct with regard to that?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, without expressing any positive opinion upon the question raised by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] I should like to make this suggestion to him: Does not the first part of the clause of the Constitution which he read devolve the duties of the President upon the Vice President in case of the inability of the President to perform them? Does not the second part of the clause which he read provide that Congress may, in the event of the inability of both the President and the Vice President, pass laws as to the succession? Are they not two independent and separate questions?

Mr. THOMAS. I think not, Mr. President. The subject was discussed at great length and very exhaustively during the interim between the shooting of President Garfield and his death, and I have a distinct recollection that the best legal thought at that time agreed that antecedent legislation was essential by Congress before the inability or the disability became operative.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, is that not simply to determine the fact of the President's disability?

Mr. THOMAS. It may be; but it can not, in my judgment, act retrospectively.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senator from Illinois——

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to read a few extracts from a decision of the Supreme Court of Oklahoma, which I believe will throw some light on the subject. I do not care to do so unless the Senator will consent. It will take only about a minute.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; I should like to have it incorporated in the RECORD.

Mr. CURTIS. I think it answers the question of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator intend to read the provision of the constitution of Oklahoma which deals with the subject?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes. I read the following from the opinion of the Supreme Court of Oklahoma in the case of Ex parte Nelson Hawkins, Oklahoma Criminal Reports, volume 10, pages 399 and 400:

> This case presents simply a cold question of law, and must be decided as such without reference to any other considerations. Article 6, section 16 (Williams's Const. Okla., sec. 165), provides in express terms that all of the powers of the governor shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor during the inability of the governor to discharge the powers and duties of said office and until such disability shall be removed. No one will contend that the powers of the governor can be exercised by him during his absence from the State, any more than that a judicial officer of Oklahoma could open court and try cases or could discharge any other official duty in another State or upon foreign territory. The office of governor of Oklahoma was not created for the benefit of the man who temporarily holds his position. It is in no sense his private property; but it is alone for the people of Oklahoma, and must be confined to Oklahoma, and can not be placed upon wheels and hauled all over the face of the universe. The governor may go to other States, and travel in foreign countries, with all of the military pomp and glory of the commander in chief of the Oklahoma Militia, as he pleases, without forfeiting his office, and may carry his title with him; but his powers as governor become dormant the very moment he crosses the State line, and they revive again as soon as he returns and is within the borders of the State. * * *
> An emergency may arise at any moment requiring the presence of the governor within the State. The constitution provides that there shall always be some one within the State clothed with power to perform the duties of chief executive. The constitution must be obeyed, let it please or displease whom it may. There is nothing more ridiculous than to contend that the governor, as a matter of whim or caprice, can leave the State to attend banquets or play golf in other States, or for any other purpose, and say to those who have business with his office: "Wait until it suits my convenience to return." This question was fully considered by this court in the case of Ex parte Crump, supra, decided at the September term of this court.

It seems to me under this decision, construing the provisions of the Oklahoma constitution, which are identical with the terms of the Constitution of the United States, that the moment the President leaves the United States the Vice President becomes the President of the United States and should fill the office until the President returns.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for me to ask a question of the Senator from Kansas?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is there or is there not in the Oklahoma constitution a provision requiring that the lieutenant governor, or whoever may be the second officer, shall act as governor while the governor is absent from the State?

Mr. CURTIS. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Several States have that provision.

Mr. CURTIS. The provision is similar to the provision of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator says "similar." Would he mind reading it?

Mr. CURTIS. The constitution provides in express terms that all of the powers of the governor shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor during the inability of the governor to discharge the powers and duties of said office and until such disability shall be removed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the only provision in the constitution?

Mr. CURTIS. It is the only provision; and that is similar to the provision of the Constitution of the United States regarding the inability of the President to discharge the powers and duties of the office.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I just wanted to have that plain as we went along.

Mr. SHERMAN. On principle, the case read by the Senator from Kansas from the Oklahoma decisions is applicable. The query propounded by the Senator from Colorado is one that led to the introduction of the resolution. It was my motive. I think Congress can legislate for an existing emergency whether before or after the happening of the occurrence creating the emergency. The presidential succession act of 1886, during President Cleveland's first administration, was for the purpose of covering a crisis that arose when legislation was lacking. The Vice President was either disabled or dead, leaving, in the event of Mr. Cleveland's death or inability, no one upon whom that office would directly devolve. Congress executed the constitutional power in the succession act of 1886, which provides that in case of the inability, resignation, death, or removal from office of both the President and the Vice President the office shall devolve upon certain Cabinet members, beginning with the Secretary of State and following in the order named in the statute. That act, however, does not apply to existing conditions. It is evident that in 1886, when this act was perfected, the traditions of Congress as well as of the executive department led the framers of that act to believe that there never would be a violation of the manifest spirit and traditions of the Government by the voluntary departure of the Executive beyond the jurisdiction of the United States.

Senator George Frisbie Hoar was the sponsor in this body of the succession act of 1886. Here in this Chamber he stated when it was pending—some may remember it—that he did not wish to "strut under borrowed plumage." His cousin, Rockwood Hoar, he stated, drafted the bill, drew the act, and Senator Hoar introduced it and supported it on the floor of this body. At that time scarcely a Senator not a publicist of that day believed it was necessary to declare that in the event of the absence of the President of the United States from the territory of the country certain other persons should succeed to the Executive office, and I apprehend it was for that reason alone that no such provision was inserted in the act of 1886.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Illinois a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I yield for a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is the Senator or is he not aware of the fact that President Taft, during his term of office, went to Canada and was absent for a week or two—I do not remember just how long—upon foreign soil; and that he also went about 2,000 miles, I think—maybe not quite that much—into Mexico and held a conference with President Diaz? Is he or is he not aware of the fact that President Roosevelt, during his term of office, spent a day or two in one of the cities of the Panama Republic, not the Panama Zone?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will come to some of those instances in a moment, before I conclude.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator is aware of those facts, would the Senator mind telling me why, under a Republican administration, no Republican solicitous for the Constitution, and no Democrat, either, far more solicitous—historically, at any rate—for the Constitution, raised any objection or offered any resolution declaring the President's inability to carry on the duties of his office?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I am not one of those who adopt the mistakes of my own party as a precedent by which I govern myself or seek to legislate for others. I never have.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, would the Senator mind one more question? Disliking the Democratic Party as much as he does—almost as much as I dislike his party—would the Senator mind telling me why no Democrat armed with partisanship and with political hatred during those times raised that question; and can he imagine any reason for it, except that the question was not worth raising, and is a mere camouflage?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the question ought to be raised by anybody who has a right to raise it, and accordingly I have done so. I have not approved of the precedents breaking the traditions as well as the statutes of the United States if committed by a President elected on the ticket of the party of which I am a member. It is no more to be condoned or forgotten by one party or by one President than by another; and I wish seasonably to voice in my remarks here my protest as well as my belief on that subject.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the statement of the Senator from Mississippi is wrong as to President Taft. As I understand it, he did not cross the international bridge at El Paso. He went to the Territorial line and stopped there and was met there by President Diaz; at least, this is the view of El Paso people as expressed to me and it may be erroneous.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me just a little longer——

Mr. SHERMAN. All right; I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not making that statement because I remember it personally. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] told me this morning that he was with President Taft in Mexico; and I know that President Taft went to Canada and made a speech or two there, because it was in every newspaper in the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not talking about Canada; but he made his headquarters at El Paso, went to the international bridge, and was met there by President Diaz.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will hear from the Senator from Arizona about that first.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. All right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Arizona told me that he was with President Taft on that trip, if I correctly understood him.

Mr. THOMAS. The facts are, Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think this has now reached the refined stage of common-law pleading where the issue is joined between others than the litigants to the case; and I must respectfully ask that it cease, and that these gentlemen settle their difficulties in the cloakroom.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois has refused to be further interrupted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I see that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] is present. I have just quoted what he told me in the cloakroom a moment ago, and I should like to have his testimony upon this historical fact. I understood the Senator to say that he was with the party of which President Taft was a member, and that he went into Mexican territory, and was there for some time.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is very difficult to resist the Senator from Mississippi at any time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Am I correct in my understanding of what the Senator said?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and the Senator from Arizona was with him on that trip; and the Senator from Colorado says that Diaz came across the line, met Taft at the bridgehead, and that Taft, repeating the courtesy, went across the line into Mexico and met Diaz away below the boundary.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the Senator from Illinois remembers the international bridge at El Paso, nobody will ever stay across on the other side very long. Juarez is the last place on earth in which any man wishes to stay beyond mealtime. I will come to those instances, referring to each of them specifically, in a moment.

Congress is composed of numerous Members. Its only requirement is a quorum, to be secured by the parliamentary officer, if necessary by the arrest of absent Members. There is no such provision to enforce the presence of the Federal Executive. It is a matter of imperative necessity that Congress declare the President's absence from the soil of the United States and the seat of government an inability to discharge the powers and duties of President, and in effect a vacation of the office, and a devolution of the same, with its powers and duties, upon the Vice President. An executive act is not officially valid unless it be performed in accordance with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

In construing the Constitution of the United States the Supreme Court declared:

> That what is implied is as much a part of the instrument as what is expressed.

Therefore what arises by necessary implication in a fundamental law is as much the law as the expressed letter of the text. To say that the Constitution does not prohibit in express terms the absence of the President in a foreign country, and therefore it is lawful, ignores this salutary rule of common sense. The intention of those who wrote, and the American people who adopted, the Constitution was to guard the President against the insidious influences and flattery incident to the servile adulation and absurd pomp of the kings and council chambers of the Old World. Amid crowns and reminiscences of ancient thrones, with profound interested deference yielded by diplomats grown gray in Europe's quarrels, who see centuries beyond their generation, the whole American atmosphere that ought to surround the President is lost. A courtier's smile and the bending knee of a sycophant have often in history entangled a nation in fatal alliances. A kiss of a sensuous woman has changed the course of empire. We ought not to put him in temptation. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will not continue to warn the occupants of the galleries. They will be cleared if the occupants do not obey the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. The savory fragrance of incense offered by alien satellites may mount with intoxicating power to a head already strangely obsessed with the phantasy that he has become the State. The kings like Louis the Bourbon are not found in France alone in history. They have been found in other countries, and they may be bred on American soil.

The spirit of Americanism brooded above the infant Republic as it emerged from the Confederation of Revolutionary days. It vitalized and inheres in the sovereignty of the great delegated powers of the Executive. The thought of the voluntary departure of the chief civil magistrate, clothed with such plenary functions, beyond seas and without the national territory is reprobated and denied in every essential relation and mutual dependence of the structure and organic departments of Federal Government. The whole Federal system is based on the continuous and well-sustained operation of the Government as an entirety. The President is an integral part of the whole. He is an essential element of legislation. His office can not be suspended for an instant or its connection severed from the other coordinate branches of government without doing violence to the charter interpreted and applied for 130 years by its founders and their successors.

There is a constitutional morality woven into the fabric of every government devised and administered by an intelligent people from the days of Athens to America, and from Pericles and his predecessors to Washington. That spirit is a part of the American Government as much as the letter of a statute or of any great organic charter. It is this enduring vitality of which Grote wrote, and which he preserved for the instruction of posterity. Within it dwells the spirit that makes alive the organic instrument that collects in its great headlands the elementary rights of nations. One who violates it strikes a more grievous blow than he who merely breaks the letter. The law of 1790, as well as the unbroken contemporaneous exercises of such powers for a hundred and eighteen years, ought to be binding upon every officer who has taken the oath. Such uniform adherence to the exercise of great sovereign elemental powers is a formidable exposition difficult to argue away.

How can the President receive ambassadors representing sovereign power when absent from the seat of government, and particularly if he be within an alien sovereignty? Is it possible for him to make civil appointments even from the American ambassador's department in France, or can he order troops on the application of a State to protect it against domestic violence? Can he pardon or reprieve offenders while absent in Europe? Who will dispatch troops if required to enforce the laws of the United States and the orders of courts? The President can not execute the laws under his oath of office while he is in a foreign country and unable to exercise executive power at the seat of Federal Government.

The foregoing powers inhere in the President as a civil chief magistrate. Sovereignty is not of a migratory nature in its civil characteristic. The civil powers of the President have no extraterritorial validity. They confer no authority and constitute no defense for acts committed outside the area in which the law is operative. The status of civil sovereignty is attached to the territory, the people, and the institutions over which it wields its powers. The President of the United States is not its President in France. He is an alien there, a mere citizen of this Republic shorn of all his sovereign powers vested in his office when in the United States and at the seat of government. He has no power of his own volition to transfer the seat of government in the executive branch to an alien Province. Two sovereignties can not exist and be coterminus within the same territory at the same time.

The fiction that an ambassador's place of residence or a consul's office or the quarter-deck of a battleship represents the territory of this Republic all around the globe is a mere fiction of commerce for the purpose of taking care of American citizens who are absent in alien jurisdiction and for effecting the necessary purposes of trade.

An official possessed of sovereignty by virtue of the municipal or local law does not transfer that sovereignty or any portion thereof to foreign soil by transporting his physical person to the latter place. Sovereignty is extinguished when the officer departs from his domain. An attempted exercise of sovereign power abroad by the President of the United States, then absent in Europe, I believe to be void and confers no rights and constitutes no defense to one who must justify himself thereunder.

There is an unwritten law of unbroken tradition surrounding the President's office that he must not leave the country even for a day. Public reasons of the gravest character constitute the basis of this tradition. In the spring of 1901 President McKinley emphasized his respect for this limitation. At El Paso, Tex., he wished officially to meet President Diaz near the boundary of the two countries. He did not even go to the halfway line or place his foot upon the international bridge across the Rio Grande River. Ten years before this President Harrison adventured as far as the middle line of the bridge but no farther.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator said a moment ago, in answer to a question of mine, that he would come to that point later on. He now asserts that President Taft never crossed the border.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; President McKinley. I spoke last with reference to President McKinley.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will come to the Taft matter in a moment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought the Senator said President Taft. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am sure the Senator did not hear me.

President Arthur in 1883 was supposed unwittingly to have violated the tradition on a fishing excursion in the Thousand Islands. On a fishing excursion with some companions he drifted across the middle of the St. Lawrence River and was, in fact, within the jurisdiction of Canadian law.

President Cleveland on a hunting trip is commonly believed to have gone outside the United States for a short time when he sailed past Cape Hatteras outside the 3-mile limit, which technically put him on the high seas beyond the jurisdiction of the laws of the United States.

President Taft went to Panama in 1910. His destination was the Canal Zone, by treaty United States territory. I regard the jurisdiction and the power governmentally of the United States as supreme in the Canal Zone. When President Taft was beyond the 3-mile limits of tidewater he was outside of the territorial limits of the United States, and before he reached the Canal Zone he violated this tradition. His absence was unjustifiable under settled practices at that time, I believe, although Congress was not then in session and it led to no such complications as the absence of the President at this time might do.

No disturbance of necessary governmental operations followed the absence of President Taft in the circumstances attending his departure and his return. The isolated instances which I have been able to find of presidential absences, even if all of them be wholly indefensible, can not abrogate or modify the limitations that surround the Executive office and the traditions that have commanded the course of its occupants for more than a century of official conduct.

Mr. KNOX. If the Senator from Illinois will permit me, I will suggest one other case of a presidential journey in which the wisdom of not passing out of the sovereignty of our own country was emphasized in a very peculiar way. When George Washington was President of the United States he made a coaching trip to New England. This was shortly before Rhode Island had accepted the Constitution. He carefully and avowedly avoided going into Rhode Island because it was foreign territory to the new Union. Shortly afterwards Rhode Island did accept the Constitution and then, as I say, giving peculiar emphasis to his view, he made a special trip to Rhode Island.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am very glad of the information the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] gives of the precedent made by one of the early Presidents in that way, and it lends strength to the tradition I have alluded to. It interprets the act of 1790 which declared that the sovereign power of the Government shall be exercised at the seat of government and not elsewhere. Such reasons will fall upon heedless ears when addressed to those who ridicule or deride the necessary restraints and safeguards of constitutional government; with such persons anything that is, is necessarily wrong. We are approaching a period, Mr. President, of stress and strain that may well test the most elementary and necessary of the constitutional limitations of this Republic.

Virtue among some is an indiscriminate destruction of every agency and the ignoring of every principle wrought out in the experience of mankind. It seems to be reserved for the President to gamble with the insuperable difficulties he creates by his absence beyond seas. He no doubt will excite the rapturous applause of the scoffing intellectuals who minister to his vanity. He takes an iconoclastic delight in overriding every constitutional provision and every statute of the Republic, both in letter and spirit, designed to protect and preserve the civil liberty of the country. It is unofficial and personal government followed to its logical conclusion.

The foregoing dangers justify a declaration by Congress that will define the inability of the President. I believe it to be a proper subject of legislative definition. It will interpret and apply the tradition and the law that have attended the executive office from the days of Washington. It will be of material value to courts and future Presidents in interpreting the place in which sovereign power may lawfully be exercised. The Presidency is created and exists by law. This is a trite observation, but it is necessary to repeat it. Beyond it and its enumerated or incidental powers he can not go. The Constitution, by virtue of which he is elected and his great executive powers vested, requires the President to have been 14 years a resident within the United States, as well as 35 years of age, to make him eligible to the office. This long residence in the United States, while a positive qualification, is evidently to insure a personal knowledge of current affairs. It illuminates the President's absence during the protracted negotiations of the belligerant nations in France. The people of this Republic are entitled to the personal presence of their Executive.

It is no answer to say that the swift steamship, the cables, and telegrams do eliminate distance. They have not eliminated national boundaries and the limitations upon the sovereignty of their majesties and respective rulers. If he can communicate so readily with his Washington office and his people while in Paris, then his agents in Paris could as readily communicate with him if he remained in Washington by these same physical agencies. It is a poor rule that will not work both ways.

The absence of many weeks in a distant land is so repugnant to the exercise of his great powers as to justify the passage of this resolution.

I will state that a Representative from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] in the House yesterday introduced the same resolution, except that it does not declare the office vacant, but it does declare during the interim that the powers and duties during the President's absence in a foreign country shall devolve upon the Vice President, to be exercised until the President shall return to the jurisdiction and territory of the United States.

By this resolution Congress supplies a statutory definition of presidential "inability" so as to make it incumbent upon the Vice President to qualify, assume, and discharge executive duties. He therefore ceases to be the presiding officer of this body and does become the actual President until another one is duly elected in 1920 and inaugurated the 4th of March, 1921. This secures the public welfare and private right from an interregnum and cessation of executive functions, and no other construction will do so.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I have submitted the question involved in this discussion and in the resolution to Hannis Taylor, who is a well-known authority on constitutional law, and have received from him an opinion that deals specifically with this question at some length. It is a closely reasoned, strong examination of the question and so illuminating I ask, without reading, to have it printed as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
November 30, 1918.

Hon. LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR SHERMAN: You have requested me, as a student of American constitutional law, to give an opinion on the following question:

Will the absence of the President in Europe create the "inability to discharge the powers and duties of said office" contemplated in Article II, section 10, of the Constitution, which provides that "in case of the removal of the President from office or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what officer shall then act as President and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability be removed, or a President shall be elected"?

I answer as follows: The first legislation by Congress, giving effect to the provision of the Constitution in question, was the act of March 1, 1792, expressly repealed by the presidential succession act of January 19, 1886, which, together with Article II, section 1, now governs the entire subject.

The statute and the constitutional provision must be construed together under that elementary rule which provides that constitutional prohibitions arising by necessary implication out of the fundamental law are just as effective as those arising in express terms. In restating that principle in Ex parte Yarbrough, Mr. Justice Miller said, in construing the Constitution of the United States, "that what is implied is as much a part of the instrument as what is expressed."

It is a gross error to assume that the President is not commanded by the Constitution never to go beyond the territorial limits of the United States. The very nature of his office and the supreme duties annexed to it command the President never to depart, certainly when Congress is in session. There is no express prohibition directed either to the Senate or to the House of Representatives commanding them not to go abroad and hold their sessions there. The same implied and self-evident prohibition is directed to the President never to go abroad at any time. Such prohibition necessarily enters into the very nature of the office itself, which is an unprecedented and unique creation.

In describing the motives that governed the convention of 1787, when creating the presidential office, Sir Henry Maine said that "the figure they had before them was not a generalized English king, nor an abstract constitutional monarch; it was no anticipation of Queen Victoria but George III himself whom they took for their model." With that powerful figure before them the conventon vested in the President of the United States more than executive power; it made him an integral part of the National Legislature. Without his personal approval or rejection, no act of Congress can become a law, with the one exception to be hereafter noted.

Article I, section 7, clause 2, of the Constitution expressly provides that "every bill when it shall have passed the House of Representatives and Senate shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the President of the United States," who is expected to be present at the seat of government to act upon it in person. That he can not abdicate the duty or delegate it to another is put beyond all question by the decision of the Supreme Court in La Abra Silver Mining Co. against United State (175 U. S., 423). It is the settled law of this Republic, long defined by the Federal courts, that an act of Congress can not, with a single exception, be made the law of the land until the actual and physical placing of the President's signature on the document presented to him by the two Houses for that purpose.

If the President approves the bill, the Constitution directs him to sign it; if he does not approve it, the Constitution makes it his duty to return it with his objections to the House in which it originated. And a further and vital provision is that in case the President does not return the bill within 10 days after presentation it becomes a law in the same manner as though he had signed it. After the bill has become a law the Statutes of the United States make it the duty of the Secretary of State to "forthwith" file the law as soon as possible and to give publicity to it. Thus it is as clear as a mathematical demonstration that if both the President and Secretary of State, in open defiance of the Constitution, abdicate at the same moment and go for a long sojourn in foreign lands while Congress is in session the lawmaking power of this Government is at an end until the vacuum can be filled.

In view of that grave contingency every precaution was taken in the presidential succession act of 1886 to make an interregnum in the presidential office impossible. In commenting upon the menacing conditions that made that act a necessity, President Wilson, in his "History of the American People." has said: "There had been such a season while Mr. Arthur was President. There had been an anxious summer when, had death or serious disability overtaken him, there would have been no one to take up the duties of the chief officer of the Nation. Another season of the same sort came during the very first year of Mr. Cleveland's presidency. Mr. Hendricks, who had been chosen Vice President with Mr. Cleveland, died in November, 1885, and there was a brief interval during which there was no one between the President and a legal lapse of the presidential functions. At its first session, therefore, the Congress which had been chosen at the time of Mr. Cleveland's election passed an act which placed the heads of the executive departments in the line of succession in the order of the creation of their several offices." And yet, in open defiance of his own unanswerable exposition, the President, without any excuse, is preparing to abdicate his high office and to impose upon himself an "inability to discharge the powers and duties of said office," and, more, to take along with him the Secretary of State, who is second in the line of succession which the act defines.

I have said "without any excuse whatever," because the going of the President himself to the peace congress as a mere delegate violates not only the Constitution of his own country but a basic and elementary rule of international law and diplomacy, which decrees that no chief of state must appear in person in such an assembly. In obedience to that rule Great Britain, France, and Italy will send not their chiefs of state but their first ministers. The President will therefore degrade the dignity of his high office and humiliate the American people in the presence of all Europe by appearing there in an unprecedented and unbecoming capacity.

What right has he to say to the world by his acts that the American first minister, Mr. Lansing, who has been confirmed by the Senate as a competent Secretary of State, is unworthy to stand in the congress as the peer of the first ministers of Great Britain, France, and Italy, especially when he is to be supported by the brilliant and distinguished delegation chosen to accompany him? If he needs guidance in international law and diplomacy, the world-famous jurist, Col. House, will be there to advise and direct him. Besides, in creating the presidential office, the convention made it very plain that our Chief of State must at all times be carefully guarded against the insidious influences of foreign powers. Speaking on that subject in the convention, Mr. Madison said: "Limited as the powers of the Executive are, it will be an object of great moment with the great rival powers of Europe who have American possessions to have at the head of our Government a man attached to their respective politics and interests."

At this critical moment when grave conflicts are impending between the interests of the American people and those of certain all-powerful European States, the President should not be subjected to the seductive influences of pomp, pageantry, and adulation in the banquet halls of kings. He should remain here in touch with the sympathies and interests of the American people.

As a practical illustration of the difficulties involved, let us suppose that after the President places himself beyond the limits of the territorial jurisdiction of the Constitution and laws of the United States he sends a nomination to the Senate for Secretary of the Treasury. A nomination is a continuing act which presupposes a legally acting President behind it. The moment he ceases to be such the nomination is automatically withdrawn by operation of law. If the Senate then attempts to confirm a nomination not legally before it, the confirmation will be void and the vast transactions of the Treasury will be clouded at once with the taint of illegality. The President is about to throw a monkey wrench into a piece of delicately adjusted constitutional machinery at a moment when it is running at high pressure.

In the presence of such an emergency, neither the Vice President nor the Congress should falter in the discharge of the supreme duty imposed by the Constitution, which the American people do not consider "obsolete." So plain is the law upon the subject of the prohibition in question that, since the adoption of the Constitution, no President has ever presumed to violate it. Excepting only one instance, when invading armies forced a momentary withdrawal, the executive, legislative, and judicial departments have been ever present at the seat of government ready to discharge all of their official functions. Therefore if the President, under evil advice, persists in his purpose at this critical moment to abdicate his office by absenting himself from the seat of government for an indefinite sojourn in foreign lands, while the Congress of which he is an integral part is in session, the fact that he has thus unlawfully put upon himself an "inability to discharge the powers and duties" of his office will be too plain for controversy.

It will thus become the imperative duty of the Vice President to take the oath of office as President and to assume all the duties and responsibilities thereof. If he falters, it will be the plain duty of Congress to direct him to do so by a joint resolution to that effect. And here the fact should be emphasized that neither the Constitution nor the presidential succession act makes any provision for a President of the United States pro tempore. After the Vice President has been sworn in as President he becomes such in the full sense of that term. No provision is made by law under which he can hand back the presidential office to his predecessor. If Vice President Marshall after he has become President as the law provides resigns or becomes subject to an "inability," the office will then pass on in the line which the presidential succession act defines. It will be entirely beyond his power to transfer it to anyone else; that can be done by the law alone. And so it appears that our matchless Constitution is equal to all emergencies.

With great respect, I remain,

Sincerely, yours, HANNIS TAYLOR.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the newspapers have been full for the last two or three days of advertisement of a grand parade of tirades in opposition to President Wilson's contemplated visit to France and Great Britain. We were told that there was going to be a regular hurricane—perhaps an explosion of a volcano—and we have listened to the speech, or to the reading of the writing, rather, of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. That, I suppose, is the tornado and the volcano and the explosion which were to take place; and we are now left with the results. Parturiunt montes, nascetur ridiculus mus.

Amongst the complex concatenations of endless adjectives to which we have just listened I have failed to find any argument of any description. I find, upon the contrary, that the contention of the Senator from Illinois violates the precedents of Presidents who have reigned if not ruled in this country hitherto, or, to use a true American term, have presided in this country hitherto.

Now, Mr. President, in no true sense does the President of the United States personify the sovereignty of the American Republic any more than a Senator does or a Member of the House of Representatives. They are a part of the representatives of the sovereignty, which is the people. So all of this talk about a President losing the sovereign power while he goes abroad is absolute nonsense, and in using the word "nonsense" I mean no disrespect to the Senator from Illinois. There are behind him men wiser than he who are making the same mistake, if it be a mistake, who are at any rate making the same contention, whether they know better or not.

Mr. President, a king represents the sovereignty of his kingdom. An emperor represents the sovereignty of his empire. Yet the entire history of the world is full of visits of kings to other kingdoms, of emperors to other empires, and to kingdoms, and even to republics. It never was contended for one minute that one of them lost the sovereignty of his country or his own official status by making a trip of that sort.

Now, that is not all. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] made a correction a moment ago about George Washington, I believe it was, and said that he went to Rhode Island after Rhode Island had come into the Republic. That is true. It is also true that he passed through Rhode Island on his way to Boston before Rhode Island came into the Republic. It is also true that Mr. Roosevelt went down on his way to the Panama Zone, which does belong to us and is under our jurisdiction, and after he got there he was upon American soil, but on his way he stopped at towns in the Panama Republic, which was foreign soil. It is also true that Mr. Taft went into Canada and was there absent several days; I do not remember how long; a gentleman in the cloakroom told me this morning he thought 10 days, but I do not remember. It is also true, as the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] remembers, that Mr. Taft went into Mexico and was absent in Mexico quite a time. It is also true that not even a Democrat antagonizing Roosevelt or Taft ever raised the question that that constituted inability.

Now, Mr. President, contrary to the opinion of a great many men who live now, the fathers who wrote this Constitution were men of tolerably good sense. They were men who excited the admiration of Gladstone; they were men who excited the admiration even of Napoleon Bonaparte, with all his war madness; they were men who received the praise even of the Hohenzollerns, of Frederick the Great, who was the greatest of the Hohenzollerns, and the only really great Hohenzollern. If they had wanted to say that absence from the territorial limits of the United States constituted an inability, they would have said so. If they had wanted to say that absence from the territorial limits of the United States constituted a temporary or permanent vacation of the office, they would have said so. They were not such asses that they did not foresee that sort of a possibility, even if they did not regard it as a probability.

They tried to take care of the future for the sake of the American people, and we have found that the Constitution is a thing that has thus far taken care of us and is very much superior to any form of bolshevism or any form of autocracy in the world. To say that they would have regarded a temporary absence from the United States to make a couple of speeches in Canada or to run down to Mexico and exchange courtesies with Diaz as constituting an inability to discharge the duties of the Presidency, or as a vacation of the office of the Presidency, and that they did not provide for it beforehand, is to accuse them of being veritable fools; and whatever else they were, George Washington was not a fool, Benjamin Franklin was not one, James Madison was not one, Witherspoon was not one, nor were any of these other men.

Kings, Emperors, Presidents, all have left the territory under the jurisdiction of their Governments and not one of them in the entire history of the world has ever been deprived of his official functions because of that reason, except when a revolution took place in his absence, when, indeed, for the most part, the absence was really due to flight for fear of revolution that was anticipated. Not one has been deprived of his official functions for such a reason in the whole history of the world. Parturiunt montes, nascetur ridiculus mus.

Mr. President, this endless concatenation of complex adjectives somehow does not sound to me like the Senator from Illinois; it does not sound to me as if he were willing to be guilty of the sort of utterances that he has just pronounced. He read his speech, of course, and read it with good emphasis; read it in fine style, as he usually does, and with a degree of acting that made it funny at times, even when the Senator was seeking to be serious, and still funnier at other times when he was not seeking to be serious.

I doubt if any real lawyer, any real publicist, any real man of real common sense believes that Woodrow Wilson is doing anything wrong or unconstitutional, at any rate, when he is going to France. Gentlemen may bark and gentlemen may try to bite—"try to bite," I say; they can not bite; they may bark—but this war has produced some few great men—Clemenceau, "the Tiger"; Foch, the strategist; Joffre, the fighter; Haig, the Scotchman, with the Scotchman's persistency and hanging on; Rawlinson, the English bulldog; Allenby, the deliverer of Jerusalem; our own Pershing; David Lloyd George, broad-minded, philanthropic, true to democratic instincts; Woodrow Wilson, last but not least.

I warn gentlemen now that they can not tear either one of them down, now after this war is over and has been won, from the pedestal on which humanity has placed them. The worst they can do is to bark, and their bark will not even annoy to any very great extent.

The President of the United States knows that it is better for him to have a heart-to-heart talk with Clemenceau; that it is better for him to have a heart-to-heart talk with David Lloyd George; that it is better for him to have a heart-to-heart talk with the premier of Italy and with King Albert, the noblest soul that this war has produced, and find out the facts and the essential feeling of their respective peoples, which must not be defiled by them or us. Does he think that Mr. Wilson has got to communicate, then, every morning before breakfast with the august Senator from Illinois or the equally august Senator from Mississippi and have a debate about every point touched upon by him and them here in the Senate every day down to the boundary between Czecho-Slavia and Jugo-Slavia? Does not the Senator from Illinois know as well as I do that the President knows that the most important thing is to have harmony and to have as much of it beforehand as possible and as little of difference to be discussed afterwards as possible? Does the Senator imagine that the President ought to stay here and instruct his delegates to do this and to do that and to do the other thing, regardless of our allies and in ignorance himself of what they have to say in reply, or to cable to the public their differences before by mutual concession they are happily settled?

Mr. SHERMAN. He has been doing it all the time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, he has not had any delegates over there thus far, and, by the way, he has not instructed the Senator from Illinois, and if he had and the Senator had obeyed his instructions, he would have been much wiser. [Laughter and applause in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. This is the last warning of the Chair to the galleries. They must stop their manifestations. The Chair instructs the sergeants at arms at the doors that if applause or any other manifestation occurs in the galleries the galleries must be cleared.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in addition to that, ladies and gentlemen in the galleries, I desire to say that applause always bothers me; that it always worries me.

Does the Senator from Illinois imagine that the President does not know that heart-to-heart talks with the other great men whom this war has developed—without taking it for granted now that the President regards himself as a great man; I merely so regard him; but my opinion is not worth more than that of the Senator from Illinois, and the Senator from Illinois regards himself, perhaps as most Senators do, as a greater man than Woodrow Wilson—but supposing he is right; the President is here; he occupies the position; he must act; and wanting to act, the more ignorant he is, as the Senator assumes him to be, the more he ought to want to confer with these great men and to find out from them what ought to be done. A President is to a large extent like a king; he is subject to the information that people choose to give him, and he is, therefore, very frequently misled, as old Ulysses Grant was, as you remember, very many times; as George Washington was by the whisperings of New England Federalists.

Then, what is there more reasonable than for the President to want to go to France and to say, "Mr. Clemenceau, you are the premier of the Republic of France, and I am the President of the United States; you are Clemenceau and I am Wilson. Let us see what the actual situation is as you understand it, and then please listen to me and catch it as I understand it. I do not want to stay back in America and instruct my delegates by cablegrams to insist upon this or insist upon that, or die in the trench with this proposition or that, for France may not want it, or Italy may not want it, or England may not want it; and, above all things in the world, the most important thing now is harmony in details and in general essentials, so that we may not make asses of ourselves, as the republics and kingdoms in the Balkans did after they had whipped the Turk.

"If we leave it merely to messengers, if we leave it merely to people who are to be instructed by cablegrams, with all of the errors that may occur of misinterpretation and misconstruction, there is a danger of our fighting one another." Then, what becomes of the dream of peace? What becomes of "the parliament of man"? What becomes of the "federation of the world"? What becomes of the dream of the poets and the vision of the seers?

"Let us get together now. It is true," the President may say, "I have the Senate behind me; it must later on be consulted; its voice is potential." "It is true, Lloyd George, that you have the House of Commons behind you; it must later on be consulted; its voice is, as Blackstone said, omnipotent; it can do anything except turn a man into a woman or a woman into a man; it can do anything that can be done by law; and, Mr. Clemenceau, you must also consult with the French Assembly, but in the meanwhile let us try to get together; let the row not begin between us."

Then up jumps some Senator and says, "Oh, yes; but every morning he ought to cable to us and tell us that about half an hour ago Clemenceau said so and so, and David Lloyd George said this and that, and I said this, and I want the American Senate and the American people to stand behind me." That would be the conduct of an egotist, a megalomaniac, but it would not be the conduct of a man who lacks confidence in himself every now and then, as I know this President does. Somebody told me once that now and then he lacked confidence in the accuracy of his own judgment, and I said, "Every man of good sense does; they are only asses who do not." Somebody told me that he changed his opinion several times about several things, and my reply was along the same line. Every man of sense does; nobody but a fool does not. Men change, and their opinions and conclusions change with changed conditions. Nobody but a lawyer in a law case or a politician hunting office or a fool without any sense ever paid much attention to consistency.

If I should say to the Senator from Nebraska that he expressed a certain opinion four years ago and he is expressing a different one now, his probable answer as an honest man would be, "Well, if I expressed the opinion four years ago, I expressed it because I thought it was right then, and if I am expressing a different opinion now I am expressing it because I think I am right now."

Oh, Mr. President, this newspaper advertisement of the way they were going to fall all over Woodrow Wilson, starting from Illinois and winding up in Massachusetts, I believe, or all around the country, with a little help from the intermediate territory! And the first exhibition they made of themselves—what was it? They went over to the House the other day to listen to the President make an address with a sort of gentlemen's understanding that they were not to applaud him—they did not know what he was going to say, but there was a sort of gentlemen's understanding that they were not to applaud him. He had hurt their feelings by saying that he thought the Democrats ought to be elected to office.

Why, did you not know he was a Democrat, and did not the American people know it when they elected him? Do you contend that Grant or McKinley or Taft or any of the other Presidents did not regard themselves as chiefs of their party? Do you not know that every President has done so except George Washington, and that the only reason why George Washington's second administration failed was because he did not belong to any party, and therefore did not have any steady cohort to fight for what he thought was right and had nothing but volunteers in every little engagement? The hypocrisy of charging Woodrow Wilson with a great crime because he wants Democrats elected to office! Even that objection was not well founded, because when he found men upon his own side who were not true to the war and true to the ideals of the war his word went out against them just as significantly as it went out in favor of democracy generally.

What would he have been if he had been elected as a Democrat and had not been a Democrat? He would have been a hypocrite, would he not? Are you going to vote for any man as a Republican candidate for the Presidency and make him President later on that you do not think is going to stand by the tenets, the traditions, and the ideals of the Republican Party? You know you are not. So far as I am concerned, I have no apology to make for the President because he is a Democrat. If I had had the slightest doubt of his Democracy, I never would have voted for him. "Parturiunt montes, nascetur ridiculus mus!" Going all the way, I reckon, from the remote West plumb to New England, where the Brahmins live! I reckon some of you have forgotten that John Adams was a Federalist. I guess some of you have forgotten that Andrew Jackson was a Democrat and never made any shame of it. Some of you on the other side think that you beat the President. You did not beat the President. The people beat the Democratic Party in the last election. Do you know why? Because your party, taking it upon the percentage basis, had been truer to the war than we had—and when I say "we," I mean my party.

We had men in the other wing of this Capitol, and we had men here calling themselves Democrats, and several of them in high position of committee vantage, that were sticking the President every chance they got with a fine Italian dagger. I have come to the conclusion that the American people put you in office in these two Houses because they thought maybe you could be more safely trusted to stand behind the President than a lot of our fellows could be. That may be an error, but that is my opinion, because I have found a good many Mississippi Democrats talking that way, even Mississippi Democrats, who never voted any other ticket than the Democratic ticket and would not do so to save their lives. But we had got rid of these traitors. The people ought to have known that we would get rid of them.

And now, Mr. President, I imagine the difficulty the Senator from Illinois will have, together with all of the wiser men behind him, who are going to spend the next two weeks attacking Woodrow Wilson, if they can manage to get the time—and I suppose they will—I imagine the difficulty they will have in persuading the old Indiana Democrat in the Vice President's chair that he should qualify as President of the United States while Woodrow Wilson is in Europe having heart-to-heart talks with Clemenceau and David Lloyd George. You know you might just as well have tried that on me, if I had happened to be Vice President. You know that sort of camouflage does not go.

You know the American people do not misunderstand it. They know it is blind partisan hate, malice, and uncharity. All in the world you have got to do is to give yourselves two weeks' rope, and at the end of two weeks of unlimited rope the American people will have spotted you, and there will be enough of them getting religion and going on the mourners bench and confessing before God and man that they made an awful mistake in the vote they cast at the last election, to render the next presidential election secure, unless you happen to get a military hero and we do not, and if that should happen God only knows what will become of us.

Mr. President, I believe in loyalty to a cause when it is a good cause, to a man when he is a good man and a strong man and an able man. I have never taken shame to myself for loyalty to any of the great men that I have ever known. I have taken pride to myself that I trusted them rather than my own judgment at various times. Whatever else this war has resulted in it has resulted in proving in Woodrow Wilson's case that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country, and not altogether without honor even there. He is so much greater, he is so much wiser, he is so much longer visioned, he is so much gentler visioned than the men who think they are making political capital by attacking him that there is no comparison.

This Republic has furnished five great Presidents, and he is one of the five. And your children and your grandchildren, in spite of what you have heard to-day, with all its endless concatenation of complex and senseless adjectives a l'Illinois, will be taught in the history books by the school-teachers in your own State and in your own party to revere and honor him. He is not with a Scotch name and a Scotch jaw for nothing, and he is not afraid of anything; and he does not go around bragging about not being afraid, either. He is going to do what he thinks is right, not only for America but for the world; and he is going to try to get out of this, if he can, by heart-to-heart talks with Lloyd George and Clemenceau and the Italian premier and the Belgian King and the balance of them, a comparatively permanent and a just peace and, if possible, a league of nations to preserve the peace of the world.

Now and then somebody tells me: "That is all impracticable, and you can not have it." Why not? I suspect that when the first man started and told people that they had to stop their private rows and quit killing one another and go to a court of justice and settle their difficulties that somebody else said: "Oh, well, that is all humanitarian and all that, but there is no sense in it, and it can not be done. Sherman will not put his weapon up, and Williams will not 'bury his club'"; but Sherman and Williams did, after a while. They tell me that you would "have to have the whole civilized world agree to it." I say no. I say that the allied nations alone can agree to this in the treaty of peace: "Hereafter we will declare beyond the pale of civilization any civilized country that dares make war upon another without having previously offered to leave the question in controversy to a fair and impartial arbitrament; and if any country will do it, that country will be declared beyond the pale of civilization. We will cut off her traffic and her travel on the high seas and, as far as we can, by land. We will put the construction of sea power on her; and the minute she quits the path of insanity and comes back into the broad path of civilization, quits making the war to which we objected, then we will let her join this alliance, too, if she sincerely wills consent and repentance." We will go further; we will say that after we have declared a nation like that to be beyond the pale of civilization, we will not only cut off its traffic and its travel upon the high seas, and upon land as far as we can, but we will declare it to be "the enemy of mankind," and we will make united war against it.

You never see the force of the constable and the sheriff behind the justice of the peace or the circuit court, except when he opens court and declares it adjourned; but everybody knows it is there, and, as a consequence, nobody defies it, or at least nobody but a very reckless man. And so in this agreement you will not have to whip the country that wants to get beyond the pale of civilization, because it will not get there. It will be afraid to try. Even Hohenzollern would have been afraid to go into this war if he had known the civilized world was going to face him.

"Oh, well," you tell me, "but maybe Italy will not agree; maybe France will not agree; maybe Japan will not agree; maybe Roumania has private irons in the fire; maybe Serbia has, so that you can not get her to join in the agreement." I tell you that the two English-speaking races by themselves can do it. We have the sea power of the world. Great Britain has just demonstrated what sea power amounts to—constriction, throat-grappling, starvation if necessary, deprivation of raw materials, deprivation of industrial life, control of overseas traffic and travel. These United States have the second largest navy in the world, and before many years roll around we will have the largest. I tell you that if nobody else goes into the league of nations except the English-speaking races, the great confederacy of States here, the great confederacy of Provinces over there, Great Britain, Scotland, Wales, Ireland—except the Sinn Feiners, who amount to practically nothing—the Canadians, the Australians, the New Zealanders, the South Africans, the most loyal of all Britain's Provinces, because she acted most magnanimously toward them, they and we, with our law, our language, and our courage and resources on land and at sea, are enough.

By our sea power, by our control of raw material, by our control of the economic resources of the world, such as iron and copper out in your country, gold farther Northwest, and cotton down South, without which nobody can exist, we alone, if the balance of the world will not come into it, can agree that any civilized nation that makes war upon another without first either agreeing or offering to leave the question in controversy to fair and impartial arbitrament shall be outside of the pale of civilization and our enemy, and that their travel and traffic upon the high seas shall be terminated, that their access to raw materials shall be terminated. We two—Republic and Empire—alone can bring about the peace of the world for a hundred years if we have the courage to try.

That is what Wilson has gone to Europe to try to consummate—the dream of poets, the vision of prophets, the heart-wish of good men and good women for a thousand years—peace, honorable peace, permanent peace, just peace; just even to our enemies, but not overmerciful to them, because in order to be just they must pay retribution. David Lloyd George says that they must account for what they have stolen and what they have taken, and, as far as possible—although it is not possible to measure it in money—for what they have murdered and what they have raped. But all the same, a just peace, leaving to every language on this globe the right to homologate itself with the nationality, so that the Czecho-Slavs and the Jugo-Slavs and the Serbians may go together; the Poles, whether in Prussia or Russia or Austria, may flock together; Schleswig, stolen from Denmark, may go back to Denmark; Alsace and Lorraine may go to France; Roumania may be independent, with the Roumanians in Bessarabia and Transylvania; all of that. Those are details that Wilson does not propose to handle by himself.

What would you think of Mr. Wilson if he should send word by cablegram to the French and English and Belgian and Serbian authorities of the demands that he made, instead of going over there and saying it to one another in heart-to-heart talks and by mutual concession arriving at unity of purpose and harmony of action? Is there one of you who does not believe he is doing the best he knows how, even if you think he is a fool and unfit to be a member of this august body, as not many of you do? Is there one of you who does not really think in the bottom of your heart that he is doing the best he can? Is there one of you who thinks he is guided by a dishonest purpose? Is there one of you who thinks that he is motived by an unpatriotic purpose? Is there one of you who thinks he deserves the adjectives that have been poured out on his defenseless head this morning? I do not believe the utterer of them does. Whatever else he may be, however much you may dislike him, however much he may have disagreed with some of you on this side about patronage and other things and some of you on the other side about political principles, there is not one of you that will go to your bedside to-night and tell God in secret converse that you believe that he is either unpatriotic or dishonest or that he has any purpose in the world except not only the good of the American Republic but the general welfare of the civilized world.

Why bark at him all the time? Are you barking at him with the idea that it will damage him? It will not. You are digging your own graves when you try to dig his. If you bark at him with the idea that it is going to help you, it will not. Now, whenever you find him making a mistake, call attention to it; call attention from the housetops; call his attention, amongst others. My personal experience with him has been that he is the quickest man to correct an error that ever I came into official contact with when he finds out that it is an error, when he is convinced of it. He is as stubborn as he can be until he is convinced.

There we are—Clemenceau representing France; Lloyd George representing Great Britain, who went to his people to find out whether they wanted him to continue to represent them or not, as doubtless Wilson would if he could do it under the Constitution of the United States. There are certain personal selfish British, certain personal selfish French motives, that this country, unconcerned with any territorial or monetary advantage, is divorced from. We want to have all of the influence we can over there with them to bring about a permanent and just peace; as nearly as possible "a parliament of man and a federation of the world"; and what are you doing here? Weakening your own agent every day, throwing adjectives at his head, accusing him virtually of idiocy, of un-Americanism—weakening him in the council, so that if you can help it America shall not predominate, but somebody else will.

What do you want to do it for? Will it help your children? Will it help your grandchildren? Will it help the American Republic? Will it help democracy in the world? Will it help civilization from one pole to the other, as near to either pole as civilization stretches? You know it will not.

What is the next Presidency of the United States compared with what we may do in this war? I stood upon this floor six months ago, I believe, or eight, and I said that if the blackest Republican ran against the best Democrat that ever existed, and that Democrat had not supported this war from beginning to end and the Republican had, I would vote for the Republican. I was accused of partisanship for making that statement. As a matter of fact, it was the most extremely unpartisan utterance that could be made by anybody.

Oh, the iron hand in the velvet glove; protestations of fairness; constitutionality coming from the party that never respected the Constitution 10 years of its existence, that was born defying it—to wit, the fugitive slave law, that was then a part of it—that continued to defy it after the war as well as during it! All at once, nicely caught with the little complexities of constitutional toilet arrangements, cosmetics upon the face, chiefly, you try to make a scapegoat out of Wilson.

Well, you can not make a scapegoat out of anybody that is not a goat to start with, and especially not if he is wiser than the man who attacks him is—and frequently he is; not always; of course never when a Senator attacks him. Of course, when a Senator attacks anybody he is being attacked by a sort of a German superman; almost an American Hohenzollern, that is capable of everything wise and nothing foolish, not even an utterance accidentally.

I want to leave you this thought: How is all this going to hurt him? How is it going to help you? How is it going to help your posterity? How is it going to help the American Republic? How is it going to help American influence in Europe? How is it going to accomplish any good end of any description for the purposes of civilization or democracy or humanity?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 4637.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I avail myself for a second, not holding the morning hour to have concluded, to give notice that I will address the Senate, with the Senate's permission, on Friday morning after the close of the morning business on the subject of the proposed league of nations for peace.

PAYMENT TO HON. CHRISTIE BENET.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I desire to report back favorably, without amendment, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, resolution No. 363, and I ask to have it considered at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. That may be done with the understanding that the unfinished business will not be displaced.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to the Hon. Christie Benet the sum of $554.79, being the compensation of a Senator of the United States for 27 days—November 6 to December 2, 1918, both dates inclusive—during which he served as Senator from the State of South Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I object to the present consideration of the resolution. I should like to ask the Senator reporting the resolution to make a little inquiry before he brings it up again. I understand that the Senator elect from the State has been paid the salary from the date of the election. Under the Constitution the term of Senator Benet expired on the day of the election of his successor. Therefore I doubt very much if he is entitled to this extra salary. Surely Congress will not pay a double salary during that time. If the Senator elect has not been paid, then there might be favorable action upon the resolution, but personally I shall object to its consideration until we can get the facts in the case.

Mr. THOMPSON. This is simply a favorable report from the committee on the resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. It is not the question of a favorable report.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will state in reply to my distinguished colleague that we have a very striking example in the State of Kansas, and one very much in point. The same situation arose when the distinguished Senator came to the Senate in place of Senator Benson. He drew the salary in the interim, the same as in this instance, as I am informed; and this, I am told by all the older Senators, has been the universal custom in the Senate in a situation of this kind. I have numerous precedents, and it has never been questioned before that I know of. I have no interest in the matter except to do justice to a Senator who has served in the Senate without pay and to do justice to his State. Of course, if my colleague objects, the resolution will simply go to the calendar and can be taken up and disposed of as the Senate sees fit at the proper time.

Mr. CURTIS. Senator Benson did draw the salary until I took the oath; that was the old practice. Before the Constitution was amended, a Senator was appointed to serve until his successor was elected and qualified. I was elected by the legislature in 1907. I was not elected until the 23d day of January, and I took my seat in the Senate on the 29th of January. But under the Constitution as it now is, with the constitutional amendment with regard to the election of United States Senators, a newly elected Senator to fill an unexpired term is entitled to his office and entitled to pay from the day he is elected. That question has not been decided and there are no precedents since the adoption of the constitutional amendment.

I am informed that the financial clerk or the Secretary has been notified that the new Senators are entitled to their pay from the date of the election. If that is so and this resolution is adopted Mr. Benet will be paid for time for which the newly elected Senator has been paid. I do not think the Senate wants to set a precedent of that kind.

I will state to the Senator from Kansas that Senator Benson drew his pay until the 29th of January, 1907, and your humble servant drew the pay from the 29th of January, 1907. There was no double payment during the time.

I object to the consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On objection, the resolution goes to the calendar.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My colleague [Mr. GOFF] is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENDRICK in the chair). Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that on the next legislative day, immediately after the close of the morning business, I will submit some remarks upon the subject of the league of nations and incidentally upon the resolution submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX].

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask for a vote on the pending amendment. My understanding is that that is the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. THOMAS. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, before amendments, particularly those that may be regarded as of primary importance, are voted upon, I desire to discuss what I conceive to be the merits of the pending bill, and to explain the provisions of the substitute which I have offered therefor. With the permission of the Senate, I should like to ask the chairman who has charge of the bill how many members of the committee approved the measure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Practically all. One or two said they would like to offer amendments. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], I think, is the only one who reserved that right.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall offer an amendment to the bill some time before the final vote is taken.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, in discussing the bill I want to state preliminarily that I am in hearty sympathy with the purpose to adopt some system of retirement. It was my privilege to be a member of the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment for a number of years, and for two years to preside over the committee. The committee then prepared a bill which was reported to the Senate, and which is the same bill I have given notice I would offer at the proper time as a substitute for the bill now pending before the Senate.

I think that everyone who has given attention to the subject of the civil service not only in Washington but throughout the country must recognize the fact that there are a large number of superannuated employees in the service who are rendering little, if any, service for the stipend they now receive, but who have given long service to the country, and who it would be almost cruel to sever from the service without making some provision for them. When I say this I am not unmindful of the fact that some of these employees have not been faithful servants. I assume that the most of them have been, and I am going to discuss this subject on that theory.

I hope that before this Congress adjourns there will be some legislation upon this subject for the relief of the superannuated employees in the civil service. But, Mr. President, I must confess my very great disappointment with the bill which has been presented by the committee. While I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, I offer the prediction that if it is adopted it will prove not only unsatisfactory to the public, but it will prove more than unsatisfactory to the employees themselves.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator understands that the representatives of all the employees' associations signified their approval of the pending measure?

Mr. POMERENE. I have heard the Senator make that statement half a dozen times, and I challenge the statement that the measure meets with the approval of the employees in the country generally. I have seen no evidence of it in the hearings save and except that certain representatives have come here and said that it had been submitted and it met their approval.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, that is the whole question. I do not know of anything else to go by except what they represent.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will bear with me I think I can demonstrate that fact to the satisfaction of some Senators at least.

Mr. President, let us for a brief time analyze the bill as it is presented. In the first place, in section 1 it divides the employees into two classes, those who will be retired at 68, and the city and rural letter carriers and railway mail clerks, who shall be eligible for retirement at 65 years.

Section 2 divides these employees into four classes. Class A embraces those who have served for a period of 30 years or more; class B those who have served for a period of 25 years or more but less than 30; class C those who have served for 20 years or more and less than 25; class D those who have served for 15 years or more but less than 20 years. The annuity provided in the bill for employees in class A is 50 per cent of the employee's average annual salary for 10 years next preceding the date of his retirement, with the proviso that no annuity shall be in excess of $600 per year. I should like Senators to recognize the inequalities in this classification. In class B, 40 per cent of the salary, but it shall in no case exceed $540; class C shall receive 30 per cent of the average annual basic salary for the 10 years next preceding the date on which he or she retires, but their annuity shall in no case exceed $480; and class D shall receive 25 per cent of the salary for the last 10 years preceding their retirement, but in no case shall they receive more than $420.

Senators will see that under these provisions a man or woman who has worked 19 years gets no greater pension than the one who has worked 15 years. The one who has worked 20 years will get $60 per year annuity more than the one who has worked 19 years. The same variation exists in each of the classes to which I have referred.

Mr. President, this bill is based upon the so-called half-and-half plan. Bear in mind that there have been proposed at various times three methods of pension. One is a straight pension payable by the Government after a certain number of years upon reaching the retirement age; a second is made wholly contributory; a third is partly contributory and partly a straight pension, or at the expense of the Government. Under the bill which has been presented to the Senate it is provided that half of the expense shall be paid out of the Public Treasury and half of it shall be paid by the employees.

The report indicates that it was the judgment of the committee that it would require for the pension system herein devised a system of money equal to 5 per cent of the total salaries of the employees in the classified service, and it is proposed that 2½ per cent of this shall be payable out of the public funds of the Treasury and 2½ per cent of it shall be payable by the employees themselves.

I wish Senators would bear with me while I analyze that proposition. Remember that the age at which the employees retire here is 68, save as to certain classes, who retire at 65 years.

So if young men or young women enter into the public service at the age of 20 years they must contribute 2½ per cent of their salary for 48 years before they are entitled to the pension; that is, if they are in that class that are retirable at 68. If a man enters the service at 67, then he only pays 2½ per cent of his salary for one year, and straightway he is entitled to a pension for the amount required here, within one year from that date.

It may be suggested that men and women ordinarily are not received into the service at that advanced ago; but allow me to suggest that it does provide that in completing the time of the service they can take into consideration the length of service that they have rendered in the unclassified departments. So Senators will see that if an employee of the Government was in the unclassified service with no intention to remain in the service permanently, but had probably served 14 years and then severed himself from the service, by making certain payments, if he desired to go back into the service again, he can serve one year more and then be entitled to the pension provisions of the bill.

More than that, Senators; at one time when this bill was before the committee, so I am advised, there was a limitation upon the amount of the assessment which could be made against any employee of $50 per annum, no matter what his salary. That provision has been eliminated, and now no matter how diligent an employee may be, no matter how skillful he may be, no matter how high a salary he may get, he is compelled to pay 2½ per cent of that salary each year during the entire length of his service in order to become entitled to an annuity of $600 a year.

Let us follow that up a little further. Assume that the employee is getting a salary of $1,200 a year at 20 years of age. Two and one-half per cent is $30. If by his own ability and by reason of the character of the service he is advanced in a year or two so that he gets $3,000 a year, he is compelled to pay 2½ per cent of that, or $75 a year. If he should be receiving for any portion of this period $5,000 a year, he must still pay 2½ per cent of that $5,000, or $125 per year; in other words, under this system, instead of speaking of it as a system one-half of which is maintained at the public expense and one-half of it at the expense of the employees, we ought to be perfectly fair with the public, we ought to be fair with the employees themselves, and we ought to be fair to the taxpayers and tell them the real truth about it. You will find, on an investigation of this bill, that you make each of the employees under this system an insurer for the other employees; you have the young man the insurer for the old man; the young woman an insurer for the old woman. In my judgment, if anybody is to be the insurer for any of these employees it should be the public and not one employee for the other.

Why, Senators, the system here adopted is going to make it attractive for the older people to get into the service and unattractive for the young man to stay in the service. I do not think it is quite right to require one employee, a young man or a young woman, who enters the service at 20 years, to pay 2½ per cent of his or her salary, no matter what it may be, for a period of 48 years, and get, at the most, an annuity of only $600 a year; and to say to another man that it is only necessary for him to be in the classified service for one year and to pay 2½ per cent of his salary in addition to certain payments which are required, and then get the same annuity that the other man gets.

Mr. President, I made a statement here a moment ago which seemed to question the facts as given by the chairman of the committee; and I want to say now that I did not make it or intend it in an invidious way, for I am sure that Senators will agree with me that, even though we differ, the Senator from Tennessee would not willfully make a misstatement. I have no doubt that he based his statement upon certain representations made by representatives who had the subject in charge.

I have examined the testimony pretty carefully. I know that some statements have been made to the effect that they are all satisfied with this plan, but I fail to find any statement in the record to the effect that the men who are getting $2,000, $2,500, and $3,000 or $5,000 a year are willing to pay 2½ per cent of their salary during all these years for the benefit of somebody else.

That question has been raised not by me alone, but by Dr. Maddrill, who was the actuary who appeared before the committee and discussed this very problem.

Before going into that portion of his testimony, however, in order that I may present the view of the witness consecutively, I desire to read a few lines. It will be noted that a statement is made in the report to the effect that to maintain the system here adopted it would cost not to exceed 5 per cent of the salaries. Though I am not able to place my eye upon it just at this moment, Senators will find, in any event, that statement is contained in the report. Dr. Maddrill was before the committee and was asked this question:

The CHAIRMAN. Doctor, you do not feel that there is any doubt about 5 per cent being sufficient to pay the annuities provided for in this bill, do you?

Mr. MADDRILL. Five per cent will cover the annuity as provided in the proposed plan.

That was some other plan, as I understand.

Mr. JORDAN. But not in this one?

Mr. MADDRILL. It will be 5 and a fraction in this one.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought you stated before that 5 per cent would cover it.

Mr. MADDRILL. My statement was that the 5 per cent would come within a few tenths of 1 per cent.

Mr. JORDAN. It can be referred to still as a 5 per cent bill?

Mr. MADDRILL. It can be referred to still as a 5 per cent bill.

So, according to this testimony, the cost of the bill would be 5 per cent plus a few tenths less than 1 per cent more. Again, he was asked by the chairman this question—I read from page 26:

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you have changed your mind about this, Doctor, have you not, since you testified about it in the beginning?

Mr. MADDRILL. No, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Because, as I understood, when you brought us the last figures on it before its introduction you believed that this bill was a very fair measure, looked at from the half-and-half basis, and one that was practical and that Congress might well pass. Now, why have you changed your views about it?

Mr. MADDRILL. May I respectfully say, Mr. Chairman, that my views have not changed?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MADDRILL. My relation to the bill has changed somewhat. It seems to me now that I am put in the position of one who really is made responsible for proposed economic provisions which I could not feel that I would like to be sponsor for. One of them, for example, is this: After my suggestions were made with regard to the bill—

Now I come to that part of the testimony to which I referred a moment ago—the $50 maximum deduction was struck out, against my protest. That struck me as absolutely unfair to the employees—not, of course, of the lower salaries, but of the higher salaries. The bill as now printed proposes to take from the higher-paid employee twice what he would pay to an insurance company which receives the expenses of doing its business and a profit.

The CHAIRMAN. If he is willing to do that, why should outsiders complain?

Mr. MADDRILL. I doubt, Mr. Chairman, from my observation and from what has come to me, if he is willing.

The CHAIRMAN. I beg to take issue with you, Doctor. They have sent their representatives here, who all say they are in favor of it; and I believe I have gotten one letter—there may have been two, but I think only one letter—that disapproves of the bill.

I will say that since this bill has been published it has been given wide distribution; the print has been exhausted, and we have had to have new editions of it printed and sent out, and I have applications for it at all times, and I get many letters about it, all of which have been of approval except one from some gentleman here in the city, whose name I do not now recall, who disapproves of it on a number of grounds; and practically all of them approve of it regardless of how much they contribute and how much they do not; and here are all their representatives here who are approving it, and these representatives would not approve it unless the men behind them did approve it.

Mr. JORDAN. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. We know that from actual experience; and I am not going to approve anything here for these people unless they are behind it.

Mr. MADDRILL. Mr. Chairman, may I question whether the employees of the salaries above $2,000 have really had this brought to their attention? The representatives here, I think it should be stated in justice to themselves and to my former statement, are voicing the attitude of the employees who are not receiving the higher salaries.

Senators, bear in mind that there are nearly 300,000 of these employees in the United States in the classified service. I recognize the fact that we get in the habit of receiving committees, and that those committees say, "Yes, our constituency approves of this bill"; but I should like to know whether they explained to the Government employees throughout the 48 States of the Union that under this scheme it is proposed to charge some of the employees on a so-called 50 per cent plan enough to pay the entire expense of their insurance and other employees twice the cost of their insurance, while as to others they will only pay a very small per cent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me a moment. In other words, it is proposed to have the young men here the insurers for the middle-aged and the old men. There can not be any question about that, and my guess is that if we could hear the voice of those who are getting the larger salaries or who are likely to get them, they would say, "Why should we be insurers for others? If anybody is to be insurer for the other, why should it not be the Government that has received their years of service?"

Now I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio asked what the sentiment is from each of the 48 States composing this Union. I will ask the Senator if he has heard from any of the associations from his State; and if so, what they asked him to do about the matter?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have not heard from these gentlemen out in the States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the Senator heard from any of them in the employment of the Government?

Mr. POMERENE. I heard from one here the other day, opposing this bill very much. I do not know whether he was speaking individually or in a representative capacity.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the Senator heard from none in favor of the bill?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have not had much correspondence on this subject, but I had a vast deal of correspondence about it for a period of two years, while I was a member of the committee. I think I know something of the sentiment, and I know that it is a very easy thing to say, "We have adopted a half-and-half plan; you will only have to pay one-half of the cost of your annuity"; and immediately those who do not understand the system say "amen" to it; but what would be the result if you were to go to these employees and say to them—to a young man or to a young woman—"Do you understand that when you are paying 2½ per cent, if you are less perhaps than 30 years of age, you are paying almost the entire cost of your insurance; and if you are getting one of the higher salaries you are perhaps paying double the cost of your insurance, while certain others will only be paying a small percentage of their insurance?" That is the situation, and my judgment is that it takes more than a recommendation signed by some committee to demonstrate that that is a fair system.

Now, Mr. President, let me go a little further.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. KING. This matter is of so much importance that I feel the Senator ought to explain it to more Senators than are now upon the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. POMERENE. Well, Mr. President, that has been one of the difficulties with this subject; we can not get Senators to take the matter up and give it the attention it really deserves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Henderson	Norris	Smoot
Bankhead	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Spencer
Beckham	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Sterling
Calder	Kellogg	Penrose	Sutherland

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] because of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, while the roll was being called, a Senator kindly directed my attention to the statement in the report of the committee which I was seeking to find, but was not able to place my eye upon at the moment. It is on page 4:

A number of conferences were held and finally Dr. Maddrill reported that the present bill, which was introduced on June 3, 1918, would cost the Government and the employees not more than about the sum of 5 per cent of the salaries of all the employees.

I have read from Dr. Maddrill's testimony, in which he says that it would cost a few tenths less than 1 per cent in excess of the 5 per cent; and that fraction of 1 per cent means millions of dollars in the administration of this proposed law.

Mr. President, I also call your attention to another statement in the testimony of Dr. Maddrill, in which he says with respect to the cost of a system incorporated in this bill:

The bill as now printed proposes to take from the higher paid employee twice what he would pay to an insurance company which receives the expenses of doing its business and a profit.

Does anybody believe that these employees are willing to pay for Government insurance twice the amount that they would be required to pay for private insurance?

Now, let me call the attention of the Senate to a paragraph in the report that I submitted on February 13, 1917, as the chairman of this same committee, the membership of which was substantially the same as the membership of the committee now. I refer to that portion of the report which speaks of the amount of the assessments. Let me explain preliminarily that I had not the exact figures before me, but these estimates of the amounts of the assessments are based upon what the average salary or pay of the employees would be. I can not state exactly what that is, but I can throw some light upon it by stating that the average salary of those 70 years of age and over in 1917 was $1,160 per annum. Now, I assume that the average salary would not be much more than $1,200 or $1,300 or $1,400 probably.

Under a system which contemplates that when it is completely established it shall be self-sustaining, at the age of 20 the total cost of this annuity would be 3 per cent; at the age of 25, 4 per cent; at the age of 30, 5 per cent; at the age of 35, 6.5 per cent; at the age of 40, 8 per cent; at the age of 45, 11.5 per cent; at the age of 50, 16 per cent; at the age of 55, 23.5 per cent; and at the age of 60, 39 per cent.

These were estimates which were submitted by Mr. Herbert D. Brown, the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency. That is the total cost—3 per cent when 20, 39 per cent when 60. Under the pending bill one-half of it will cost 2½ per cent of everybody's salary, the 2½ per cent being sufficient to pay the entire assessment of the younger men, but being sufficient only to pay a modicum of the cost of those of 50 or 60 years of age or older.

Further, Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Senate to another statement in the report. It was stated the other day in the discussion of this measure that it met with the President's approval, provided it did not make any drain upon the Treasury during the period of the war, and the statement was made that it was not going to make any drain upon the Treasury during the period of the war. That must be explained. The report tells us that the estimated receipts at 2½ per cent from employees during the year 1920 would be $9,000,000. Now, bear in mind, please, that the $9,000,000 is only supposed to pay one-half of the cost of this system. It must follow, then, that the whole cost when the system is finally installed would be twice $9,000,000, or $18,000,000 per year. I want Senators to note the table that is submitted here. In 1920 it is said that the receipts from the 2½ per cent would amount to $9,000,000; in 1921 this 2½ per cent would amount to $9,400,000; in 1922, $9,500,000; in 1923, $9,600,000; in 1924, $9,700,000; and in 1925, $9,770,000. The pensions during those years, it is said, would cost the following amounts: During 1920, $1,732,000; in 1921, $1,972,000; in 1922, $2,154,000; in 1923, $2,400,000; in 1924, $2,589,000; and in 1925, $2,778,000. But here you have no statement as to what is going to be the cost of this system during the subsequent years. It is a gradual and a rapidly increasing sum.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. KING. Has the Senator figured what it will cost if we take over the railroads, the telegraphs, the telephones, and all of the public utilities, and the copper mines, and have ten to fifteen million employees who will be under the civil service?

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President; but I am going to give you some figures that will startle you, even assuming that the amount of 2½ per cent of the pay roll will not increase during the next 60 years. The 2½ per cent assessment amounts to $9,000,000 per annum; that is, one-half the cost of this system. The total cost of the system, therefore, would be $18,000,000 per year, and for 60 years the aggregate cost of this system would be $1,080,000,000. One-half of the cost to the Government for 60 years would be $540,000,000, and one-half of the cost to the employees for 60 years would be $540,000,000.

I am referring to that at this particular time because under the scheme which was prepared by this committee when I had the honor to be the chairman of it, the total cost to the Government of that system for 60 years, which would be self-sustaining after it is fully and completely installed, would be $172,351,800. The cost the first year, or the moment that this system is inaugurated, if my amendment were adopted, would be $2,890,500. Under it the assessments can not be in any event in excess of 8 per cent, and the cost of the pension system in excess of 8 per cent for all employees, as contemplated, is to be borne by the Government. Under that system, which I shall explain a little more fully a little later on, the expense to the Government would increase for a period of 21 years, when, according to Dr. Herbert D. Brown, it would reach a peak, amounting for that year to $6,207,600; and then it runs down lower and lower, until 60 years from the date of the inauguration of the system, when the cost to the Government would be $100.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the Senator think that as soon as the operation of the bill began to increase this burden upon the employees, the political pressure which they can exert would be utilized for the purpose of repealing so much of the law as requires them to pay one-half of this expense, putting the whole thing upon the Government?

Mr. POMERENE. There is not any doubt at all about it; and I am here to suggest that, in my belief, when the employees who receive these higher salaries say that they authorize anybody to speak for them in favor of this bill those same representatives will not appear for them in connection with any other legislation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Colorado asked if amendments would not be offered putting the whole burden upon the Government in the future. Would not that be so in the case of the Senator's bill, if it were passed, or any other bill that might be passed? Might not amendments be offered in the same line? Why should that apply to one bill more than others?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, anything can possibly happen; but I shall discuss that feature a little later on.

I want to call attention, and particularly the attention of the Senator from Tennessee, to the figures contained in this report. According to this estimate submitted by Dr. Maddrill, the two and a half per cent, as I said before, will amount during the first year to $9,000,000, and the pensions during that year will amount to $1,732,000, and it is estimated that that would leave an excess of $6,900,000 in the Treasury, and that that would be a saving. But the Senator and his advisers overlook the fact that his bill contemplates the retirement of something over 7,000 employees per year.

Mr. McKELLAR. About 7,500.

Mr. POMERENE. Now, these superannuated employees are divided into classes. Some of them are wholly inefficient; some of them may be 25 per cent efficient; some of them 50 per cent efficient. Now, if you are going to displace 7,500 employees, assuming for the sake of the argument that the average is 50 per cent inefficient, you must, to do their work, put on 3,750 new employees, and you have got to pay them, but this bill that is not going to cost the Government anything does not take that fact into account.

Mr. President, there is another proposition to which I want to call the attention of Senators. I assume that I do not need to argue with Senators the necessity of having a reserve fund in any scheme of insurance. The laws of all the States require it; common sense and common prudence suggest it, and business principles demand it; yet under this bill—I read from page 8, line 15:

> The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered to invest, from time to time, in interest-bearing securities of the United States such portions of the "civil-service retirement fund" hereby created as in his judgment may not be immediately required for the payment of annuities, refunds, and allowances as herein provided.

In other words, under this scheme the employees of the Government are paying each year into the Treasury 2½ per cent of their salaries, and it is not to be reinvested, except within the option of the Secretary of the Treasury himself. There is nothing mandatory about it. He is not required to invest the funds in any kind of securities. Those moneys can be used for other purposes. They are trust funds, and trust funds always ought to be kept in trust for the cestui que trust, and unless these funds are thus invested you will simply have the Government's promise to pay under this legislation. In other words, you have a claim with which you can go to the Court of Claims, and I am not going to take the time of the Senate to discuss the length of time and the inconvenience to which claimants will be put.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator think that any better disposition of the trust funds could be made than to put them in the charge of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be invested in bonds of the Government of the United States? Furthermore, the Senator failed to read all of the provision, and I shall do so now:

> And the income derived from such investments shall constitute a part of said fund for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 11 of this act.

I think the Senator surely can not deny that that provision of the bill constitutes a proper trust fund and makes all proper safeguards.

Mr. POMERENE. I am afraid the Senator has failed to catch my point. My point is that under whatever system is adopted, whether it is the one in the Senator's bill, the one in my substitute, or in any other, it should be made mandatory upon those who are administering the bill to keep this reserve fund invested; and, in order to demonstrate to the Senate that I am not alone in this view of the question, I am going to send to the desk a letter which I received from Mr. George T. Keyes, secretary of the National Civil Service Reform League, and I ask that it may be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

NATIONAL CIVIL SERVICE REFORM LEAGUE,
New York, November 12, 1918.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR POMERENE: With regard to the McKellar retirement bill which, I understand, is unfinished business, will you be good enough to send me a copy of any bill which you may be planning to propose for a substitute measure?

I have just noticed a "joker" in the pending bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, which raises a new and grave objection to the present form of that bill.

The public and the employees have been led to believe by the debates and the apparent intent of the bill itself that the money withheld from the salaries of employees would be held at interest in each employee's name, in an inviolable retirement fund.

But actually, I have just discovered, the bill only provides for crediting to each employee the amounts of his contributions and the interest thereon. The actual money contributed is to be used by the Secretary of the Treasury to pay for the retirement of those already of retirement age. Only "such portions" of the contributions are held in reserve, in the name of the individual contributors, "as in his judgment may not immediately be required for the payment of annuities, refunds, and allowances." (Sec. 8, p. 8, line 18.)

Instead of accumulating a fund, therefore, the Government is accumulating a debt. For a few years the receipts will outbalance the payments, as the report on the bill (No. 574, p. 7) indicates. But after that, or beginning about 1930, there will no longer be any fund from which to pay the then rapidly amounting costs of retirement. It will be necessary for Congress to make annual appropriations to repay the amounts "borrowed" from the employees then to be retired with compound interest, and the amount of these repayments has not even been computed.

The proposed disbursement of reserves is exactly analogous to the systems of the now bankrupt insurance companies and fraternal organizations that failed to maintain their reserve funds intact. There is no escaping the certain nemesis that overtakes such schemes.

From the employees' point of view the scheme is perilous. The present Congress can not pledge future Congresses to the repayment of these amounts. Appropriations for that purpose may be delayed or even denied. All that the employee will have, instead of the "fund" he believes he is accumulating, is a "claim" against the Government. Anyone familiar with the endless procedure necessary to collect even the most just claim against the Government will readily agree that the position of the employees depending on a claim instead of a fund will be precarious.

The language of the bill is clear on this point once it is called to one's attention. But I am satisfied that neither the Members of Congress nor the public nor the employees have had their attention directed to it. Nobody who reads section 8 attentively can now doubt that the retirement fund proposed in S. 4637 is doomed to certain collapse within, at most, 15 years, unless Congress makes very large extra appropriations.

I hope you will have an opportunity to make the point clear to the Senate.

Sincerely, yours, GEORGE T. KEYES,
Secretary.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, there is another feature of this bill to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate, and that is the experience that Great Britain has had with this same subject. I am not going to take the time of the Senate this afternoon to go into all the details of that history. I do not come freshly from it, and many of the facts have escaped my memory; but I do remember certain of the controversies that arose.

In the early part of the last century they adopted a straight pension bill; that is, a scheme which was sustained entirely by the public treasury. There were in Great Britain two classes of employees, as there are in this country—one, the classified service; the other, the unclassified service. Those who were in the classified service for a time felt that they were the favored class, that they were getting pensions or annuities from the Government after the required years of service. After a time, however, it developed that those who were in the unclassified service were receiving higher pay for the service rendered than those who were in the classified service, and a commission was appointed for the purpose of investigation. The commission discovered that those in the classified or the pensioned service were, in fact, receiving lower pay than the others for this reason: Every time the employees in the classified service made an appeal for an increase in their salary they were met with the cry, "Why, you are pensioned. The Government is paying for your pension. We respectfully decline to increase your wages." That objection can be made to at least the extent of 50 per cent in the case of this bill, because it is supposed to be one-half payable out of the Public Treasury.

Mr. President, I think the most intelligent student of this subject that I have come in contact with in the years that I have given to the subject is Mr. Herbert D. Brown, now at the head of the Bureau of Efficiency. I read from his testimony as quoted in the hearings before the committee on the United States Senate on Senate bill 3079 and Senate bill 5673, page 97:

The conclusions to be drawn from Great Britain's century of experience in pensioning its civil employees are very definite. That experience shows that pensions paid out of the public treasury as pure gratuities are certain to be taken into account in fixing salaries, and a pension system thus becomes, in effect, a contributory system. As soon as the employees realize that they are contributing to their own pension they at once demand that, on separation from the service for any cause whatever, the value of their contributions shall be returned to them in some form. It is in recognition of the reluctance of human nature to give something for nothing—shown first by the officers of the Government in taking a pension into account in fixing salaries, and next by the employees in their unwillingness to forfeit their contributions under any circumstances—that the pension system of England was modified by the act of September 20, 1909.

Mr. Brown continues, and on page 183 of the same report states:

The English pension system is, therefore, not a free and absolute system of gratuities at all, but a system of theoretical contributions from the employees' salaries, more or less adequate to pay the benefits given. Whatever it may have been in the beginning, that is what it has become through the policy—a policy sure to develop under a system of gratuities, human nature being what it is—of taking the pension into consideration in fixing salaries.

Mr. Brown, on page 186, says:

There must be a sharp differentiation between accrued liabilities and future liabilities. The contributions made by present employees should be held in reserve to pay future pensions, and not consumed in paying pensions for past services. The accrued liabilities must be paid by the State or the contributed fund will soon become insolvent.

And this, as I construe the action of the committee when I was chairman of it, was in part, at least, responsible for the adoption of the scheme which is proposed in the substitute measure.

Now, Senators, if I may take a little time to discuss the proposed amendment—and I shall make my statement as brief as I can, consistently with the importance of the measure—I may say that the basic principles of the bill were taken from a report made by a commission appointed by President Taft, known as the Efficiency Commission—I may not have the name of it accurately—and that was modified after some considerable study of it and consultation with students on the subject. The basic principle of that bill was to adopt a system whereby each man would be an insurer for himself, and not an insurer one for another. It must follow that in adopting any system we can not at first make it entirely self-sustaining, because if we were to take the older employees and make an assessment against them which would be sufficient to purchase an annuity of $600 when they reached the retirement age, it would require, when they become 60 years of ago, 39 per cent of their salary, assuming that the salary was the average salary. It was thought by the committee at that time if we could adopt any system whereby certain assessments would be made and kept in a separate account for each individual, and the assessments thus made put at interest at the rate of 4 per cent, compounding it annually, it would serve not only the purpose of insurance but the purpose of a savings bank as well. So in the first section of the proposed substitute bill we provide that there shall be an assessment made against the salary of each employee in the classified service which, computed to the nearest tenth of a dollar, will be sufficient, with interest thereon at 4 per cent per annum, compounded annually, "to purchase from the United States an annuity, payable quarterly throughout life, for every such employee on arrival at the age of retirement, as herein provided," that age being 70, but under no circumstances could this assessment be more than 8 per cent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Substantially speaking, the system provided in section 1 of the Senator's amendment is a compulsory requirement upon the employees to buy annuities. Is not that all that it amounts to?

Mr. POMERENE. Why, that part of it is compulsory; yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, they can buy their annuities now, and the Senator's bill would virtually, under certain regulations, compel the employees to do so. That is about the substance of it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee if the bill which bears his name is not also compulsory?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is compulsory, of course; but it is compulsory upon the agreement of the employees through their representatives.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, so is the other, as far as that goes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I beg the Senator's pardon; the employees have never adopted this amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I wish to say, in this connection, I do not propose to father legislation simply because the beneficiaries want that particular kind of legislation. Their wishes should be considered, but they should not be controlling.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Ohio pardon me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. KING. As I interpret the bill offered by the Senator from Tennessee, it is compulsory in this sense: It compels the Government of the United States to pay 50 per cent of the annual assessment and it compels the employees to pay 50 per cent.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is exactly right.

Mr. KING. So it is compulsory, in morals at least, to the same extent as the bill offered by the Senator from Ohio. In one instance the employee pays it all; in the other he is compelled to pay half of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, if he will look at the provision in the bill and the substitute he will find that the compulsory feature applies precisely the same.

Mr. POMERENE. No. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the further fact that in the proposed substitute, if it becomes a law, the employee is only compelled to provide for his own insurance. In the bill of the Senator from Tennessee the employees of the younger class and those drawing the higher salaries are compelled not only to pay their own insurance but to pay a part of the insurance of their fellow employees.

Let me suggest further, in addition to what I said a moment ago, I realize the necessity for this legislation, and I know that two years ago the bill which was then proposed and adopted was pretty generally satisfactory.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask the Senator what the cost would be to the employees under each plan.

Mr. POMERENE. I will come to that. I discussed that in part while the Senator was out.

Mr. FLETCHER. Would the same amount of benefits accrue to them?

Mr. POMERENE. In general I can answer in this way: It is not quite the same, because the bill proposed by the committee divides them into four classes—A, B, C, and D. In that respect it differs somewhat, but generally speaking in view of the fifty-fifty plan adopted the cost of the McKellar bill to the Government will be twice what the cost of the Pomerene bill will be to the Government, if I may so call it. More than that, after it is installed completely then the cost of the McKellar bill continues, whereas the cost of the substitute bill will be nil to the Government.

Mr. FLETCHER. And the percentage of cost to the employees?

Mr. POMERENE. I have referred to that.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will pardon me a moment——

Mr. POMERENE. Just one moment. I am asked a question, and I want to answer it as nearly as I can. Senators who will go into this subject will discover that these expenditures have not been figured with entirely actuarial accuracy. There are a good many elements which enter into the question. One of them will be the amount of the salary; another will be the age; a third will depend upon the mortuary tables which are adopted from time to time, and so forth. There are a number of elements which will make it almost impossible to determine the amount with precision. That is particularly true of the bill which is offered by the committee, because there the employees are divided into four classes, and necessarily the statistics which might be true as to one class would not be true as to the others. The cost of the substitute bill, based upon average salaries, the Senator will find was given by Mr. Herbert D. Brown and is contained on page 2 of the report which was submitted to the Senate February 13, 1917, on the bill then favorably reported.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will yield to me for a moment——

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the question the Senator from Florida asked can be well answered by referring to the last proviso in the first section of the substitute, which is as follows:

Provided, however, That the deductions made from the salary, pay, or compensation of persons hereafter entering the service shall not exceed 8 per cent thereof.

I think that answers the question of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that is the maximum assessment on the average salary, and if he was getting twice the average salary, of course, the assessment would be cut in two. I can simply give a very general statement in that behalf. If the salaries amount to $3,000 or $4,000, it would not be more, probably, than one-third or one-half of the 3 per cent, which is the estimated assessment for those who are 20 years of age.

Mr. President, I want to go on now with the explanation of the so-called substitute bill. It provides that all of these assessments shall be kept in the Treasury and they must be invested in securities, in bonds of the United States, farm-loan bonds, State bonds, municipal bonds, or county bonds which will meet the approval of the administering board. In other words, we provide specifically for a reserve fund out of which all the withdrawals are to be paid.

I want Senators to bear this fact in mind, too, that under the substitute bill a separate account is kept with each individual. If he withdraws at any time before he becomes 60 years of age, then all his assessments plus accumulations with 4 per cent compound interest must be refunded to him. If he dies meanwhile, then all these assessments plus accumulations must be paid to his estate. During the period between 60 and 70 years the committee at that time thought it would be wise to require the annuity which his accumulated assessments and their earnings would buy to be paid in annual installments so long as he should live, and then in any event, if he should die before he received annuities equal to the amount of his assessment plus the accumulations, that money shall all be refunded to his estate. Our thought was at that time that this method was in the nature of a compulsory savings account, each one dependent upon himself, no one insuring for the other.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. That looks very much like a regular insurance plan, with this exception: Ordinarily an insurance company would require certain premiums to be paid, and the party taking out the insurance would be subject to a physical examination. Here you are insuring everybody, the old, the decrepit, the ill, the maimed, the halt, and those who are afflicted otherwise. You are taking in everybody. Each man will carry his own insurance. If he dies he gets back all he paid with the accumulations, and if he retires he gets back all he paid in with the accumulations. I do not see how you can maintain the system in that way.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me a minute. I can answer only one at a time. If the suggestion which the Senator from Florida makes has any application at all it applies to both schemes. The question of the man's health does not enter into it at all. So long as he is an employee, so long as he is serving and receiving a salary these deductions are made. If by reason of poor health he should retire or if he should unfortunately die before he reaches the retirement age all the assessments and the accumulations are refunded. In that respect it differs very materially from the insurance problem.

Now, let me go briefly to the question of the cost of this system. Let me say that at the time the substitute bill was being prepared and we were having our hearings it was suggested that the Bureau of Efficiency should try to get entirely accurate returns showing the number of employees in the several departments, the age of the employees, their salaries, and so forth. It did not seem that it was possible to get complete returns, and at the time I severed my connection with the committee Mr. Brown, who had this matter in charge, was not able to get complete returns. So I take it all the figures which we may give here must be subject to certain modifications; but I think they may be regarded as reasonably accurate.

At the time the report was prepared it was believed that there were 5,000 officers and employees who were 70 years of age or over. The report of the Senator from Tennessee shows the number now to be about 7,500. But there is this difference between the two bills: Dr. Brown's estimate of the number of employees was based upon a retiring age of 70. That of the pending bill is based upon a retiring age of 65 and 68.

Mr. McKELLAR. Depending upon the class.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes. Now, with the 5,000 officers and employees over 70 years of age it was estimated that their average salary would amount to about $1,160, making the total salaries $5,800,000. Assuming the average pay to be $1,160, then the average annuity payable to them would be $550 per year, making the total annuity $2,750,000. It was thought at the time that it would be best for the first year to make the annuities payable out of the appropriations which had been made for salary account of these employees, and then under the plan which we adopted it was thought that the annuities would amount to a total sum of $2,750,000 the first year. We could then return 10 per cent of the $5,800,000 thus appropriated for salary account into the Treasury, amounting to $580,000, and that would still leave $2,470,000 in the salary account which could be used for the purpose of employing new clerks to take the place of those who had become superannuated. That would employ 2,500 men and women—that is, new beginners—at salaries of $900 to $1,000 each.

As I stated awhile ago, the total cost of this system to the Government until it should become completely self-sustaining, namely, 60 years hence, would be $172,042,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. KING. That would be based upon the salaries now paid to the employees who would come under the classified service, would it not, so that there would not be an increase in the salaries or compensation paid? There would be necessarily an increase in the amount to be paid ultimately?

Mr. POMERENE. I think the Senator overlooks the fact that there is a limitation upon the amount of annuity to $600 per year, except that it shall in no event exceed 50 per cent of the salary.

Mr. KING. I had that in mind.

Mr. McKELLAR. They are all in one class.

Mr. POMERENE. There is only one class.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is, in the Senator's bill.

Mr. KING. I did not overlook that. I had in mind that limitation, but anticipated that with the demand that is being made now very vociferously by employees of the Government for an increase in compensation there would likewise be an emendation of that bill, if it should become a law, so as to increase the amount of the annuity which shall be paid.

Mr. POMERENE. That, of course, is possible, but I may say that I have been in sympathy with the demand for increased pay for the employees of the Government not only during the last two years, but there should have been a readjustment of all the salaries in my judgment. Some of the employees are underpaid, some of them have been overpaid, and I think the Congress of the United States could very well afford to investigate this subject and enact some law readjusting all salaries.

Now, as bearing upon the proposed substitute, I want to send to the desk to be read a carbon copy of a letter which was sent to me under date of February 10, 1917, from Dr. Herbert D. Brown, Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency. It gives a statement as to the cost of the proposed plan in the substitute amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

FEBRUARY 10, 1917.

HON. ATLEE POMERENE,
Chairman Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR POMERENE: In response to your request, I submit the following statement regarding the approximate cost to the Government of the retirement plan for the competitive classified civil service contained in Senate bill 3079 as amended by your committee to-day:

Stated briefly, your bill provides that employees in the competitive classified service shall be retired at age 70 on annuities equal to half pay, with a maximum of $600. The annuities of employees now eligible for retirement must be paid wholly by the Government. Employees not yet eligible for retirement are required to set aside each month such an amount of money as may be necessary, with interest at 4 per cent compounded annually, to provide their own annuities at age 70, except that no employee shall be required to contribute more than 8 per cent of his salary. Since many of the employees are now at ages at which 8 per cent of their salaries with interest will not provide the full amount of their annuities it will also be necessary for the Government to provide the difference between the amount of their contributions and the total cost of their annuities.

According to the last annual report of the Civil Service Commission, there were on June 30, 1916, 296,926 employees in the competitive classified civil service. Of these, approximately 47,000 are fourth-class postmasters, who are not eligible for retirement under your bill. This leaves approximately 250,000 persons who are included. Of this number, about 47,000 are clerks and miscellaneous employees in post offices, about 34,500 are city carriers, about 43,500 are rural carriers, and about 22,000 are railway postal clerks, or a total of about 147,000 postal employees, leaving about 103,000 employees outside of the Postal Service.

As no statistics were available concerning the salaries and length of service of the employees at the various ages on which to base an estimate of the cost of retiring the employees, you procured on May 17, 1916, the passage of a Senate resolution directing the Bureau of Efficiency to collect statistics on which to base such an estimate. The bureau accordingly requested the various departments and independent establishments to supply the necessary information on forms prepared for the purpose. As most of this information had to be collected from post offices and other offices scattered throughout the country, the returns were slow in coming in and are not yet complete. Up to January 15, 1917, returns covering 203,141 employees in the service of the Government, including unclassified employees, had been received.

In order to use these incomplete returns it was necessary to assume that the returns received for the various classes of employees were representative, and to prorate them up to known totals. For example, 26,703 returns for city letter carriers were received out of a total of about 34,500. The number of carriers of each age, salary, and length of service, as shown by the tabulation of the returns received, was therefore prorated up by a factor which brought the total number for all ages up to 34,500.

The tabulation of these returns, prorated up to the total number of employees known to be in the competitive classified service, showed that there are now about 5,000 employees who are 70 years of age or over, and that their total annuities the first year would amount to about $2,750,000 if all retired at once. This cost would steadily increase for about 25 years, when the annual cost to the Government would be between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000. After that time the cost to the Government would steadily decrease until, at the end of about 50 years, it would cease with the death of the last employee who received Government aid.

This annual cost for the annuities which the deductions from the employees' salaries will not provide is by no means altogether an added expense to the Government. Many of the aged employees are receiving salaries that they do not wholly earn. Under the terms of the bill each employee's annuity is to be paid the first year out of the salary he is receiving at the time of retirement; 10 per cent of that salary is to be covered into the Treasury; and the balance is to be used, with other similar balances, to employ young clerks in the lower grades. If one active young clerk can do the work of two superannuated clerks, then the saving in salary will be sufficient to pay the annuities until such time as the superannuated clerks would have resigned, if not retired. If all of the 5,000 employees who are 70 years of age or over should retire at once, the 10 per cent of their salaries which would be covered into the Treasury would amount the first year to about $580,000. Unless Congress makes appropriations for a larger number of efficient clerks than the departments now have, a considerable part of this saving should continue from year to year.

I trust it may not be out of place for me to add a word in regard to the experience of the Bureau of Efficiency in its efforts to introduce improved methods of handling the Government's business. The most serious difficulty that the bureau has encountered in introducing better business methods into the departments has been the inability of the aged employees to learn new ways of doing their work. If this difficulty is removed by the retirement of these aged employees, we believe that new methods can be introduced far more rapidly and much greater savings can be accomplished than will be possible under present conditions.

Very respectfully,

HERBERT D. BROWN,
Chief Bureau of Efficiency.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I may say I had hoped to have a more detailed review of this pending legislation from Dr. Brown, but because of many other official engagements he was not able to give it the time he had hoped to give to it, and was for some days called out of the city. But I have from him a letter bearing date November 12, 1918, in which in a very general way he reviews the principal provisions of the pending bill and the substitute therefor, and in order that Senators may have the benefit of his views I send this letter to the desk and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES BUREAU OF EFFICIENCY,
Washington, November 12, 1918.

HON. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR POMERENE: You asked me this morning for a statement concerning the relative cost of Senate bill 633 introduced by you in 1917 and Senate bill 4637 introduced by Senator McKELLAR some days ago. These bills provide for the retirement of the civil employees of the Government.

I will not undertake in this letter to go into the details of the plans, but will try to answer your question in general terms, and for the purpose of this answer will assume that the benefits paid under the two bills are equal. The benefits paid under the two bills are not exactly equal, but for the purpose of comparison it is fair to assume that they are. The principal difference between the two bills is this: Your bill is intended to be self-supporting after the employees now in the service have passed away—that is to say, the deductions from salaries with interest are intended to be sufficient to pay for the annuities of new entrants. Senator McKELLAR'S bill is intended to be a so-called "50-50" plan. If the benefits under it are the same as yours the cost of it the first year will be the same as yours, but with each succeeding year the cost to the Government will be greater than yours, until finally, after 30 or 40 years, his bill will impose a burden on the Government equal to half of the annual payments or annuities, whereas your bill at that time will impose no burden whatever on the Government.

You also ask whether the plan provided for by Senator McKELLAR'S bill will be self-supporting during the first years of its operation if enacted into law—that is to say, will it require any aid from the Federal Government during those years? My answer to your question is that it will not require any aid from the Government during the first years. Neither will your plan. The deductions in both cases are more than sufficient to pay the annuities during the first few years, because the number of elegibles will be few at first. But as the number reaching retirement age will increase at about the same rate that the service has increased during the past 30 or 40 years, it is obvious that in a short time the income will be inadequate to cover the entire cost of the plan. As stated before, the two plans may be considered equal in point of cost in the beginning, but with each succeeding year Senator McKELLAR'S bill will cost more than yours, until finally at the end of 30 or 40 years your bill will be self-supporting, while his will require contribution from the Government equal to half its cost.

Strictly speaking, it is inaccurate to say that the plan under either bill would be self-supporting in the beginning. Your plan will be self-supporting ultimately, but Senator McKELLAR'S never will be. Under both your bill and Senator McKELLAR'S the deductions from the pay of the employee remain the property of the employee, and are returned to him in some form whenever he leaves the service. But if those deductions are taken in the first years to pay other employees than those to whom they belong, the plan is obviously not self-supporting even in the beginning, for the deductions will ultimately have to be returned with interest to the original contributors.

The Government, of course, can borrow the employees' contribution. Until the annual payments exceed the contributions no appropriation will be necessary, but at best the moneys obtained by the Government in that way can only be considered as a loan. After a yew years payments to pensioners will exceed the contributions by the employees, and when that time is reached it will be necessary to make appropriations from the Treasury to meet the deficit. That time, of course, will be reached at an earlier date under Senator McKELLAR'S bill than under yours, and the appropriation required from year to year will steadily increase as compared with yours until, as I stated before, in 30 or 40 years his will require a continuous and increasing appropriation from the Government, whereas yours will by that time be self-supporting.

Very respectfully,

HERBERT D. BROWN,
Chief Bureau of Efficiency.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as shedding some light upon the letter which has just been read, I have before me a statement showing the cost of the substitute bill which I intend to offer for a period of 60 years. This statement was prepared by Dr. Brown at or about the time that the committee reported to the Senate the so-called substitute bill about two years ago, and, without reading it, I ask that it be incorporated in the RECORD for the information of Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. Before we adjourn to-day, I want to ask the Senator from Ohio a question, and if he is unable to answer it I want to refer it to the Senator from Tennessee. The question is purely for information or for interpretation of the bill now before the Senate.

I have given a good deal of study to this subject. I was formerly chairman of the committee of which the Senator from Ohio afterwards became chairman, only to be succeeded by the Senator from Tennessee. I had the honor of introducing a bill, which was reported favorably by the committee, which is essentially like the bill reported by the Senator from Ohio, differing only in what I regard as unimportant details. I gave a good deal of investigation to the subject then, but I have not—and it is my own fault entirely—become so familiar with the bill which is being brought forward now by the Senator from Tennessee.

It seems to be assumed in the debate that I have heard that the contributions to be made by the employees in the classified civil service begin with their introduction to the service. I am entirely unable to find any warrant for that assumption in the so-called McKellar bill, and I should like to know when these contributions which are to be made by the employees are to begin.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator is speaking——

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator from Ohio will allow me, I will make my question complete. The bill in its first section does not define in any way to whom it is to be applicable. In the second section there is provided a series of payments to be made by the United States to four classes of employees. I need not mention the classes A, B, and C, because they are the older employees, but as to class D, which is the last one, the bill provides:

> Class D shall include all employees to whom this act applies who shall have served the United States for a total period of 15 years or more, but less than 20 years.

No payments are to be made, I assume, to any employee unless he or she has served the Government at least 15 years.

I turn to section 8 and I find that it provides for reserving from the basic salary or pay or compensation—now I quote—> of each person to whom this act applies a sum equal to 2½ per cent of such person's basic salary, pay, or compensation.

If I were called upon to construe or interpret the bill with the light I now have, I would be compelled to hold that it applied only to the four classes which are enumerated in the second section, and that there was no obligation on the part of any employee to begin his contribution to the fund until he had been in the employ of the Government at least 15 years. If that be the interpretation of the bill the amount required from the General Treasury of the United States in order to make the payments that are provided for would be very largely increased, as is evident, for the actuarial computation with which we are provided and which is intended to give us information with regard to the cost to the Government does not proceed upon any such basis. I may be wholly wrong about this interpretation. If I am, I should like either the Senator from Ohio or the Senator from Tennessee to set me right.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as the question of the Senator from Iowa is a very pertinent one, and as it relates to the pending bill, I will yield to the Senator from Tennessee to answer it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in answer to the question of the Senator from Iowa, I will say that it is the purpose of the bill to apply to all employees of the classified civil service; and there is an addition found in section 4 of the bill in the following language:

> SEC. 4. That the provisions of this act shall include employees of the Library of Congress and the Botanic Gardens, excepting such persons as may be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and may be extended by Executive order, upon recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, to include any employee or group of employees in the civil service of the United States not classified at the time of the passage of this act. The President shall have power, in his discretion, to exclude from the operation of this act or include therein any employee or group of employees whose tenure of office is intermittent or of uncertain duration.

The question of the Senator from Iowa, as I understand, is whether the bill applies only to those employees who have been in the service for 15 years or whether it applies to all members of the classified service?

Mr. CUMMINS. My question is, When does the obligation of the employee to contribute a portion of his compensation begin, or, to state it more accurately, when does the right of the Secretary of the Treasury or any one of the various departments of the Government to withhold salaries begin?

Mr. McKELLAR. It begins on the first day of the second month after the month in which this act is approved, that there shall be deducted and withheld from the basic salary——

Mr. CUMMINS. I see nothing whatever in the bill that will permit that construction.

Mr. McKELLAR. If there is not, if the Senator from Iowa will suggest an amendment that will so provide, I shall be very glad; or if he will not suggest it, I shall be very glad to do it. I think that does sufficiently appear from section 4; but if there is any doubt about it, I shall be very glad to clear up that doubt.

Mr. CUMMINS. Section 4 does not remove the doubt, because that is intended simply to bring certain employees within its scope who might not be generally considered to be classified civil-service employees.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would it meet the Senator's objection to strike out, in line 18, on page 7, the words "of each person to whom this act applies" and to substitute therefor "each person in the classified civil service"? I should be very glad to accept that amendment if the Senator will offer it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I merely rose to suggest what seemed to me, from the standpoint of the author of the bill, to be a defect.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am rather inclined to think the Senator from Iowa is entirely correct about it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not want to undertake the task of amending the bill, because, as the Senator from Tennessee knows, I am in favor of the contributory plan, the plan which is in effect a compulsory saving fund, supplemented by a provision which would enable us to put the plan into execution; that is, an appropriation by the Government for such sums as may be required to retire the aged employees who are now so old and who have been so long in the service that they can not build up for themselves a fund which will be required to support them after retirement; but I think that whatever bill is passed ought to be as perfect as possible.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator for calling the matter to my attention, and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to strike out, in line 18, on page 7, the words "of each person to whom this act applies" and to substitute therefor the words "of each person in the classified civil service."

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, before that is done—I do not know that I have any objection to it—it seems to me there is an amendment pending.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was merely asking unanimous consent, and I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well; I have no objection.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to thank the Senator from Iowa for calling my attention to what seems to be a very patent error in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POLLOCK in the chair). Will the Senator please restate his amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 7, line 18, strike out the words "to whom this act applies" and insert "in the classified civil service."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 18, it is proposed to strike out the words "to whom this act applies" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "in the classified civil service."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the amendment is too broad, because there are a great many employees in the classified civil service who are not within the scope of the bill. For instance, fourth-class postmasters are all in the classified civil service.

Mr. POMERENE. And, Mr. President, if the Senator from Tennessee will allow me also to make a suggestion in that connection, I am not advised myself, but the Senator seems in the preparation of this bill to have given special attention in section 4 to employees of the Library of Congress and the Botanic Garden, as if they were not generally understood to be in the classified service.

Mr. McKELLAR. There may be some confusion about that, and I ask to modify my amendment so as to read "in the classified civil service, subject to the exceptions made by this bill." Will that be satisfactory?

Mr. CUMMINS. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that the amendment ought to be in section 8, and it ought to make it perfectly clear that the reservation of salary shall begin with the introduction of the employee into the classified service.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator suggest the words he thinks will accomplish that purpose? If he will do so, I will be delighted to accept the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator from Ohio in his address.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Ohio has finished, as I understand.

Mr. POMERENE. Not quite; but I have no objection to the amendment being made.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from Ohio desires to proceed, I will have an amendment ready to meet the objections set forth by the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Colorado in just a moment while the Senator from Ohio proceeds with his argument.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I had about concluded; but lest I may be misunderstood, I want to make it perfectly clear that what I have said this afternoon is not to be construed as being in opposition to a retirement plan. I am most earnestly in favor of it. I think we ought to adopt some plan of retirement, not only from a humanitarian standpoint as it relates to the employee himself, but from the standpoint of administrative efficiency. I do not believe that Senators comprehend the condition that exists in some of the departments. There are men and women in the departments who ought not to be there, because they have reached a point of superannuation where they ought to be cared for in some way, no matter whether their present condition is due to their own fault or to some other cause.

More than that, I can understand, as Senators can generally, when there is some young man or young woman in one of the departments, the very embodiment of efficiency and intelligence, working along at a modest salary, eager to improve and to advance, who finds just ahead of him or her on the pay roll some elderly persons who perhaps are not doing one-half of the work that the younger ones are doing and yet are receiving higher salaries, there is enough of human nature in all of the employees to rebel against that condition. It destroys the morale of the department.

I think that we have progressed so far in this country as to warrant the belief that those who have studied the question sincerely feel that there ought to be some reasonable plan of retirement adopted. I am anxious that the plan adopted shall be a satisfactory plan to the public and reasonably satisfactory to the employee, but I am at the same time morally certain that when the employees of this Government understand the plan that is proposed in the pending bill, which was presented by the committee and known as the McKellar bill—when they understand that many of the young, thrifty, energetic, intelligent employees will pay the cost of the annuities which their fellow employees will receive—they will be disposed to rebel, and they will have reason to complain.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator concludes I should like to ask him a question or two.

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think, in view of the immense and stupendous work lying before Congress in connection with preparing for demobilization, the work of reconstruction, and all of the post-war matters that will call for solution, that it is an opportune time now to take up this question? Furthermore, is it opportune to take it up in view of the fact that there is a claim made by many that the Government will take over the railroads, the telegraphs, the telephones, the power plants, the packing plants, the copper works, and the coal mines of the country and operate them as governmental instrumentalities and agencies, in which event all of those persons so employed would pass over into the classified service, so that we would have upon the classified service roll not 1,000,000 but 3,000,000, 4,000,000, 5,000,000, 6,000,000, possible 10,000,000 employees? In view of the fact that those questions are going to be presented to Congress for consideration, does the Senator think that it is opportune now to take up this question?

Mr. POMERENE. Well, Mr. President, I think I am conscious of the difficulties which are suggested by the Senator from Utah, but I do not regard them as insurmountable. We are always going to have new questions coming up. We have not reached Government ownership of railroads yet. We do know that a serious condition prevails in some of the departments. I realize very fully that there are many, many employees here who may be classed as war employees, most of whom have been placed in the classified service; and while on the face of things it seems that they have received reasonable salaries, yet at the same time they have been the victims of landlords and hotels and restaurants to such an extent that they have not been able to save much out of their salaries. Many of them will be separated from the service very soon; many of them have already been discharged. I do not believe that we ought to wait until there is a complete readjustment of all these difficult problems. That would be simply postponing the day. I should like to see some legislation upon this subject at this session if it is at all possible.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will detain the Senate only five or six minutes to answer one or two of the propositions that have been so ably put forth by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

I am delighted to know that the Senator from Ohio does not oppose civil service retirement legislation. That is not his position at all. His position is that he does not approve of the bill which has been reported by the committee and which embodies what is commonly known as the half-and-half plan, but does approve a bill that was reported out previously by the committee, although not acted upon by the Senate, under the terms of which the entire cost, or substantially the entire cost, of the bill would be paid by the employees, being, as I looked at it, a compulsory annuity plan of saving by the classified civil-service employees. I think the bill which has been reported by the committee and which is pending before the Senate and has been pending for some time should commend itself to every fair-minded person.

The Senator from Ohio objects to the amount of 2½ per cent being rather ruthlessly taken away from the employees whether the employees want it taken away or not. My answer to that is that under the terms of his bill it is an amount not exceeding 8 per cent that is ruthlessly taken away from the employees in the same way; and that is one of the reasons why, I imagine, some of the employees do not favor the plan put forward by the Senator from Ohio. It is that in the present bill 2½ per cent is taken away from the employees, and under the plan of the Senator from Ohio not exceeding 8 per cent might be taken away. It seems to me that that is a plan that ought not to be adopted by the Senate.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to another proposition. The Senator says this plan is unfair to the Government and unfair to the employees. Now, let us see whether it is or not. The only complaint about the plan put forward by the committee being unfair to the employees is that some of the higher-salaried employees—those who get, say, $2,000 or $2,500 or $3,000—pay a little more in proportion than those who get the smaller salaries. Very well; they are not complaining of it. I take it that there is not a man getting over $2,000 who is complaining of the 2½ per cent that will be taken from his salary. I have not heard of it. No one has complained to me.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether he has personal knowledge that that feature of the bill has been explained to the employees?

Mr. McKELLAR. It has not only been explained, but it has been carefully gone over with them. Men like Dr. Jordan, Dr. Beach, and other gentlemen connected with this plan that has been put forward here have understood it and have explained it to all of the employees, so far as I know, and the representatives of all, and they make no objection to it. It is true that it does bear a little bit harder on those, but under our principle of legislation we usually make the tax a little larger on those who are able to bear it, and it ought to be done. I do not believe any of them have complained, and the first complaint I have heard along that line has been the complaint of the Senator from Ohio.

I do not think we ought to seriously consider a complaint of that kind. If we are going to indulge in any partiality at all—and no plan can be absolutely perfect—I think we should let it be on the side of those who get the smallest salary. I think it is nothing but fair and right that that should be done.

But the Senator says that the committee's plan is unfair to the Government. Let us see whether it is unfair to the Government. The Government contributes 2½ per cent of this amount—one-half of it. What does the Government get in return for that contribution? According to the figures as they have been given by the Government's own agents, it has been shown by the proof in these hearings that there are 4,000 superannuated employees of the Government to-day who are absolutely doing no work, and are incapable physically or mentally of doing any work. The average salary of those employees is about $1,500; so that, if the Senator pleases, we are pensioning those 4,000 superannuated employees at the rate of $1,500 apiece, amounting to about $6,000,000.

Mr. KING rose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment, and I will yield to the Senator with pleasure. There are 3,500 of them, according to this plan, that are doing about half the amount of work that they ought to do, and that will amount to between two and three million dollars more of saving to the Government. What it costs the Government, according to the figures made by the Government expert, is about $9,000,000. What the Government gets back is something between eight and nine million dollars. By the way, the cost to the Government of $9,000,000 is only when the system gets into full working order. For many years it will not cost the Government a cent, according to these figures, but when it gets into full working order it will cost the Government $9,000,000 on the present basis. The Government, however, will be receiving back in saving, because of work actually done instead of work not done at all now, somewhere between eight and nine million dollars, so that the amount it will actually cost the Government is a mere pittance.

I beg the pardon of the Senator from Utah, and I now yield to him.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator has answered the point I had in mind.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to have had the pleasure of doing so.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if under his bill the employee is obliged to retire at a certain age?

Mr. McKELLAR. That does not occur until so many years after the bill has been in operation. At first they have an election to retire or not, for a certain number of years, which is mentioned in the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, you will not get rid of these inefficient employees unless they are obliged to retire?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; they are going to compel them to retire.

Now, just one or two other things.

I was glad to hear the Senator from Ohio say that he is in favor of retirement legislation. When we consider the fact that there are but two civilized Governments on the face of the earth that do not give their superannuated employees a retirement pension, it certainly seems that it is a subject worthy of our consideration. Those Governments are the Government of the United States and the Government of Turkey, if there is a Government of Turkey to-day, but as it was under the Sultan. The United States Government, the foremost Government in all the world, and Turkey, the hindmost Government perhaps of all of the world, are the only ones that fail to retire their superannuated employees. Practically every vigorous, prosperous corporation in this country provides for retirement, and very nearly all of them pay the entire cost of it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator if a great many of the Governments that retire their superannuated employees have not an old-age pension law?

Mr. McKELLAR. Some of them have, but a great many of them have not. I will say to the Senator that a great many of those Governments simply have a plan of retiring their superannuated employees at certain ages, and therefore the Government pays that annuity. It is small; it is not large, but in proportion it is about what is provided for in this bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does not the able Senator from Tennessee know that every man in this country who labors, in the field and the factory particularly, contributes to the wealth and support of this Government, and that the man who lives on the farm is quite as much entitled to this consideration and to share in the benefaction which the Government confers by this bill as the man who comes to Washington or accepts employment from the Government at other places at a larger salary and greater profits than he received at home?

Mr. McKELLAR. There is a basis for the Senator's question, of course; but the difference between the two is that here is a group of old people that have worn themselves out in the service of the Government itself. I think the Senator must see that there is a distinction. I have never studied the question of general old-age pensions. I feel very kindly about it, and I hope that some system will be established by which general old-age pensions may be provided for in the future; but we can not provide for everything in this bill. For instance, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] suggests that we ought to put in this bill a prohibition against any increase in the civil service. Perhaps, in order to pass the bill, according to the Senator's view, we ought to provide that the Government shall not take over the railroads; but that legislation is not before the Senate now. I think that legislation ought to stand on its own bottom. We ought to discuss that on its merits when we get to it. We ought to consider this on its merits under existing conditions, under conditions that we know are right; and I take it that neither the Senator from Mississippi nor the Senator from Utah nor the Senator from any other State, if he will give the matter conscientious and careful investigation in the light of all the facts, will for a moment consider voting against a reasonable retirement bill, whether this bill or some other.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am sure the Senator from Tennessee has given serious thought and profound consideration to this question. I know he is always philanthropic, altruistic, and patriotic; but I can not overlook the fact that the man who comes from his home to Washington to engage in Government service receives a salary greater than he probably enjoyed at home, because he would not have come had it not been that he was endeavoring to better his pecuniary condition. He remains here for a time, works shorter hours, as has been suggested by the able Senator from Colorado—he lives a much easier, less laborious life, and after a few years is retired upon a pension.

To make myself more explicit, the Government employee leaves his employment in Mississippi or Tennessee, which pays him, we will say, $50 or $75 per month. He comes to Washington and receives $100 per month. After working a few months his wages are increased to $125 or $150 per month. Now, this same man leaves his parents, his brothers, and his sisters at home to toil, to produce the wealth that pays not only his salary but the taxes also which maintain the Government. As I stated a moment ago, he remains here a few years, and then, under this proposed bill, is retired upon a pension, while his people at home still labor to produce the wealth that pays his salary and all the salaries and expenses of the Government.

I submit, Mr. President, it is not just; it is not fair. I wish to state distinctly, however, that I have no objection to providing for an old-age pension. I think it is proper to take care of the men and women who have gone the full length of years and find themselves in the evening of life penniless. It is a proper employment of the governmental function, and it would give me pleasure to see that the evening of their days is spent above want. They should be afforded the necessary comforts of life; but I submit it is not fair to select a few, especially when you consider that the few selected have not endured the hardships that are experienced by the people who live on the farms.

It is a singular thing to me that nobody seems to care about the hardships or burdens that are piled upon the back of the farmer of this country. He is taxed without conscience, and when there are any favors to be given out by the Government he is left entirely off the list. The burdens and blessing of Government should rest alike on the rich and the poor, the weak and the strong. A just Government plays no favorites in the dispensation of its favors. The principle of partiality embodied in this bill is a dangerous principle, and I think its enactment will embark this Government on a policy that is going to press heavily upon a certain class of our people.

For that reason I am opposed to the bill proposed by the Senator from Tennessee, and shall vote against it. If, however, Mr. President, the able Senator shall propose a bill providing for an old-age pension, a bill that will do justice alike to all the people who need Government aid, I shall with great pleasure support that bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. There are several answers to the argument of the distinguished Senator from Mississippi. In the first place, comparatively few of the civil-service employees are here in Washington. Only a very small percentage of them are here. In the second place, very few of the civil-service employees in Washington or anywhere else make as much as the men back home. On the contrary, the men back home make more. I can give the Senator an illustration of that right here. The Senator says they ought to be penalized for coming here and accepting positions with the Government.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon; I did not say that.

Mr. McKELLAR. That would be the legitimate result of the Senator's argument.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Oh, no. They are not penalized at all, but they are rewarded for their coming here, and they come to get a better salary than they were receiving at home.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not agree with the Senator about that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Certainly the able Senator will not contend that it is penalizing the Government employees because we refuse to retire them upon a pension.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will withdraw the word "penalize." It is not always true, however, that a man makes more money here. I think as a rule he makes less money in the departments. He has less opportunities in the departments than he has at home. There is no doubt in the world about that; but he is serving the Government, and a great many of us like to serve the Government. I do not think it is an improper ambition to desire to serve the Government, whether in a large capacity or in a small capacity; but I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the ruling prices of labor to-day, which I believe are something like 65 to 72½ cents an hour, are more than is made by the ordinary department clerk. Ordinarily, in times of peace, I think the salaries here run from $900 to $1,200; not much more than that. I am talking about the salaries here in Washington. Now, you take the great number of rural carriers, the great number of civil-service employees on the mail trains, take them wherever they are, and they are deserving of consideration, especially when they are old and worn out in the service and no longer able to do any good for themselves or for the Government. Whatever may be the fact about the matter, they have worn themselves out in the service of the Government. Now, are you just going to turn them out to graze or are you going to pension them at $1,500 a year, as we are doing now, or are you going to make some reasonable, fair, just arrangement by which they can be retired?

Mr. President and Senators, I believe that the bill proposed here is a reasonable and a fair and a just measure. It does not take 8 per cent from the salary of each employee, as is provided in the amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President; if the Senator please——

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, not exceeding 8 per cent, as provided in the Senator's bill.

Mr. POMERENE. That is only from a comparatively small number.

Mr. McKELLAR. When you give the Government the power to take 8 per cent, they will probably take it before it is over. But, however that may be, 2½ per cent taken from the salary of an employee is not a large sum. It is carefully provided for; it is carefully hedged about; it is carefully arranged; it is carefully prepared. We have had an expert of the Government go over the figures and see whether it will do what it says it will do—that is, pay the annuities that are provided for in the bill—and the Government expert says that it will. The distinguished Senator from Ohio, seeking to find a flaw here and there upon which to hinge an objection, as it appears to me, says: "Why, Dr. Maddrill said that it was 5⅓ per cent."

Mr. POMERENE. No; I did not say that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Five and one-tenth per cent, or something in that neighborhood.

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President.

Mr. McKELLAR. Just a trifle more.

Mr. POMERENE. Let us get these figures right, because a tenth of a per cent means millions here. What he did say was that it would cost a few tenths less than 1 per cent in excess of the 5 per cent.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not going to stop to go over the hearings, because I promised not to take over five or six minutes, and I have already done that, with the interruptions; but if the Senator will look at the hearings he will find that it is about 5⅓ per cent. Do you know how we took care of that one-tenth of 1 per cent? We struck out the casualty provision in it where injuries occurred; and thereupon it was said that with that feature of the old bill stricken out it would more than take care of this one-tenth of 1 per cent, or whatever it might be, and that the plan could be carried out on the basis of 5 per cent.

Mr. President and Senators, in conclusion I just want to say this: We have done a world of work on this bill. We have carefully guarded it in every way possible. We have guarded the Government's interests. We have guarded the employees' interests. The employees said that they could not under any circumstances contribute more than 2 per cent; that any more than that would vitally affect them, and that they could not give it. As a compromise arrangement, it was provided that each side should bear 50 per cent of the cost. It seems to me that that is fair, and that it ought to commend itself to every Senator.

I have noticed here Senators who oppose this bill voting for an increase of salary of 15 and 20 and in some cases 25 per cent to the employees. Now, let us look at it from that standpoint, Senators. The only thing that you would do about it, if you should regard it as a contribution, would be to raise the salaries 2½ per cent. It does seem to me that when we can raise the salaries 2½ per cent, and at the same time establish a system by which in the future these people can have something to live on in their old age, it is as little as Congress can do for its servants that have been with it for all these years.

I commend the bill to the Senate; I hope that it will pass, and I ask for a vote upon the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 17. Any employee who shall advocate, encourage, or participate in any strike against the Government, or any department, bureau, or commission thereof, or who shall join with other employees in refusing or failing to perform their duties as required by law or the rules and regulations of the heads of the departments, bureaus, or commissions, shall forfeit all right to and shall receive none of the benefits of this act.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask to have that amendment lie over, and, in all probability, I shall have something to say upon it to-morrow.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator withdraw that motion for one moment? I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado, in view of the fact that this bill has been the unfinished business now for nearly two months, whether he will not discuss his amendment this afternoon? Indeed, Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Colorado that I will not object to his amendment, if the Senate sees fit to adopt it, rather than to postpone the final vote upon this very just measure.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator could secure a final vote upon this bill to-night, I would gladly comply with his request, although the condition of my voice is such as to make it unsafe for me to say much this afternoon. I understand, however, that there are a number of amendments. It is now nearly 5 o'clock, and I know there are a great many Senators who want to be here when the final vote is taken and who are not now in their seats. I therefore do not believe, and I hardly think the Senator believes, that he could get a final disposition of his bill to-night.

Mr. McKELLAR. I had hoped to get a final disposition of it. It seems to me that a bill like this, which has been before the Senate for two months, might have a final disposition. There is a quorum here; and, so far as the amendment of the Senator from Colorado is concerned, I shall not offer any objection to that amendment if we may have it voted on now.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, permit me to say that it is impossible to get a quorum here this afternoon, so that it is impossible to make a final disposition of this bill, and I insist upon my motion.

Mr. McKELLAR. One moment: Will the Senator be willing for us to have a vote on it to-morrow? I want to be fair. I think I have been as fair as a man could be in the management of the bill. Whenever a Senator has asked for time, I have without hesitation said that that was all right, and that I should be glad to have him; but this has been going on now for about two months, and it seems to me that surely the committee of which I am a member is entitled to have the bill voted on.

I hope the Senator from Utah will withdraw his motion and let us vote on the bill this afternoon. I appeal to him to do so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is impossible to secure a vote this afternoon. A quorum is not here, and in my opinion it is impossible to secure the presence of a quorum. As for myself, I have no objection to a vote being taken to-morrow. In fact, I have no objection to a vote being taken now, except that there are a number of amendments, and a number of Senators who desire to speak.

Mr. McKELLAR. There are only three amendments—the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], to which I shall not make any objection.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall not interpose any objection whatever to a vote to-morrow.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, with that understanding, I make no further request. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn, if the Senator will permit me to do so.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the Senator making the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 4, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 3, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Charles Wood, D. D., pastor of the Church of the Covenant, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou God of the whole earth, who dost hold the sea in the hollow of Thy hand, before whom all the nations of the world are but as the fine dust of the balance, invisible to our eyes, we cried unto Thee out of the depths in the hour of our distress. Thou didst still the wild waves; Thou didst beat back the floods of barbarism and of savagery. And grant now that in the hour of triumph we may call to Thee out of hearts that are big with gratitude and with praise. We pray that Thou wilt so deliver us from all self-confidence and pride, from all reliance upon numbers and wealth, upon munitions and men, that this victory may not be the prophecy to us of such ruin as has come to other peoples when they have forgotten God. Grant, we beseech Thee, that the spirit of the Most High may abide here and give guidance unto these Thy servants in their deliberations, and that the blessings of the Lord Almighty may be not only upon them but upon all those whom they represent. And so we beseech Thee that the benediction of Thy grace also may be upon Thy servant the President of the United States, and upon all the delegates to that conference where the destinies of humanity may be decided for many decades. Fill all hearts with high and inspiring hopes that the good purpose of Thy goodness is being accomplished, to Thy glory and to the welfare of the world. And to Thy name shall be praise. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EQUIPMENT, ENLISTED MEN IN ARMY AND MARINE CORPS.

Mr. ASWELL rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Louisiana rise?

Mr. ASWELL. To ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to address the House not to exceed three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Well, what about, Mr. Speaker? Reserving the right to object——

Mr. ASWELL. To make some suggestions regarding the enlisted men in the Army and Marine Corps.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, in the last few days I have conferred with a number of enlisted men who are being discharged from the Army and the Marine Corps in several sections of the country, and I am impressed with the great desire on the part of these men to retain their uniforms. It will be a good investment for patriotic purposes, as well as a proper and right thing to do. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Speaker's desk.

Mr. MANN. Well, I object, not knowing what it is. That is not the way to bring it up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. ASWELL. I would like to ask the gentleman that it be read.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman is going to ask unanimous consent then for its consideration, that is not fair to the House.

Mr. ASWELL. I will ask that it be read for information.

Mr. MANN. It is proposed then to ask for its immediate consideration?

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I have two minutes left, and I ask that it be read in my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the resolution be read in his time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. ——) to dispose of the personal equipment of enlisted men in the Army and the Marine Corps.

Resolved, etc., That the personal equipment of each enlisted man in the Army and in the Marine Corps in the service of the United States on November 11, 1918, shall, upon his honorable discharge, automatically become the personal property of said enlisted man in the Army and Marine Corps.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASWELL. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Why not include men of the Navy?

Mr. ASWELL. The personal equipment of men of the Navy already belongs to them.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages in writing were delivered from the President of the United States by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had, on December 2, 1918, approved and signed bill of the following title:

H. R. 12998. An act to amend section 3528 of the Revised Statutes.

PAYMENT OF DECEMBER SALARIES TO CAPITOL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 356) authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1918.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and the House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1918, on the day of the adjournment for the holiday recess; and the Clerk of the House is authorized to pay on the same day to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners their allowance for clerk hire for the said month of December: Provided, That the session employees of the Senate and House of Representatives shall be paid for the entire month of November, 1918, and a sufficient sum is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the first part of the resolution is in the usual form of resolutions providing for the pay of the December compensation prior to Christmas. The latter part is to take care of the situation that grew out of the long session which ended the latter part of November. It ended about 10 days before the beginning of the new session, and the clerks and other employees have practically all continuously remained here. It is impossible, with the sudden termination of that session, to get through a resolution dealing with the situation, and it seemed but equitable to carry the provision contained in the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The resolution provides for the payment on the date Congress adjourns for its recess. When is that to be? What is the purpose in reference to the House taking a recess?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no information. My own judgment is that the beginning of that recess ought to be the 24th day of December, and the ending of it ought to be the 26th of December. I express only my personal opinion.

Mr. MANN. I should think it quite certain that in that event there would be no concurrent resolution passed by Congress for a holiday recess, and hence no holiday adjournment; and under that condition this resolution would have no effect, even if it should be passed.

Mr. SHERLEY. Perhaps there will be no need for it in that event.

Mr. MANN. There would be no need, unless the purpose was to do what it has been customary to do; that is, to pay the employees before Christmas Day, so that they can spend the money during Christmas week and be hard up in January.

Mr. LINTHICUM. That is the usual custom.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then in order to prevent any complication, and in order to bring about the consummation which the gentleman suggests, I suggest that the resolution be amended so as to read—

On the 23d day of December, 1918—

In place of the language—

on the day of the adjournment of the present session for the holiday recess.

Mr. MANN. I think that would improve the resolution.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest that as an amendment.

Mr. WALSH. We have not got consent to consider it yet.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I should like a little more explanation as to why the session employees should be paid for the entire month of November.

Mr. SHERLEY. It has been the custom where employees were engaged up to near the close of the month that they were paid for the month rather than for a fraction of the month.

Mr. WALSH. It would seem to me that is a pretty good custom to discontinue. How long a time was it?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think we adjourned on the 21st of November. That would be nine days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, I offer an amendment, in line 7, after the word "the," to strike out what follows down to the word "and" in the following line and insert the words "the 23d day of December, 1918."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY: In line 7, strike out the words "day of the adjournment of the present session for the holiday recess" and insert in lieu thereof the words "23d day of December, 1918," so that as amended it will read "their respective salaries for the month of December, 1918, on the 23d day of December, 1918."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WINGO. As I now recall, the 23d will be on Monday, and Christmas comes on Wednesday. I suggest that he make it the Saturday preceding, instead of the Monday preceding, Christmas.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no objection, and I suggest the 21st day of December, then, instead of the 23d.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the 23d will be changed to the 21st, and, without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FOCHT, indefinitely, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. STEDMAN, for 15 days, on account of sickness in his family.

SANATORIUM FOR DISCHARGED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

House resolution 437.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 12917, entitled "A bill to provide for the establishment of a sanatorium for the treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes"; that there shall be not to exceed one hour of general debate. At the conclusion of such general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. After the bill shall have been perfected in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the same shall be reported to the House with such recommendation as the committee may make, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee: Page 1, line 2, after the word "resolution," strike out the words "the House shall" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "It shall be in order to move that the House."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object to this amendment—may I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee in charge of the resolution that he allow two hours for general debate? It has been suggested that this proposes a general subject—that is, the matter of providing hospitals, which should have general discussion, and I suggest that another hour be added for general debate.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. To be confined to the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. To be confined to the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know that I have any objection to that, Mr. Speaker—that there be two hours' general debate, to be confined to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the first amendment proposed will be agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think the general debate ought to be confined to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not putting that amendment. The first amendment was proposing that it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole. Without objection, that first amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment changing the general debate from one hour to two hours.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. To be confined to the bill.

The SPEAKER. To be confined to the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand the gentleman to make that motion?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas really made it, and the gentleman from Tennessee accepted it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Just a moment. I do not want to lose the floor, nor did I understand that the gentleman from Kansas asked me to yield in such a way as that I would lose the floor.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I suggested to the gentleman from Tennessee that he ask unanimous consent that the time be extended one hour.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And I accepted the suggestion that I would ask unanimous consent to make the general debate two hours instead of one hour, the general debate to be confined to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes that request. Now, if any gentleman has anything to say, this is his opportunity.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the original resolution does not confine the debate to the bill. If we are going to enlarge the time, why restrict the character of the debate?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the reason the original resolution did not in terms confine the debate to the bill was that it was assumed that upon the adoption of the resolution the gentleman in charge of the bill would be recognized for one hour and that he would control all the time for general debate, and it was understood that he would see that general debate was confined to the bill. Now, if we are to change it to two hours the gentleman in charge would be recognized for one hour, and whoever might get recognition would get recognition for another hour and in Committee of the Whole he might discuss any subject whatever. This does not change the original purpose at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from Kansas desire to make any suggestion as to time for debate on the rule?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I had an agreement with the gentleman from Ohio who is opposed to the rule——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will 40 minutes, the usual time, be sufficient?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to make it in order to consider H. R. 12917, a bill to provide for the establishment of a sanatorium for the treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States and for other purposes.

Under the terms of the war-risk insurance act it was provided that treatment should be given to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the United States, the treatment to be under the direction of the Public Health Service of the United States, which, as gentlemen know, is a bureau in the Treasury Department. That bureau has not the facilities with which to render the service that is required by the terms of the war-risk insurance act, and it is for the purpose of beginning preparations for the performance of that service and that duty that it is desired to consider this bill, H. R. 12917. I do not care to enter into any discussion of the bill; it is a simple and plain rule. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts for a question.

Mr. WALSH. Is it the gentleman's contention that H. R. 12917 takes care of the needs provided for in the war-risk insurance act?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Not completely.

Mr. WALSH. It does not begin to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes, it will begin to; but there will be a large number that can not be taken care of there.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman know whether there is any pending legislation which provides for taking care of the entire needs of the Government in that respect?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There is a bill before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds dealing further with the subject, but that has not been officially called to the attention of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WALSH. That provides a comprehensive scheme for the whole requirements of the Government.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am not familiar with the details of the bill.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman tell us, as this is the first bill that comes before us, on what theory the majority of the House is going to act as to bills that are to be passed? Are they to go to the White House and then assume that they will become a law in 10 days, or will they be held back until the end of the session when the President is here?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I can not give the gentleman any official information.

Mr. GILLETT. Does not the gentleman think it fair that this side of the House should know the theory on which the House is going to pass these bills?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If I knew, I would have no hesitation in telling the gentleman. I have seen what undoubtedly the gentleman has seen in the press as to the plan to be followed.

Mr. GILLETT. I have not; I have seen different statements, and I thought probably the persons responsible for legislation would have formed some definite plan which they would be willing to tell us and which we ought to know. It would make a difference whether all the bills are to be held back until the end of the session or are to be pushed through with the assumption that in 10 days they become a law.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I can state no further, for I have no information on the subject.

Mr. GILLETT. Has anyone on that side any information in regard to it?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I can not answer the gentleman that question.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. This expenditure of one million and a half dollars somewhere in Kentucky would take care of 1,000 patients, as I get from a hasty reading of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is the expectation, that it will take care of at least 1,000 patients.

Mr. CANNON. This looks like picking out a place that may be a proper place or may not be a proper place. Does not the gentleman think that the whole matter should be properly taken up and considered, so that after full and careful consideration the whole subject could be taken care of in a general bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the representatives of the Public Health Service visited this site, examined it carefully, and made a most favorable recommendation upon it. A beginning must be had. This site has the approval of those who are to administer the law and render the service. The land, as the gentleman knows, is to be donated.

Mr. CANNON. No; I did not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; the citizens of Dawson Springs, Ky., have acquired an option of 10,000 acres of land, and stand prepared to execute a deed of gift to the Government, without any expense whatever to the Government for the real estate that is to be used, and it is provided expressly in the bill that the United States "is authorized to acquire by gift a tract of land," and so forth.

Mr. CANNON. If they own 10,000 acres there, and propose to give 1,000 acres, without investigation, it looks to me like a case of the early bird.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman does not mean without investigation, or perhaps I do not know what the gentleman means by that expression.

Mr. CANNON. I mean this: There are thousands of places, hundreds of thousands of places, in the United States where it would be totally improper to locate a sanatorium. There are many places in the mountains, many springs throughout the country, where the surroundings as to water, elevation, accessibility, climate, and location should be taken into consideration, and there ought to be a general report covering the whole ground. This looks to me like a case of the early bird that catches the worm when, perhaps, there are many other birds that could catch better worms.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The course followed in this case would appear to be somewhat similar to that which was followed in the location of soldiers' homes. My recollection is that there was no general plan adopted for the location of soldiers' homes, but that a worm was caught here and a worm was caught there and a worm was caught at another place and at many other places. I believe that one worm was caught at Danville, Ill.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; 25 or 30 years after the war closed and after full consideration by a committee and a report to the House. The location of soldiers' homes——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, I am not criticizing the location at Danville.

Mr. CANNON. I am criticizing, but I do not desire to mention this place or that place or the other place. The early location of soldiers' homes was not a happy one in every instance.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know about that.

Mr. CANNON. I speak because I do know; but it seems to me that an hour of general debate upon this and then to be considered under the five-minute rule does not provide sufficient time; and, if another committee has this whole matter before it, it seems to me that the matter ought to come from that committee.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I notice that the argument for the location of the sanatorium at this particular point is predicated largely upon the alleged curative and medicinal value of the Dawson Springs water.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. MONDELL. I have read the report rather carefully and that is what I gather from the report, that while this locality is possibly a healthful and proper one for a sanatorium, as many other localities are, the principal argument seems to be the curative value of the Dawson Springs water.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let me say to the gentleman it was not so represented to the Committee on Rules, nor do I understand that it was so represented to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in the consideration of the bill—that it was on account of the curative properties of the water as applied to tuberculosis.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, as applied to a variety of diseases.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There is very fine water at Dawson Springs, Ky.

Mr. MONDELL. My query was this: There is nothing in the legislation so far as I can see that guarantees that the Government shall secure any of the land containing these alleged valuable springs. Then what particular value is there in the establishment of a sanatorium in the vicinity of these springs without a provision whereby the Government shall have the use of some of these waters?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman is making an inquiry of me which would better be made when the bill itself comes before the House for consideration.

Mr. MONDELL. I thought possibly the gentleman was informed on that particular phase of the subject.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. My information is that arrangements have been made and that it will be guaranteed to the Government that water will be supplied from various of the wells located there, free of cost.

Mr. MONDELL. They are wells, not springs?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. They are wells, yes. It will be expected, of course, that the Government will furnish the facilities for carrying water to the hospitals.

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly if the curative value of these waters is one of the strong arguments in favor of the establishment of the sanatorium at this point, then legislation should carry some provision under which it is definitely provided and determined that the Government shall have the use of those valuable waters.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Is the gentleman familiar with the springs there—Dawson Springs?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is called Dawson Springs, but as a matter of fact the waters come from wells. I am familiar with the place. I have been there several times.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. It is stated here in the testimony of Dr. Banks that the water is practically the same as that at Carlsbad in Bohemia.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is my information.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. At Carlsbad there are hot springs and cold springs and several different kinds of springs, several different kinds of medicinal effects to be had. Is this statement of Dr. Banks made advisedly? Is it true that there are springs there of different kinds of water?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There are wells from which flow different kinds of water; that is, the mineral properties are different in the different wells. I am not chemist enough to explain the properties of the different waters. There is no hot water there.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. How deep do they have to go to get the water?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. They are shallow wells—15 or 20 feet.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. That is, the water does not boil up.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; it is pumped.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state, if he knows, the reason why this place was selected for tuberculosis patients?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will read to the gentleman from the statement of Dr. Banks in response to a question from Mr. BURNETT.

Mr. DYER. Who is Dr. Banks?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. He is the representative of the Public Health Service of the Treasury Department.

From a climatic standpoint, the temperature and weather records of this locality for the past 20-odd years show a very considerable portion of sunshiny days, somewhere about 75 per cent of clear or sunshiny days, and it is almost virgin soil, with large forests round about.

Then, further, it is because of its central location. It is not very far from the center of population.

Mr. DYER. How many railroads enter this place?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There is only one railroad, the trunk line of the Illinois Central from Louisville to Memphis, but there is a crossing about 12 miles away, the trunk line of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state, if he has any idea, about how many soldiers there will be need to care for who are ill with tubercular trouble?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The statement made before the Committee on Rules at the time of the hearing upon this resolution, which was some weeks ago, was that at that time it was estimated there were some 14,000.

Mr. DYER. This will only take care of 500.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is supposed that they will be able to take care of a thousand.

Mr. DYER. Does not the gentleman think, with all fairness to the situation, that the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] should be given consideration, and that is instead of going now and starting off on a scheme of piecemeal establishment of a camp here and one somewhere else, just because somebody wants it, that it is better to take this matter up and give it full, conscientious consideration, with due consideration only for the benefit of the soldiers and not the political subdivisions of the country or because somebody wants an institution there? Let us give this matter the benefit——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's suggestion of a political phase of the matter is one I had not heard at any time or at any place until he suggested it.

Mr. DYER. I will say to the gentleman that there has been much complaint throughout the war about the establishment and location of camps for soldiers, and a lot of them have been established, according to——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not want to yield all of my time. I desire to reserve some of my time. If I yield further I will have to appeal to the gentleman from Kansas to help me out on time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The demand for time is accumulating over here.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I shall have to reserve the remainder of my time then. I am perfectly willing to answer all questions I can answer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes left.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will not the gentleman answer me in that three minutes? The appropriation here is $1,500,000, is it not?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is in the bill. Mr. Speaker, I hope gentlemen will not regard me as disrespectful, but I must reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves three minutes. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this resolution brings up a very important subject matter. Whether or not the bill made in order by this resolution should be passed by the House is a question for the House to determine after the rule has been agreed to. There are now few questions of more importance to the returned soldiers and to their friends than to provide suitable places in which they may be treated for diseases and wounds incurred in the line of their duty. This resolution makes in order a bill which provides 500 beds in the way of hospital facilities.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not now. There are now, it is estimated, hosiptals for the treatment of about 14,000 soldiers.

Mr. DYER. There will be 100,000 before the thing is all over.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is not definitely known for how many provision must be made. Personally I am indifferent as to the place of location of any of these hospitals if we provide places where wounded or diseased men may be treated. I am interested, as I am sure every Member of this House is interested, in establishing hospitals where they may be treated at the earliest opportunity after they have incurred diseases or wounds. That question was discussed somewhat at length by the Committee on Rules as to the policy that should be pursued. Personally I suggested, and I now suggest and favor, a general scheme that will take care of as many soldiers or discharged soldiers as need treatment. This must be done. The earlier it is done the better for the country and for the soldiers treated. It was suggested that many of our soldiers' homes now used for veterans of the Civil War may be in large measure used as hospitals for the soldiers of this great war. Even that will not provide sufficient hospital facilities, it is estimated.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield there? These hearings were had while hostilities were going on?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, yes.

Mr. GOOD. And when it was anticipated that the Army would be very largely increased?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. When that was expected.

Mr. GOOD. A different condition.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would rather conclude my statement, but I will yield.

Mr. SNYDER. I just wanted to suggest that it will be some time before this sanatorium would be completed for the use of these men. In the meantime what will be done with all the hospitals we have built and created throughout the country? Could not they be used feasibly for this purpose?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The hospitals we have provided and soldiers' homes that can provide room will undoubtedly be used as necessity requires.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit just a moment?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It seems to me the attention of Members should be called to the fact that this is for the treatment of discharged soldiers and sailors. The hospitals which are in existence, with the exception of one, so far as I now remember, are all for men who are in the service and before they have been discharged.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Let me conclude and——

Mr. SNYDER. Certainly there is no reason in the world why these hospitals, after they become not useful for taking care of the present Army, could not be used for this purpose.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. When this resolution was under consideration and when the bill made in order was under consideration before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the war was still on. Men were being drafted in every section of the country. We were increasing the number of men in the service by hundreds of thousands. Now the war is ended, and the demobilization of armies, the discharge of men, is now the order of the War Department. The processes of discharging men from the service will continue as rapidly as the War Department can perform its work. This will make available many hospitals for discharged soldiers that would otherwise be used for soldiers not discharged. So the subject is one that must have early action by the Congress, in view of the conditions as they now exist.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question.

Mr. DOWELL. Was any plan suggested by the War Department to your committee for taking care of those who can not be taken care of in this hospital when this question was up for the granting of this rule?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That question was not raised. It was, as suggested, that this bill provided a hospital in which tubercular patients, or patients with incipient tuberculosis, might be treated.

Mr. DOWELL. As I recall, the chairman of the committee stated on the floor some weeks ago that there were already 24,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is estimated that there are 14,000 discharged soldiers who will need hospital treatment.

Mr. DOWELL. It is apparent, then, that this does not even start to take care of that number.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This would only make provision for about 500 beds.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The bill provides that this sanatorium shall have a capacity of not less than 500 beds. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] says that the hospital will provide for 1,000 patients. Do you propose to put two in a bed, or what is the arrangement?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I propose nothing of the kind.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. There is another proposition I would like to submit to the gentleman. I would like to know if the climate of Dawson Springs is considered to be a climate particularly favorable to the treatment of tuberculosis. Has it been resorted to heretofore as a place where tubercular patients may be restored to health?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That question was raised. It has not been regarded by physicians or by others as a tubercular resort, although physicians appearing before the Committee on Rules said that the theory of altitudes was now discarded by physicians generally, and that sunshiny places, with healthful surroundings, with good food and water, providing cleanly places for living and good treatment, were as good for tubercular patients as higher altitudes and drier climates.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I wish to say to the gentleman that I have heard a good deal of testimony on this subject, and that it has been universally considered that the climate of Arizona, New Mexico, and western Texas is a much better climate.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is the opinion I have entertained myself.

I asked for an additional hour for the discussion of this bill because of the very important subject that it raises; and I am glad to see the membership of the House taking an interest in it, and I trust, whatever becomes of this particular item, that the whole subject will have early consideration; and I would like to see among other places provided for the treatment of the soldiers the place at Dawson Springs, not because it would be peculiarly adapted to tubercular patients but because it would be adapted to any patients afflicted with other diseases, like Bright's disease or incipient Bright's disease or rheumatism. The waters are said to be almost exactly the same as the waters at Carlsbad——

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. There are several different waters at Carlsbad.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas (continuing). And if that is true, it would be a good place for one of the hospitals.

Mr. HELVERING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will.

Mr. HELVERING. I wish to inquire if the gentleman has knowledge of what the present equipment at Dawson Springs is.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Just hotel facilities. It is a summer resort with summer hotels. Southern people go there very generally.

Mr. HELVERING. The gentleman is speaking of the curative property of the waters, and I wanted to know whether there was a summer resort there or not.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There are hotels there. I think one of them is open all the year round.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Does the gentleman understand that what has been referred to here as Carlsbad water is particularly adapted to cases of Bright's disease?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I understand that people from this country who are fearful they are about to have Bright's disease go to Carlsbad for treatment.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. There are about half a dozen different kinds of water at Carlsbad.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has referred to the alleged curative qualities of the water at Dawson Springs or thereabouts. Possibly the gentleman can answer the question that I propounded to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I can not.

Mr. MONDELL. There may be a sanatorium established in the vicinity of an alleged valuable springs without any arrangements for any particular use of the springs.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I understand arrangements will be made for piping the water to the place donated by the citizens to the Government.

Mr. MONDELL. There is nothing in the bill assuring the use of these waters.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is the purpose of this institution to be for tubercular patients?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That was the original intention of the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What has the water to do with tubercular patients?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Nothing, except that it is important that patients drink water and take proper baths.

I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, there was a time when the question of the appropriation of $1,850,000 would have occupied considerable discussion in this House and there would have been no difficulty in obtaining a reasonable time for its discussion. That time was not so very many years ago. It was when the debt of this country was not a tithe of what it is now. It was when the expenditures which we expected to incur were not a tithe of what we now expect to incur in the future. But for some reason it appears now that my friend from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is very reluctant to grant a reasonable time for general debate here unless that time should be confined to the discussion of this particular bill.

Mr. Speaker, the very fact that at the opening of this session, just as soon as Members can get the floor and obtain opportunity they offer this bill, which has not been fully or carefully considered even in the committee, and which will have no opportunity to be properly considered on this floor, for the purpose of getting $1,850,000 to be expended in the State of Kentucky, seems to furnish a sufficient reason why gentlemen do not want general discussion at this time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is it not a fact that this measure involves the ultimate expenditure of a much larger sum than $1,850,000? On the face of this report it is to appropriate $1,500,000 and is intended to house 500 men only. Therefore, if we are going to house these 14,000 men it will amount to considerably over $40,000,000, which surely ought to be considered in this House at this time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. I am glad the gentleman from Ohio spoke of that right there. There is no doubt that in connection with this project there will be two or three million dollars expended for this particular proposition, and that for all measures of this kind, if expended in this manner, at least $40,000,000.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With pleasure.

Mr. REAVIS. Is it not true that the matter of the treatment of soldiers suffering from disability should be considered in a very comprehensive plan rather than by merely nibbling at it, as seems to be contemplated in this bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] referred to that. There is no question but that we ought to have a definite and comprehensive plan and should know what it will cost.

Mr. REAVIS. And we should know how many we are to provide for.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; we should know how many we are to provide for. But at present we know neither the one nor the other, and no effort was made to find out, apparently. There was no effort made to find out whether or not this was the best place at which to locate this sanatorium. There was no evidence brought out on that point. The evidence merely showed that the location had some medicinal water, some sunshiny days, and, wonderful to behold, some woods or timber near it. Not a fact was stated which would show any advantage for treating tuberculosis.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I regret I can not. I have only three minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to say that the Public Health Service investigated it and made an extensive report.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is in error. It did not investigate it or make an extensive report with a view to determine whether it was one of the best locations for a tuberculosis hospital; and if they had done so, that fact would have been prima facie evidence of the incompetence of the Public Health Service, so far as this place being a proper location for a sanatorium of this character, although the water may be excellent for the treatment of other diseases.

Everybody knows that during these war times we have been voting millions, and even billions, of dollars without any proper discussion. This may have been necessary during war time. Probably it was, but are we going to continue in the same manner now that the necessities of war are no longer upon us? If so, all the waste that characterized our war appropriations will be repeated in time of peace.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before us at the last session of Congress I objected to it on the same ground that has been put forward just now, that when we are beginning to take up this project we should first consider a comprehensive plan which would cover the whole field. I remember that when this bill was discussed before the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] said that there would have to be a sanatorium in every State of the Union. I hope that is not true; but if it is true, or near the truth, we ought to take up the question with some comprehensive purpose, and we ought to have a report upon the subject from the very best health officers of the country, telling us where these institutions should be located, how much we should expend upon them, and where the men to be treated could be best cared for.

Now, of course, everybody on both sides wants to do what is the best for these sick men when they come back. We do not, however, want to spoil an entire scheme by suddenly jumping into one place and making a nibble there. There is a bill pending before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds which, it seems to me, is a basis for a comprehensive scheme which the Government can go into with full light and under which it may properly provide for the situation that may arise.

The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] says the authorities of the Public Health Service have recommended this project. Of course they have. I do not blame them. The Public Health Service wants to perform a service for these men, as we all do; and the officials of the Public Health Service are willing to take the best they can get whenever they can get it. But Congress is the body which ought to provide wisely and farsightedly for these matters, and we ought to get the best professional opinion that can be obtained, and then the best estimate as to the numbers of men to be cared for, and in that way make a final plan. Kentucky may be an admirable place for the treatment of tuberculosis. As to that, I am not particularly informed. I have never given study to that question, but I have always understood that either a warm and dry climate, like that of Arizona and New Mexico, or a high altitude like Colorado, is the best for the treatment of tuberculosis. But I will leave that to the experts. What we ought to do is to let the experts thoroughly investigate the subject and let them report to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and then, with a far-embracing and well-prepared bill before us, we can speedily enact it. It is not going to delay anything. We will not gain time by passing simply this detached bill. This bill will not provide for anything like all the soldiers that may require treatment, and therefore we should wait until we get the best authority for the right thing, and not, perhaps, do the worst thing at the beginning. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield that time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope, in the consideration of legislation for the benefit of men who have served their country in this war, we will give weight to but one thought, with one mind, and that is to do the best we can do for these men. We in this war have voted for a lot of things, and a lot of things have been authorized under authority conferred by the War Department, which in this House have been questionable with regard to the merit and the value that has been given.

Now, we ought to enter upon a consideration of the things to be done for the care of the men whose health has been ruined in the service of their country, and we ought to do the best that we can do for them and not start here to-day upon a cheap, piecemeal bill for the care of a few men who are coming home, and men who are already here, afflicted with that horrible disease, tuberculosis. If this bill becomes a law, the building proposed to be erected will no doubt take many months in its construction before it can house a single man discharged from the Army. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has said and as others have said, we must enter into this question of the care of thousands of men who are coming home afflicted with tuberculosis because of their service in France and because of their service in the camps in this country. Camps have been selected in this country without due regard to military intelligence and without due regard to the advice of the Surgeon General, and because of that fact thousands of our soldiers are now afflicted with tuberculosis and thousands have died.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. No; I can not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. DYER. The Committee on Military Affairs or some other committee should take up this subject and deal with it intelligently and map out a plan for the care of these thousands—yes, the hundred thousand and more men—who, on account of their service, will be found suffering from this terrible disease. We must not now give any heed to the advantage of any State, any locality, or any town, but we must give heed only to the general welfare of our men who are coming home from France. We must not do what we have been doing in the past, place hospitals and camps in locations which are not for the best interests of the soldiers. Mr. Speaker, I trust that this measure will be defeated and that the Congress, under the advice of the Surgeon General and the health authorities, will establish something that is for the good of the whole Army.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire at the outset to correct one statement just made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER], namely, that the camps for the mobilizing of the Army of the United States were selected without consultation with the Surgeon General of the Army. The gentleman is entirely mistaken in that.

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman will yield, I will say that I have been told——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; I can not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman makes a misstatement.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Did not the gentleman say that the camps were located without consulting with the Surgeon General?

Mr. DYER. I said they were not in all instances, and I can prove that statement.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. My information is different. Now, I am unable to understand some of the arguments made by gentlemen, particularly that argument which says that because it will be some time before this hospital can be completed, therefore we should not begin it at all. I can not understand exactly the argument of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] that tubercular patients are not to be treated at all if they have to be treated in Kentucky. That seems to be the logic of the gentleman's argument.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; I do not. This site has been investigated by the authorities that are to administer this service under the terms of the law unanimously passed by the Congress of the United States. It has been investigated by the experts of the Public Health Service in the Treasury Department who have been there personally and examined the ground, examined the water, examined the climate, and who have recommended that this bill be passed in order that they may begin to perform the service imposed upon them by the Congress. To say that because this hospital can not be built in a week or a month we shall not begin on it at all is to my mind a very remarkable argument and does not carry any weight. I may state that the hearings had before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were published weeks and weeks ago, and were available to every Member who chose to take them and read them. These hearings contain a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, most earnestly appealing for the passage of this bill and for the consideration of the other general bill that is before the committee. In this document, which I have not the time to have read now, but which will be read in the debate on the bill, I am sure, if the rule shall pass, he points out specifically the reasons why this bill should pass.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Before putting the vote the Chair will lay before the House two messages from the President.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS (S. DOC. NO. 307).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by the provisions of the act of March 3, 1915, making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, I transmit herewith the Fourth Annual Report of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918.

The recommendation of the committee as outlined in the closing paragraphs of its report for the continuance of the scientific study of the problems of flight and the development of aviation for all purposes has my hearty approval. Attention is also invited to the recommendation of the committee that the appendixes of this report be published with the report as a public document.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 3, 1918.

Note.—Report accompanied similar message to the Senate.

The SPEAKER. This message will be ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs without the accompanying documents.

Mr. MANN. Did the Speaker order the appendixes printed?

The SPEAKER. They have been printed in the Senate, as the Chair understands. If it turns out that they were not printed in the Senate the Chair will order them printed here to-morrow.

COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE (H. DOC. NO. 1440).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by the provisions of the Army appropriation act, approved August 29, 1916, creating the Council of National Defense, I transmit herewith the Second Annual Report of the Council of National Defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 3, 1918.

Note.—Report accompanied similar message to the Senate.

The SPEAKER. This message will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The situation with reference to the accompanying documents is the same as in the preceding case.

SANATORIUM FOR DISCHARGED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

The House resumed consideration of House resolution 437.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee), there were—ayes 47, noes 61.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is none. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 152, nays 151, answered "present" 5, not voting 126, as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas with Mr. JOHNSON of Washington.

Mr. HAMILL with Mr. HAYES.

Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana with Mr. SANDERS of New York.

On this vote:

Mr. BLACKMON (for) with Mr. SWIFT (against).

Mr. HELM (for) with Mr. DALE of Vermont (against).

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, would it be proper to order a recapitulation of the vote, which I judge is very close?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let us hear the announcement.

The SPEAKER. One hundred and fifty-seven ayes to one hundred and fifty.

Mr. MANN. Then I do not care for a recapitulation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was in error; the 1 in the figures handed up by the Clerk appears like a 7. The vote is 151 to 150. The gentleman from Illinois demands a recapitulation, and the Chair thinks he is entitled to it.

The vote was recapitulated.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the name of the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. LAMPERT, called. I ask if he is recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that his name was called and that he did not respond. But before the Chair passes on that the Clerk will announce the Members "present."

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BACHARACH, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, Mr. SHACKLEFORD, and Mr. SNELL.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's inquiry?

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. LAMPERT, recorded?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman states that he voted. He is here, and a number of Members heard him vote on the regular roll call.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Was the usual question put to the gentleman?

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. I heard him vote.

Mr. MANN. There was no "usual" question put to him. He was present and voted when his name was called on the roll call.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman was here and voted, he has an undoubted right to have his vote recorded. The Clerk will call his name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. LAMPERT, and he answered "Nay."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he answered "Yea."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, on the recapitulation of the vote I did not hear my name among those recorded as voting nay. I voted nay on the first roll call, and I rise to inquire whether I am in error or not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded. After the recapitulation and the vote of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LAMPERT] and the Speaker, the vote stands—yeas 152, nays 149.

Mr. MANN. How did we lose one?

The SPEAKER. By virtue of mathematics, the Chair supposes.

Mr. MANN. We had 150 before and added 1, and that makes 149. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. This vote as handed up to the Speaker by the Clerk stands—yeas 152, nays 149, present 5. The resolution is agreed to. The Chair desires to make this statement: He announced the vote first as 157 yeas and 150 nays, and any man with good eyes in his head who will look at the figure "1" as it is upon this sheet handed up to the Chair, with the tail of the "5" running through it, would make an affidavit that it was a "7" and not a "1."

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs may be discharged from further consideration of House joint resolution 345 and that the same be referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the resolution?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is a Porto Rican matter.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman explain what it is?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that House joint resolution 345, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, be referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not recall what the matter is by the number. Will the gentleman tell us what it is?

Mr. MANN. I think the matter ought to be called up at the regular time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution that has already passed the House. It was not introduced in the regular way, but was brought up by unanimous consent, and when passed was a typewritten proposition, not having been printed. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] and myself collaborated in it. It was a matter for the relief of the Porto Rican earthquake sufferers. For some reason that I can not understand after it had passed the House it was printed and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, which has nothing in the world to do with it. The only question there could possibly be about it would be whether it should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations or to the Committee on Insular Affairs. It has already passed. It is not a matter of great difference, except if the question of conferees should arise.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman asks to have it referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If it has already passed the House, there is nothing to refer. After the House has acted on a resolution and passed it, there is nothing for the House upon which to act further. The House has no jurisdiction over it. The papers are not in the possession of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it can not be done.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. MANN. I object, Mr. Speaker; but the Chair ought not to entertain a request of that sort. The matter is not before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not know a thing about the resolution.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee ought not to make the request. The papers are not in the possession of the House. The gentleman picks up a printed copy of something, where the Printing Office or the printing clerk or some one has made a mistake, a very natural error under the circumstances; but the papers, the engrossed copy of the resolution, are in the possession of the Senate, and we can not act upon it without possession of the papers. We have no power over it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair agrees with the gentleman from Illinois, and the Chair suggests to all Members that when they have matters of this kind they should give the Chair a copy so that he may have opportunity to examine the matter.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I made the request many days ago.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not referring particularly to the gentleman from Tennessee, but is making the suggestion to all Members.

SANATORIUM FOR DISCHARGED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12917) to provide for the establishment of a sanatorium for the treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WALSH. To make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to ask under the rule who will be in control of the extra hour which is provided for. As I understand it, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] is entitled to an hour in charge of the bill. Who will have charge of the time in opposition to the bill?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the rule as I understand it does not provide——

Mr. WALSH. I am asking the Chair, if the Chair pleases.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair had an opinion on it, he would state it. The practice has been that the ranking member on the committee that is against it has charge of it. So far as the Chair knows that has been the universal practice here.

Mr. WALSH. But when there is no member of the committee opposed, who will have charge?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he would recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WALSH. Who?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he would recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who is the ranking Republican on that side.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, may I make this suggestion? I notice on the recapitulation of the vote that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DUNN] is recorded as having voted against the rule. Mr. DUNN is a member of the committee and opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The practice has been this, that the ranking minority member, if he is opposed to it, takes charge, and if he is not it goes down the line, and if nobody on that committee is here, if the Chair were going to preside over the committee, he would recognize the gentleman from Illinois. The question is on going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MADDEN. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have to get up.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I will get up and ask a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 88.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Fifty-five gentlemen have arisen, a sufficient number, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 148, nays 140, answered "present" 3, not voting 142, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On this roll call:

Mr. HELM (for) with Mr. DALE of Vermont (against).

Mr. BLACKMON (for) with Mr. SWIFT (against).

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman listening when his name was called?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I was listening when my name was called, but I did not hear it.

The name of Mr. SHACKLEFORD was called, and he answered "aye."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri just came in the Hall, did he not?

Mr. FOSTER. If he had not been here the Speaker would not let him vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri was here and has been here all day.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to vote, but I do not know whether I did vote or not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening?

Mr. FLOOD. I reckon not.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman can not vote.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I was here when my name was called or not.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman can not vote.

Mr. CROSSER. I have been here a good part of the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has to qualify and say whether he was in the Hall listening or not.

Mr. CROSSER. I do not know whether I was or not; I would not lie about it.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I was in the Hall engaged in conversation and did not hear my name when it was called. Whether that is a qualification or not, the Speaker will have to decide.

The SPEAKER. It is a very close squeeze.

Mr. GLASS. I think I am entitled to vote.

Mr. MANN. Of course I know what the rule is, and of course the Speaker knows how it is construed. I think the gentleman ought to be required to state whether he was listening—in other words, at least that he was not intentionally not listening.

Mr. GLASS. I shall be very glad to state, Mr. Speaker, I had intended voting. I missed my name on the first roll call and hoped to hear it on the second roll call, but I was engaged in conversation with a colleague and did not hear it.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman was in the Hall expecting to vote, and listening in the way we listen in the Hall, I think the gentleman ought to state that.

Mr. GLASS. Well, I do state that. I was listening, just about as we are in the habit of listening.

The SPEAKER. I think the gentleman is entitled to vote.

The name of Mr. GLASS was called, and he voted "Yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12917, with Mr. FOSTER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12917, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12917) to provide for the establishment of a sanatorium for the treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I think it ought to be read. It is only a short bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States is authorized to acquire by gift a tract of land suitable for the purpose of not less than 1,000 acres in or adjacent to the city of Dawson Springs, Hopkins County, Ky., or in Caldwell County, Ky., adjacent to the city of Dawson Springs, Ky., or in Christian County, Ky., adjacent to the city of Dawson Springs, Ky., for the purpose of erecting a sanatorium for the treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States and persons who are now or hereafter may be beneficiaries of the United States Public Health Service; such sanatorium to be of a capacity of not less than 500 beds. There is hereby appropriated the sum of $1,500,000 out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the construction of such sanatorium, including the necessary buildings with their appropriate mechanical equipment and approach work and roads leading thereto, for the accommodation of patients, officers, nurses, attendants, storage, laundries, and live stock, with all necessary furniture and equipment for the above; and an additional sum of $350,000 is hereby appropriated for operation and maintenance of the same for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

In carrying the foregoing appropriations into effect the Secretary of the Treasury may purchase materials and labor in open market or otherwise and employ laborers and mechanics for the construction of such buildings and their equipment as in his judgment shall best meet the public exigencies within the limits of this appropriation.

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to employ for service within or without the District of Columbia, without regard to civil-service laws, rules, and regulations, and to pay from the sums hereby authorized at customary rates of compensation of such additional technical and clerical services as may be necessary exclusively to aid in the preparation of the drawings and specifications for the above-mentioned objects and the supervision of the execution thereof, and for traveling expenses incident thereto, at a total of cost for such additional technical and clerical services and traveling expenses of not exceeding $33,000 of the above-mentioned limit of cost.

Said sanatorium shall be under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury and operated under the direction of the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Is it necessary to read the proposed committee amendments now? This is the first reading of the bill, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the bill is before the House for consideration and that the whole bill as proposed should be read. The Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk reported the following committee amendments:

Page 2, lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "there is hereby appropriated the" and insert the words "the sum of $1,500,000."

Page 2, lines 5 and 6, strike out "out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated" and insert "is hereby authorized."

Page 2, lines 16 to 21, inclusive, strike out the following: "In carrying the foregoing appropriations into effect the Secretary of the Treasury may purchase materials and labor in open market or otherwise and employ laborers and mechanics for the construction of such buildings and their equipment as in his judgment shall best meet the public exigencies within the limits of this appropriation," and insert in lieu thereof: "In carrying the foregoing authorization into effect the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to enter into contract for such construction, equipment, and so forth, or to purchase materials and employ laborers and mechanics, and construct, equip, and so forth, said sanatorium, and so forth, as in his judgment shall best meet the public exigencies within the limits of this authorization."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] is entitled to one hour.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I was going to ask the gentleman from Florida if he would object to answering a question.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am not going to address the committee now, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought maybe, as chairman of the committee, he might have information that any person else would not have.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Go ahead. What is it?

Mr. MADDEN. I was going to ask——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, who has been recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], the chairman of the committee, has been recognized for one hour.

Mr. MADDEN. I was going to ask the gentleman from Florida if he would be kind enough to tell the committee what is meant, on the twenty-fourth line, on page 2, by "equipment, and so forth."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I will try to explain that when I come to make my remarks, but I do not care to do it right now, because I am going to yield the floor to some one else.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman does not care to tell what that means?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not until I get the floor in my own time. I would like to inquire who has the time on the other side of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to state that if the ranking member of the committee was present he would feel that he ought to be recognized. No one has yet asked for recognition, but the Chair observes that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is present, a member of the committee, and he would recognize the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Chair please, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] is the ranking member, but he is not here, and neither is the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], and therefore I am the next in line.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would like to inquire how long a time would be allotted to this side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman would be recognized for one hour.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL].

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in the brief time allotted to me to discuss this bill I wish to say at the outset that there is no one in the House who is more in favor than I am of curtailing all expenditures that it is possible to curtail since the signing of the armistice. But the signing of the armistice has nothing to do whatever with this piece of legislation, from the fact that the sanatorium proposed in this bill is to take care of men who have already been discharged from the military and naval forces of the country, and there is a moral obligation resting upon the Government of the United States, based on legislation which Congress has already enacted, to take care of these men. I take it that there is practically no opposition in the House to the general scheme and to the general plan that men who have been discharged from the service should be cared for by the Government under the terms of the war-risk insurance act. We are obliged to do that. The whole thing resolves itself, as I see it, into the proposition as to whether or not the Members of the House think it best now, on the urgent advice of the Public Health Service, on the urgent advice of the Treasury Department, to make a beginning on the general scheme which I am sure every Member of Congress is heartily in favor of.

Now, in answer to certain criticisms which came up during the discussion of the rule, the facts in the case, so far as this case now before us is concerned, are these: This bill was first considered before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I happen to be a member of that committee, and I heard in full the detailed arguments that were had before that committee. The bill was gone into carefully and thoroughly. The report which was filed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has been before the House for several months, and I am sure that if the gentlemen who criticized the action of the Committee on Rules this morning in presenting the rule had taken the time to read this report they would not have made the criticism that they made, to the effect that this legislation has not been carefully considered. As a matter of fact, it has been very carefully considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and for the information of the House I beg to say that it was the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that this bill should be enacted into law. There was not a single dissenting voice in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds against the passage of this bill. There is no minority report pending before the House, and I am sure that if gentlemen on the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee had been opposed to the measure naturally they would have presented a minority report to the House. There was a full membership of that committee of 21 members. My recollection is that practically every member of the committee was present when the evidence was taken and the hearings were had on the bill, and that committee, after full investigation and careful consideration, recommends to the House the passage of this measure.

In addition to that, I am very frank to say, without criticizing at all the action of some gentlemen on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in voting against the consideration of this measure at this time and voting against the rule, that the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, upon the evidence and unanimous report of the committee, was instructed to appear before the Committee on Rules and ask for a rule to expedite the passage of this bill. In accordance with that order from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the chairman of that committee, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], appeared before the Committee on Rules, of which I also happen to be a member, and asked for the rule; and the Committee on Rules, contrary to its usual custom, had a complete and full hearing before the Committee on Rules on the merits of this proposition. There was no opposition in the Committee on Rules to the request for a rule, because, if you gentlemen will recall, when the rule was before the House this morning, the gentleman representing the minority side of the House made no fight against the adoption of the rule; and if I recall correctly they did not vote against the adoption of the rule. So that as a matter of fact this bill has had careful consideration by two committees of the House, namely, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and the Committee on Rules, and the latter committee, after a hearing of the merits of the case, unanimously reported a rule to the House.

I make this statement as to the action of the two committees because I happen to be on both and heard the hearings in both committees, and I simply present those facts for the consideration of the House to show that the bill has indeed had careful consideration, and I make that statement in answer to the criticism of gentlemen on the floor of the House who have said, under a mistaken idea, that the bill did not have proper consideration.

Now, I am frank to say to you, gentlemen of the committee, that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], when the rule was under consideration this morning—and I think the gentleman from Wyoming has raised a point which I would commend to the favorable consideration of the committee when it takes the bill up under the five-minute rule—called attention to what was purely an oversight, I am sure, on the part of the committee in not incorporating that feature in the bill, namely, that if this sanatorium is built, this piece of legislation should provide that a supply of water from these noted springs should be furnished to the sanatorium. Some provision should be made so as to make it obligatory upon the people who are to give this land, which I will explain later, to furnish a supply of medicinal water, for which these springs are noted.

Now, gentlemen, as a matter of fact, we all know that these sanatoriums have to be built, and, as I stated, the signing of the armistice has nothing whatever to do with this piece of legislation. There has already been placed upon the Public Health Service, whose business it is under previous legislation, enacted unanimously I believe by this Congress, the duty of taking care of these disabled men. There are, according to the report made several months ago, 14,000 such men who are suffering from tuberculosis. As a matter of fact, within another year we are informed that we can safely count, I am sorry to say, on probably 30,000 men taken out of the service who will have been broken down under military discipline and whose constitutions will have given way and who will have become infected with tuberculosis and discharged from the service.

Now, it is true that this is but the beginning. But I make this appeal to the House: We have to begin at some time, and this particular project has, upon the initiative of the Public Health Service—not upon the initiative of any member of the Kentucky delegation, but upon the initiative of the Public Health Service—after a careful survey of the United States, been taken up in order to make a start, and that service has picked out this place. Upon expert advice the committees I have referred to have recommended this place as a good place in which to make that start in the beginning of these sanatoriums.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTRILL. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman has stated that this is just a beginning, and that probably very shortly we will have to provide for 30,000 men. According to the bill the cost for each man would be $3,000. Does the gentleman mean to say that this is the beginning of a $90,000,000 project?

Mr. CANTRILL. I mean to say this to the gentleman, that as I recall the testimony before our committee—and that very point was raised by members of the committee—the experts whose business it has been to build hospitals for the United States, the military and naval authorities, as I recall—and if I am wrong I trust that some member of the committee will correct me—said that, taking into consideration the full equipment and construction of a complete hospital, it takes practically $3,000 per bed to complete an up-to-date, modern hospital; and I know that the gentleman from Ohio——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. CANTRILL. I know that the gentleman from Ohio will agree with me in stating that we should give these men the very best hospital attention that is necessary.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I agree with the gentleman entirely that something must be done; but why not start with a comprehensive scheme rather than piecemeal? And, furthermore——

Mr. CANTRILL. My time is very limited and I have some other important facts connected with this which I wish to state; but in answer to the gentleman I will say this, that in order to take up a comprehensive program—of which I am heartily in favor—it would take weeks and weeks. But this particular place, because of its location, because of its climate, because of the wonderful medicinal powers of its waters, has been recommended by the medical experts of the Government as an ideal place to build a sanatorium.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. CANTRILL. Make it brief, please, because I have some other matters which I wish to state.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will. The gentleman has alluded to the wonderful medicinal properties of the waters there; but he will certainly admit that the medicinal properties of the waters there can be of no benefit to patients suffering from tuberculosis.

Mr. CANTRILL. I frankly admit that, but in answer to the gentleman from Ohio, let me read the statement of Dr. Banks in the hearings. The gentleman would have noticed that statement if he had read the hearings. Dr. Banks is at the head of the Public Health Service. He testified as follows:

> It was thought that the peculiar situation of Dawson Springs in connection with the water there was such that it could be utilized for the treatment of certain types of chronic diseases for which that water would be very efficacious. My original idea was to limit it to a tuberculosis hospital, but I think the officials of the United States Public Health Service thought there would probably be a sufficient amount of land there to add other units for the treatment of certain types of kidney disease and diseases of joints, rheumatism, etc.

That is a complete answer to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then I understand the gentleman to say that this is not only the beginning of a particular scheme, but the beginning of a scheme to spend millions more at Dawson Springs?

Mr. CANTRILL. So far as I am concerned, as a member of the committee which had charge of this bill, it makes no difference to me if it does take millions or tens of millions of dollars. I am willing to vote for the appropriation of it to take care of these men who have lost their health in the service of their country and in defense of our flag. The matter of dollars and cents cuts no figure whatever with me upon this proposition. This has been recommended by your committee; it has been recommended by the experts of the department whose business it is to carry out the program which you have already demanded in previous legislation.

Mr. WALSH rose.

Mr. CANTRILL. Before the gentleman from Massachusetts asks me a question, let me make this statement in further answer as to this particular location: Let me say to the House that the citizens of Dawson Springs are the only people, so far as our committee knows, who have appeared before Congress and offered to donate to the United States Government from 1,000 to 10,000 acres, if necessary, for the location of this hospital. That is another reason why it appealed to the committee. There are 10,000 acres of land immediately surrounding these springs upon which the corporation operating the springs hold options. They are willing to close those options, to buy the 10,000 acres of land, and make a gift of it to the United States Government. If the gentleman will read the bill, it is to authorize the United States Government to accept this land as a gift, not to authorize the payment of money to the corporation which owns these springs. There is no other locality in the United States which has made a similar offer, and it seems to me that it is the part of wisdom for Congress to accept that proposition. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, if I have the time.

Mr. WALSH. If what the gentleman says is true, why not authorize the erection of a sanatorium down there at Dawson Springs to take care of all these men instead of 500 of them?

Mr. CANTRILL. I can answer that question easily. If the gentleman will read the hearings——

Mr. WALSH. I have read the hearings.

Mr. CANTRILL. Evidently the gentleman has not read the report.

Mr. WALSH. I have read the report of the committee.

Mr. CANTRILL. The experts of the Public Health Service have testified that it is proposed to scatter these sanatoriums all over the United States, not to take a sick man from Maine to Kentucky——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANTRILL. I should like just a few minutes more to answer that question.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. CANTRILL. It is not a good idea to take a man from Maine and send him to Kentucky or to Arizona or to California. It is too far away from home. Men suffering from tuberculosis in many cases are able to move about. They can go to the springs and stay a while, and then go back home and visit their people. It is best for them to go and come, and that is the intention, and I am heartily in favor of it—to establish sanatoriums in various parts of the country so that men can go and come and be close to their homes and their people, where their home folks can come and see them when they are in the hospital, and where they can go home. That is a direct answer to the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTRILL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman's statement is correct, that they want to distribute these sanatoriums all over the United States and that we have already enacted legislation authorizing the Public Health Service to establish sanatoriums, why is it not left to the Public Health Service to establish them instead of designating a particular spot where one particular sanatorium is to be established?

Mr. CANTRILL. Because, as I have stated, these experts who appeared before the committee have stated that this is an ideal location, and, in addition to that, it is the only location in the country where the citizens have been public spirited enough to give from 1,000 to 10,000 acres of land, if necessary, for the establishment of a sanatorium. That seems to me to answer the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTRILL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman stated that there were 10,000 acres of land available there. The bill provides that not less than 1,000 acres shall be taken as a gift. Now, what guaranty have we that after we get the first thousand acres we will not be compelled to buy the rest of it?

Mr. CANTRILL. It is provided that the Public Health Service is to say how much land is wanted, whether 1,000 acres or 10,000 acres, and whatever number of acres the Public Health Service says it wants these people will give that number of acres to the Government of the United States.

Now, one thing further, the location of this proposed sanatorium is in the center of the population, practically, of the United States. It is on or very near two great trunk lines going both east and west and north and south, and from a railroad point of view it is an ideal location. It is not in an out-of-the-way place. As to the climate, the Public Health Service has made a thorough investigation, and the report shows that, so far as the climate is concerned and the clearness of the weather, it is an ideal location.

Now, gentlemen, what objection can there be to it? You and others say we are all in favor of it, which I am sure is true; but why hold back a proposition that is for the immediate construction and which has behind it such favorable indorsement as this from the department of the Government whose business it is to take care of these disabled men? There is nothing which can be gained by postponement; in fact, from the standpoint of humanity, from the standpoint of our duty as legislators, it is our business, and it should be our pleasure, to immediately begin the construction, and I want to say to any gentleman on the floor of this House that when the Public Health Service recommends any location in any State in the Union as an ideal place for the establishment of a sanatorium I will be heartily in favor of enacting that into legislation.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTRILL. I will.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Do the proponents of this measure present the land in fee simple?

Mr. CANTRILL. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Do they have any reservations in it?

Mr. CANTRILL. No.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; they park it if they take it.

Mr. CANTRILL. The Secretary of the Treasury will see to it that they give the 10,000 acres of land, or whatever amount is necessary as passed upon by the Public Health Service, as a gift to the Government.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. They do not reserve the right to build a hotel on the property?

Mr. CANTRILL. Not on the property.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us provides for the establishment of a sanatorium for the treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces at or near Dawson Springs, Ky. Dawson Springs, Ky., may be a very proper location for such an institution. It may develop in the course of time that it is important and necessary that such an institution be established, but on examination of the present situation in the country I think we will find it very clearly demonstrated that an institution of that kind is not needed at the present time and may not be in the early future, because other and more speedy plans may be put in operation to care for the men in question.

This bill was introduced in a time of war and stress, when it was necessary to do things hurriedly and sometimes without proper consideration and without opportunity to consider all of the questions involved. But we have seen the coming of the dove of peace. We have come to the time of reconstruction, and it is necessary and important that every question coming before the House shall now be considered in view of the present conditions, with the view of legislating wisely and intelligently, everything considered.

We will care for the soldier boys. No one need have any doubt about that—all of them—those wounded and those afflicted in the service, and we will do it speedily and we will do it well, and there is no difference of opinion amongst the representatives of the American people on that proposition.

What is the situation? We have now in the general hospitals of the United States under the jurisdiction of the War Department 26,000 beds available for the use of the men recovering from wounds or disease. We have now in the camps and cantonments of the country 50,000 beds available for the use of soldiers suffering from wounds and disease. In addition to that we have recently taken over a number of hotels and sanatoriums heretofore under private control, with the expectation that we would need 100,000 hospital beds for our oversea forces if the war should continue.

Since this bill was introduced we have taken over a great sanatorium at West Baden, Ind., a splendid institution, having a capacity of 632 beds. The last report I have from West Baden, which I think was three or four days ago, shows that there were 18 patients there, so that now at West Baden we have 614 beds available. West Baden also has mineral springs very similar to those at Dawson Springs. There we have an institution built, equipped, running, and ready, and no men appearing to take advantage of the accommodations presented.

It is suggested that this institution should be for tubercular patients because of the presence of these curative waters. Who ever heard of sending a tubercular patient to Kentucky? When did tubercular patients get to moving in any direction except to the dry and elevated regions of the far West in the hope of recovery? Who ever heard of any kind of mineral waters being helpful in cases of tuberculosis? The cure of tuberculosis is effected by fresh air and lots of it, and most frequently in a dry, bracing climate. The right kind of diet helps, but not the waters of mineral springs.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. DILLON. Can the gentleman tell the committee what was the arrangement under which West Baden Springs were taken over?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know except we have appropriated many hundred millions of dollars now available with the expectation that it would be necessary to provide 120,000 beds in addition to the 50,000 beds in the camps and cantonments. We know that the development, the purchase, and the taking over of these institutions has reached a point where we now have some 26,000 beds in addition to the 600 beds available, empty, at West Baden that can be utilized at this moment. Just how many there are vacant of the 26,000 beds in the general hospitals I do not know, but undoubtedly there is a considerable number.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. In the treatment of tubercular patients are the hospital facilities emphasized to any great extent, or are the facilities in the matter of comfortable living and fresh air and good diet the principal consideration?

Mr. MONDELL. The patient far gone with tuberculosis is sometimes given hospital treatment, but the proper and usual treatment for tuberculosis is a treatment of fresh air and good food.

Mr. ELSTON. And I would suggest that in connection with all of these cantonments there are auxiliary hospitals for the treatment of those afflicted with the disease where hospital treatment is necessary.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. It is true that these general hospitals are not now available, and the cantonment hospitals are not now available for men discharged from the service, but they can be made available within 24 hours by the passage of a resolution. Within a short time it will be necessary to make them available so far as they can be spared from the needs of men in the service and are needed for men who have been discharged from the service In addition to that, we could now turn over one, at least, of the National Soldiers' Homes, and probably two, to those uses and purposes; and those institutions are going; they are under way; they are provided for; the accommodations are all there.

Mr. GARD. Is there not a soldiers' home some place in the Dakotas?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; there is a sanatorium at Hot Springs, S. Dak., and it is far from being filled to capacity at this time. A large number of these discharged soldiers could be received there and taken charge of at any time, and that South Dakota climate is a splendid climate for the care of tubercular patients, although it is not claimed that the hot water helps especially in that direction. The dry air does much. We must and we shall provide for the needs of the men discharged from the service who are suffering from various ailments. We have some accommodations for such men now, and the first thing to do is to turn over for the use of such men the accommodations now available and then enter upon a comprehensive plan for the future. This piecemeal proposal of legislation is not in the interest of the men needing treatment or of the people who pay the bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this measure because at the present time the committee has under consideration a bill which is to provide for a general scheme for the care of discharged soldiers and sailors who may be afflicted with disease. That scheme does not contemplate erecting a sanatorium at one particular place. I do not know why the committee has not reported out that general bill, but it looks as though Kentucky wanted to make sure that she "got hers," and then the rest of the country might have the general legislation.

There is nothing in the hearings to disclose how many sites were visited by Mr. Perry, or Mr. Stimpson, or Col. Banks to ascertain where these available sites are that might be utilized for this sanatorium. If this is the one site in the entire United States for this sanatorium, why do they not provide for taking care of more than 500 at $3,000 a bed? That is an exorbitant sum. They ask for the erection of a sanatorium, at a cost of $1,500,000, which will only be a start for that particular site, and there is no necessity for that. Furthermore, we have authority given in various places to buy many sanatoriums which have been tendered to the Government, and which they have declined to take, which might be utilized. As has been pointed out, we have many hospitals that have been erected by the Surgeon General of the Army, which, after these men who have been called to the camps have been returned to their homes, can be easily adapted for this purpose. They contend in the report that the war-risk insurance act requires the Government to build these hospitals and these sanatoriums. This is the language of the war-risk insurance act:

> In addition to the compensation above provided, the injured person shall be furnished by the United States such reasonable governmental medical, surgical, and hospital services, and with such supplies, including artificial limbs, and similar appliances, as the director may determine to be useful and reasonably necessary.

That does not require the erection of a vast chain of sanatoriums and hospitals and resting stations, particularly if we have facilities already in being. The hearings will disclose that there are numerous hospitals and other places which might be easily converted to this use. We have appropriated in the various Army appropriation bills of recent years millions of dollars for hospitals and hospital supplies.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Does the evidence show that the Government owns numerous hospitals or that it has the temporary use of them?

Mr. WALSH. The evidence in the hearings does not disclose any that they are using. But it discloses that there are hospitals that have been built under the appropriation for military purposes in connection with the erection of these cantonments.

Mr. HARDY. Are these temporary structures?

Mr. WALSH. Some of those are temporary, in the vicinity of camps, and others permanent. There are 37 of those in the United States.

Mr. HARDY. The reason I am asking is this: If we have a few temporary hospitals, or hospitals built for use just during the war, not owning the ground on which they stand, that certainly would not be a sufficient arrangement.

Mr. WALSH. I would say to the gentleman that there are 37 hospitals owned by the Government outside of these temporary structures at cantonments.

Mr. HARDY. Are these hospitals anything like competent and sufficient for the needs of the Government?

Mr. WALSH. They are being used by the Government for hospital purposes and these soldiers are being treated there, and I can not assume that the Surgeon General of the Army would put diseased and disabled soldiers in hospitals that are not suitable for the purpose.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman permit a little further? Is it not altogether possible, and is it not true, that these hospitals were located with reference to cantonments and conveniences of the Army service and not for permanent use as hospitals?

Mr. WALSH. Well, it is, of course, entirely possible and most probable that if this bill is passed they will provide a sanatorium or a hospital at a cost far in excess of the cost of these 37 other institutions which have been taken over or erected by the Government and it will be up to date in every particular; but I submit if the Government has the facilities at hand now, adequate facilities, to take care of this, that there is no need in singling out one particular State to erect a sanatorium at a cost of $1,500,000.

Mr. HARDY. On that question——

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman will appreciate that my time is running. I was about to say that we appropriated in the various Army bills for the Surgeon General vast sums of money. In the appropriation for 1918, under the Medical Department, in the share of the appropriation which might be utilized for hospitals, we made an appropriation of $267,408,948. This general scheme in the general bill which has been introduced carries an appropriation of $10,500,000, and it is notable that the general legislation which has been proposed is so framed as to take care of discharged disabled soldiers and sailors, patients of the War-Risk Bureau, whereas this Dawson Springs proposition is for the purpose of treating persons discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States and persons who are now or hereafter may be beneficiaries of the United States Public Health Service. I do not know under what legislation the Public Health Service was hitched up with the War-Risk Insurance Bureau in the treatment of these discharged and disabled soldiers and sailors, but it is certainly not under the authority of the act creating the War-Risk Insurance Bureau.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. LONDON. Does the testimony of the hearings disclose the presence of tubercular sanatoriums in Kentucky?

Mr. WALSH. I understand not. There is no sanatorium in Kentucky. There are some in several other places, but of course there is no other place in the country where the water is like that at Carlsbad, and that hitched up with the great number of tuberculosis-afflicted soldiers and sailors who are coming back makes Dawson Springs the one great center of the United States where must be assembled all these afflicted men. Now, we have all got sympathy for them, but if the advantages of this are so great, there ought not to be any other site considered. They ought to put all of this $30,000,000 in sanatoriums there to take care of all of them, and in view of the fact we are to have a general scheme afterwards. I submit we ought not to pick out 500 or 600 of these disabled soldiers and sailors and say to them, "We will give you a chance to go to Dawson Springs, Ky., and drink freely of the Carlsbad water and we will let the other

27,500 soldiers wait until we have decided where these other sanatoriums should be." It will be just as easy to start the erection of these various hospitals at the same time, at these 15 or 20 places, the same as was done in the case of the cantonments, and have them all completed at the same time, so that these men might be given an opportunity to have this treatment simultaneously. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE].

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as it happens, and I presume unfortunately in view of the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts, Dawson Springs is in my district in Kentucky. The force of his argument is that he wants these hospitals, but from his provincialistic view he does not want one to go to Kentucky. I am going to be more generous with him than he is with me, and if this general scheme is adopted to erect these hospitals throughout the country, if the men in charge of the Public Health Service see fit to want one to go to Massachusetts, I think it ought to go there. The hospital spoken of by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is under the supervision of the War Department. The reason Dawson Springs was selected by the Public Health Service was because of the fact that the business men in and surrounding that country offered to donate the land. Col. Banks was sent upon the initiative of the Bureau of Public Health and War-Risk Bureau, one of the most eminent surgeons in the country and one of the most eminent——

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Dr. Blue is at the head of the Public Health Service.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Banks is connected with the Treasury Department, with the War-Risk Service, two entirely different services.

Mr. KINCHELOE. No; Col. Banks is also connected with the Public Health Service, the chief surgeon of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, which is being administered under the supervision of the Bureau of Public Health.

Mr. GARD. If the gentleman will permit, the gentleman does not mean the place is selected because a number of business men want to give land to the Government——

Mr. KINCHELOE. No; I had not gotten through. Col. Banks went down there at the request of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance. He came back and recommended this as the central hospital of this whole propaganda for several reasons——

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I would like to make my statement——

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It is right on that point.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The reasons that led them to decide on Dawson Springs were that it is not only within 40 miles of the center of population of the United States but the idea of establishing it at this place is that it has practically two trunk lines of railroad—the Illinois Central, running from Louisville to New Orleans, east and west, practically, and the main line of the Louisville & Nashville, from Chicago and St. Louis to Jacksonville. It is not to be altogether a tuberculosis hospital. It is for the discharged soldiers and sailors and other wards of the Government that may be upon the Bureau of Public Health and Bureau of War-Risk Insurance.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAVIS. Is it the intention to put the tubercular patients in immediate association with patients who are not suffering from tuberculosis?

Mr. KINCHELOE. If the gentleman will read the hearings, he will see that the whole thing was thrashed out there.

Mr. REAVIS. I know it is not so stated in the hearings, but the gentleman just stated that it is not to be exclusively a tuberculosis hospital. Are you going to have the other patients associated with the tubercular patients?

Mr. KINCHELOE. They are to be segregated on different parts of the land. They claim they need a thousand acres to do it.

Mr. REAVIS. And there is to be more than one hospital constructed there?

Mr. KINCHELOE. More than one building; several of them.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. In view of what the gentleman said, I would like to ask a question. You say that Col. Banks visited this at the request of Surg. Blue?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes, sir; and the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. In the hearings, on page 8, he states that he visited Dawson Springs at the suggestion of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau.

Mr. KINCHELOE. This feature is to be administered, as I understand, under the Public Health Service.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. He went there at the request of the Director of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do not know. I think both.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. He says that.

Mr. KINCHELOE. They say now that there is no need, since the armistice has been declared, for the erection of this hospital under this general propaganda that the two bureaus want. Here is a letter also from the Secretary of the Treasury, written to the Speaker of the House, which I want the Clerk to read in my time, making the appeal in view of the great necessity for the treatment of these discharged soldiers and sailors, and asking the Speaker not only to expedite this bill for Dawson Springs but the general propaganda that is before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. And in my time I will ask the Clerk to read the letter.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, November 18, 1918.

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Pressing necessity of the utmost gravity impels me to invite your attention to two bills pending in Congress, to supply hospital accommodations for discharged sick and disabled soldiers and sailors, patients of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, and others entitled to treatment by the Public Health Service of this department; namely, H. R. 12917, to provide certain hospital facilities at Dawson Springs, Ky., on land to be donated to the Government, and H. R. 13026, to provide like hospital accommodations at various points throughout the country. The former bill was introduced in the House on September 11, and on investigation by the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee was reported out, and subsequently made a special rule in Congress, that the greatest possible expedition might be given to the project, and at this writing I understand that the bill is only waiting for a quorum in the House to complete the legislation in that branch of Congress.

In my letter of September 20, transmitting a tentative draft of legislation which has since been given H. R. 13026, there was also transmitted a report from a committee appointed by the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and myself, in which the statement was made that 13,000 beds would be required for these patients, and that the War and Navy Departments had made no provision for patients other than those of active forces, and therefore the War and Navy Departments had no beds available for patients of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, and in addition thereto a memorandum from the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service of this department in which the statement is made that these beds would not be for temporary purposes, but will be needed for years to come, and that the estimated cost of supplying the number of beds required would be $26,000,000 for hospital accommodations for soldiers and sailors suffering from tuberculosis.

In addition to these patients, I am advised in a letter dated October 26, from the chief medical advisor of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, that the Surgeon General of the United States Army asked for some practical solution for supplying sanatoria for restorative or institutional treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces suffering from epilepsy, due to shell shock and other causes. The War Department is desirous of discharging these cases into the care of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau. In connection with these cases, it is estimated that accommodations for not less than 2,000 should be immediately provided for out of the funds carried in H. R. 13026.

The bills above referred to represent estimates for approximately 6,000 beds only, but it is of the utmost importance that this number be made available at the earliest possible moment. Since these estimates were transmitted to Congress an armistice has been declared and hostilities ceased, but while these are happy conditions, it has, as a matter of fact, foreshortened the day and hour when hospital accommodations must be made available, and has pressed home to me the tremendous responsibility of supplying accommodations for the sick and disabled discharged soldiers and sailors who will soon return from overseas in overwhelming numbers, and I can not too strongly urge upon you to exercise all your influence to translate the proposed legislation into law, as one of utmost importance, in order that the Government may carry out its part of its contract with the soldiers and sailors who have so magnificently carried out their entire contract with the Government, and to this end request that this legislation be made a special rule in the House in order that funds may be made immediately available for the purpose above stated.

Respectfully,
W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It has been repeatedly stated here that the real reason for the selection of this site was because certain business men had agreed to donate the land. Can the gentleman state what the land is worth per acre?

Mr. KINCHELOE. No, sir; I can not. That was the predominating reason for the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance sending Dr. Banks down there.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield for a question regarding the bill?

Mr. KINCHELOE. The chairman explained that. I decline to yield.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will permit me, the testimony was that it was worth between $10 and $100 an acre.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Somewhere between $10 and $100?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And that is as near as this committee gets it?

Mr. KINCHELOE. And another reason that Dr. Banks favors Dawson Springs is that the weather records for the last 20 years show that there is 70 per cent sunshine there. It is a question of whether you are going to take care of soldiers and sailors of the Army and Navy who have rendered their services to the Government. I have a great regard for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], but I have a greater regard for the wisdom of the men on whose shoulders rests the responsibility of this matter. And here come the two letters and a letter to the Speaker of the House from the Secretary of the Treasury, who say that there is pressing need for it, and the question is whether you are going to take the word of the gentleman from Massachusetts or an eminent physician like Dr. Banks or an eminent physician like Surgeon General Blue and the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, which says that our boys performed their duty and many of them lost their health. Here come the great bureaus of this Government, on whose shoulders rests the responsibility, and say that there is a pressing need. And it is so pressing that notwithstanding the armistice was declared in November the Secretary of the Treasury writes to the Speaker and makes an appeal to the American Congress to take care of these boys as late as November 18.

My recollection is that this general scheme carries an appropriation of about $10,000,000. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] would have all these discharged soldiers and sailors go to Kentucky. Would you tell your discharged soldiers and sailors, who were discharged in Massachusetts, "Before you can be a recipient under the solemn contract which the American Congress made under this war-risk insurance law you have got to go to Kentucky to get it"? They recommended Dawson Springs because it is in the center of the central part of the country where they can go.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman ask me that question?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Oh, well——

Mr. WALSH. You used the singular in speaking of "the gentleman from Massachusetts," and you pointed to me.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes; I will ask you that question. I ask you that question: Do you want your discharged boys to go to Kentucky?

Mr. WALSH. If this is going to be the only sanatorium that the Government is going to build, I certainly would.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield further to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I thought the gentleman wanted me to answer.

Mr. KINCHELOE. No; I can not tell the gentleman from Massachusetts anything. He knows too much now. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. I am willing to stand a test with the gentleman from Kentucky. [Laughter.]

Mr. KINCHELOE. I would not contest anything with the gentleman.

Now, gentlemen, under the provisions of the general bill that is now pending before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I understand the committee met this morning and agreed to establish more of these hospitals in various parts of the United States, these unfortunate boys will not have to leave their homes so far that their relatives can not come to see them and visit them; and in view of the fact that this particular bill has a privileged status, to come in first, while these others will come on later, I say to you, gentlemen, that I will join you, as long as the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance and Public Health Service say it is necessary to appropriate millions of dollars to erect hospitals for these unfortunate boys, in locating them anywhere that will be best in the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Not right now. Now, as to the question of treating all these boys on their return, it is true there will be 30,000 of them, but, according to Gen. Banks's testimony, they will not all be the wards of the Government in this or any other hospital at the same time. They will come and go. For that reason it is believed that if this and the general bill become law, they will be able to take care of the entire 30,000 men by reason of the fact that they will come and go.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. KINCHELOE. So, gentlemen, I ask you, not from the sectional standpoint but for the benefit of these boys, many of whom have given their health and many of them their limbs to the service, that proper provision be made for their treatment as soon as they can get to it. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, if there is a pressing need for this hospital—and I dare say there is—and if there is a pressing need for it in the State of Kentucky—and I dare say there is—it can be gotten more quickly than by building this proposed hospital at Dawson Springs. The climatic conditions at Camp Taylor are practically the same as those that exist at Dawson Springs. They have all the equipment, they have all the buildings, they have elegant drainage, and it is said to be one of the best cantonments in the United States, and it could be rearranged into a hospital for the one-hundredth part of what is proposed as the initial expense to start this institution down at Dawson Springs. [Applause.]

Here is another proposition: They are trying to obtain money here under a false pretense when they say that Dawson Springs is a good place for the treatment of tubercular patients. It is the last place on earth to which a person afflicted with tuberculosis ought to be sent. It is not more than 600 feet above sea level. They want to find a place for the treatment of tubercular patients where they have not only 75 per cent of clear days but where they have 365 days in the year that are sunshiny. You have places of that character that might be easily prepared for the treatment of tuberculosis. Go out to Deming, N. Mex., for instance, for a climate suitable for the treatment of tubercular patients—4,800 feet above the sea, dry air, and splendid climate, with a completed cantonment that could easily be converted into a sanatorium. In the State of Indiana there are two of the finest institutions in the world—one at West Baden and the other at French Lick, not more than a mile away—where they have just as good water as that at Dawson Springs, and not one kind but a dozen kinds of good water.

People go to those sanatoriums for all kinds of diseases, but those who are in charge of the medical staff, both at West Baden and at French Lick, advise their tubercular patients to get away from there as quickly as they can, because the climate there is not favorable to the treatment of tuberculosis. Indeed, I dare say there is not a reputable physician in the State of Kentucky who would advise a patient to go to Dawson Springs for the purpose of receiving treatment for tuberculosis, so that the attempt should not be made to obtain this hospital at Dawson Springs under a false pretense. If it is wanted because of the fact that there is urgent and immediate necessity for it, we should take and locate it where proper hospital facilities can be provided the quickest and with the least possible cost.

There is entirely too much of a tendency, now that we are in the habit of spending money, to take and spend it wherever proposals and offers are made, or to find them where none presents itself. Now that the war is over and the cantonments are being abandoned all over this country, they are proposing to spend $2,500,000 for the purpose of building an 80-mile road at Camp Bragg, down in North Carolina, where there is no necessity for a cantonment and no necessity for a foot of road; and an advertisement is being carried now in the paper which is edited by Josephus Daniels, the Secretary of the Navy, calling for 12,000 men to build these 80 miles of road at an expenditure of $2,500,000.

Gentlemen, there are plenty of places where money can be expended judiciously for the treatment of these young men who are afflicted with tuberculosis. Twice within the last month I have been called upon to get a soldier out of the hospital at Camp Taylor, in the State of Kentucky, a man who was dying from consumption, and when he had been recommended time and time again by the physicians at the base hospital at Camp Taylor for discharge so that his people could take him to Arizona, where he could be treated for the malady from which he was suffering.

Another case, if you please, was at Camp Gordon, where the climatic conditions for tubercular treatment are just as good as they are at Dawson Springs, where there was a young man with one lung almost gone. The physician treating him in the base hospital said he should be taken away from there as quickly as possible to a dry climate in the West, where perchance his life may be saved. It was only after long trials, and not until there was a direct order issued by The Adjutant General that an immediate discharge of this man be had, that it could be done. The gentlemen who are watching these patients who have tubercular troubles do not advise that they be kept in this climate.

They do not advise that they be kept in Camp Taylor, in the State of Kentucky, where the conditions are just as good for the treatment of tuberculosis as they are at Dawson Springs, but they do advise that they be taken away from there at the earliest possible moment and taken to some place where they can receive suitable treatment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, when the President wrote that famous letter of his 10 days before the election he let down the bars to those who might properly criticize his administration. On the Republican side our lips had been sealed from the beginning of the war, though much legislation had been brought into this House which many of us were inclined to believe was not good legislation. There was extravagance in many of the bills brought in during the war. There may have been graft in some of those bills. Doubtless there was, but the lips of Republicans were sealed from their desire to uphold the hands of the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, who sanctioned these measures and said they were necessary for war purposes. But the President invited criticism when he wrote that famous preelection letter and pleaded for a Democratic Congress to uphold his hands. The people responded to his appeal, but not, perhaps, as was expected. They gave notice to the President that they wanted this Congress, made up of their Representatives, to speak their minds upon public questions, and especially upon the question of extravagance in expenditure. [Applause.]

Now Congress has reassembled. We had word from the "throne" yesterday, prior to the departure of the President on his European tour, that we must curtail expenditures, that we must relieve business of the heavy burden of taxes that the war had imposed upon it. Yet to-day, when the President's back is turned, our Democratic friends bring in a measure which proposes to take $1,500,000 and more out of the Treasury to do what? To build a hospital, apart from any comprehensive war-relief scheme, apparently for the benefit of the people of Dawson Springs, and at the rate of $3,000 per bed in that hospital. It seems as if the time had come for gentlemen who are opposed to waste and extravagance to speak out, and that if we are to follow the President's admonition to curtail our expenditures and reduce the taxes he insisted we should impose, this is the place to begin.

Gentlemen cavil about how this question of Dawson Springs arose. I have gone over the hearings and do not observe that the War Department or anybody else, except a mere bureau of the Government, has been very urgent as to the war necessity of this hospital. How did it arise? The eloquent gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE], acting for certain citizens of Dawson Springs who had anywhere from 1,000 to 10,000 acres of land for which they did not have any special use, admitted in his statement before the committee that having heard that there were rumors that hospitals were to be erected he went to the War-Risk Bureau and suggested that Dawson Springs was a good place. Follow the hearings along and you will find that the bureau chiefs were induced to go to Dawson Springs, and as a result they said, "Yes, Dawson Springs would be a good place. They have fine water at Dawson Springs. They propose to give a thousand acres or more of land to the Government. They have coal in the vicinity, and they have building material near at hand. They have lumber there, and if the Government will spend a million and a half dollars at Dawson Springs we can buy the material and build a hospital."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has the gentleman any suggestion to make as to some other place where we can begin to take care of these tubercular patients?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes. Unfortunately, I have some knowledge of tuberculosis.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I mean has the gentleman any suggestion as to any other place?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have never heard that boiling springs or water of peculiar chemical properties or mineral qualities, such as is said to abound at Dawson Springs, has anything to do with the cure of tuberculosis. I think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] admitted that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There is no claim that it has.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But he sidestepped that and said it was the intention to build other buildings and to take care of other patients besides those with tuberculosis. Gentlemen, this is the time for us to criticize and, if need be, to stop these extravagant and wasteful appropriations. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the war is over, but the patriots have not ceased their raids upon the Treasury, as is evidenced by this bill. We have a hospital in practically every cantonment in the United States, and we have a good many cantonments. We have a hospital in most every Army camp in the United States. We have added 37 Government-owned hospitals in the United States to take care of the boys who come back and need treatment at a hospital. We have appropriated hundreds of millions of dollars to take care of those boys, as has been instanced by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. We have at West Baden, Ind., 632 beds for these boys and have only been able to find 18 boys to send there so far for treatment. And yet in the face of this you propose now to open the doors of the Treasury and appropriate $1,850,000 to start to build a hospital in Kentucky. If started it will ultimately cost many million of dollars to complete. I anticipate, Mr. Chairman, that there is a little joker in this bill. Let me read you a part of this sentence, which describes the authority: "For the purpose of erecting a sanatorium for the treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States and persons who are now or hereafter may be beneficiaries of the United States Public Health Service." Ah, what you are trying to do here under the guise of patriotism is to get an appropriation of almost $2,000,000 to make this a place, a great gathering place, where the Public Health Service can send its beneficiaries to Dawson Springs. Who are the beneficiaries of the Public Health Service? Has it any real limitations? The Government does not get the springs if this gift is accepted; it gets the mountain side close to the springs, and here will be congregated not our soldiers but the beneficiaries of the Public Health Service, whoever they are.

The gentleman speaks of more than 70 per cent of sunshine at Dawson Springs, Ky. What in the name of common sense will the moonshiners of Kentucky do in that locality if there is going to be 70 per cent of sunshine? [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I have here an advertisement found in the paper of the Secretary of the Navy, Hon. Josephus Daniels, published three days after the armistice was signed, asking for 12,000 additional men to build a new Army cantonment, and I understand this work is still in progress at Fayetteville, N. C. Now, we are asked here to authorize the building of this sanatorium after the war is over and after it has been demonstrated that there is no need of hospitals in the United States at the present time to take care of our boys. In fact, it is shown we have more hospitals and more beds than there is any demand for from the Army.

We will take care of these boys and give them the best hospital treatment obtainable, but let us not try to put through a real estate transaction at this time when the Treasury can ill afford it under the guise of patriotism, under the guise of finding hospital service for boys who have performed a wonderful service over the seas. Do not get pork under the name of patriotism.

The report accompanying the bill states that this place was selected because it was on high ground with good drinking water, and because the land was good and fertile and was in close proximity to coal. All of these things are found in my own State, but I want to say that I do not believe my State is an ideal place in which to found a tuberculosis hospital. Heretofore we have sent tuberculous patients to high altitudes. We send the person afflicted with the dread disease to Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, or California, but who ever went to Kentucky for a cure for tuberculosis? Only once have I heard of Kentucky offering a cure for tuberculosis and that was in regard to the cure advertised for tuberculous patients at Mammoth Cave. Little stone huts were constructed in the cave, and the scientists treated tuberculous patients for a short time; but after two or three weeks' treatment, when they found these patients were not gaining, they discharged them. When they left the cave and came out in this Kentucky sunshine they all died within 10 days. That is the record of Kentucky as offering a cure for tuberculosis, and I do not want the boys from my State to be forced to go to Kentucky for that kind of treatment. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, in these days of billion-dollar appropriations this bill, which carries the sum of $1,850,000, is not of itself so large as to shock our conscience. And yet gentlemen advocating it say that this is but the beginning of a great scheme for the foundation of tuberculosis hospitals. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] read from an official report where it was said that it was expected that within one year there would be 30,000 tubercular patients for which accommodations must be found. Let us see what sort of a sum we are going to run into before we get through with the program of which they say this bill is but the beginning. This bill provides for an expenditure at the rate of $3,000 per man. They say that is the least that can be properly appropriated. Thirty thousand patients at $3,000 per man amounts to $90,000,000. This, then, is the beginning of a $90,000,000 scheme. Furthermore, gentlemen have said that the purpose of this particular hospital is to accommodate not only tubercular patients but others. You can open the door to every kind of a patient, and who will say that this is not the beginning of a scheme to spend three or four or five hundred million dollars, and that without any serious consideration whatever?

I have nothing against the great State of Kentucky. It is a State neighboring and touching upon mine. I have passed many delightful hours in that great Commonwealth, but it has always struck me that it was a place for men with strong lungs and strong heads, and not for debilitated men with weak lungs. [Laughter.]

Who ever heard of Kentucky as a resort for tubercular patients? They say that this resort in the State of Kentucky is the only place where the people are patriotic enough to offer to give us from 1,000 to 10,000 acres for this purpose. I asked the gentleman residing in the district in which this hospital is to be placed how much that land is worth, and he said he has no idea, whereupon arises in his place the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and says the testimony shows that the land is worth somewhere between $10 and $100 an acre. Now, that is very enlightening to this House. It shows the kind of consideration the committee gave this bill. If the reason for going to Dawson Springs is a matter of cost, the best information we can get is that this land is worth somewhere between $10,000 and $1,000,000. That is the asset the Government is going to receive—somewhere between $10,000 and $1,000,000. That is used as an argument to jam through without any real consideration at all an appropriation of $1,850,000, conceded to be the beginning of a scheme which will cost before we are through somewhere possibly as much as a half a billion dollars.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Do I understand from the gentleman's argument that he is opposed to making arrangements for the care of the soldiers who have been honorably discharged and who are suffering from disease contracted in the line of duty?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course the gentleman is to understand no such thing, and the gentleman does not understand it and can not understand it from a word that I have said by the most extravagant interpretation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I wish to be entirely frank with the gentleman. It has been difficult for me to draw any other conclusion from the argument that he has just made, when he says that this is the starting of a scheme to cost $500,000,000. It is my denseness, perhaps, not the lack of the gentleman's clearness.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman is anything but dense, and I know that the gentleman understood no such thing, because it was not possible for a gentleman with his acumen, exceeded by that of no man in the House, to put such a construction upon my remarks.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman suggests that on a matter of such immense importance as this the House should at least be favored with a comprehensive plan, involving as it does the expenditure of millions from the Treasury; and I will say this to the gentleman, that before long the expenditure of the funds of the Treasury will be in the hands and under the control of a party that will see that measures of this kind are not put through in this way. The gentleman will not find that party niggardly, certainly when it comes to the giving of aid and comfort to our soldiers, but he will find that party giving some real consideration to and exercising some sort of supervision over the expenditure of the funds belonging to the people of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, of course everyone realizes that some provision must be made for the care of the men who are afflicted with disease as a result of their service in the Army, but everybody ought to realize also that there should be no special favoritism practiced in the establishment of the facilities that are to be used for that purpose. There ought to be a comprehensive plan made by the Public Health Service which provides facilities not only for the 500 men who are proposed to be treated at Dawson Springs but for the other 29,500 men it is indicated will be similarly afflicted. There is no reason why, when we are making preparations for the care of those who have given themselves to the service of the country, we should confine our action to the mere care of 500 men; and there is no reason why we, in any event, should select the point at which they are to be cared for. We should give general authority to the Public Health Service to do the work of caring for these men and permit the Public Health Service to select the points and provide the means. I can not help but reach the conclusion that the corporation which owns these springs and proposes to turn this land over to the Government of the United States is engaged in an advertising scheme that will advance the value of the property which they already own. They say that the condition upon which they will turn this land over to the Government is that the Government shall create a park of the land which it acquires. The cost of creating a park would, no doubt, be enormous, but the value of that part of the land owned by the corporation upon which the springs are situated would be immense and it would advertise the waters owned by the corporation and undoubtedly yield fabulous profits for the money they already have invested there. There could be no better advertising scheme than to turn this land over to the Government of the United States. I admire the gall which they displayed in proposing to give the Government 10,000 acres of land in order that what they already own there outside of the 10,000 acres of land might become immensely valuable.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does it not somehow suggest to the gentleman that it might be an instance similar to a friend giving you an elephant one day and you waking up the next morning to discover that he is in the hay business? [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. It reminds me of the fellow who went out to Denver in the pioneer days and opened a bank. After he had the bank open and had obtained the deposits of all the people that lived in the territory he called a meeting of the creditors and said, "Gentlemen, the bank has failed; the money is gone. There is nothing I have to offer you but myself. You can do with me as you please." One man in the audience said, "Well, when you are cutting him up I want to speak for his gall." [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is always constructive and always fair. Would he be good enough to tell us just when he would be willing to begin the preparations for taking care of the soldiers who have suffered by reason of that service?

Mr. MADDEN. I think we should have begun before now. I think we should have had preparations made all over the United States, if that has not already been done. I would be opposed and I am opposed to the selection of any particular site by the Congress of the United States through a special act in order that some particular section of the United States may be favored and 500 men suffering from disease may be provided for while all others go unprovided for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA]. [Applause.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this to the gentleman having charge of this measure: Congress need not have so much concern about the American boys that are coming back. The American boys will look after Congress, and don't you forget it. It is rather late now to express all of this concern, and while the committee of merchants of the city of Dawson might have succeeded in putting it over on the distinguished doctor from the insurance department, you can not put it over on the sick boys, suffering with tuberculosis. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] asks repeatedly if we have anything in mind to suggest in place of the plan proposed in this bill. Yes; I have something in mind. If you are going to have a tuberculosis sanatorium, put it in a place of sufficient altitude, where climate and surroundings are conducive to improving the condition of the patients—places that are known to be ideal for such purposes.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; I refuse to yield—I have not had a word for 15 months. [Laughter.] Do not try an experiment upon our sick soldiers. Try it first on the natives of that district. Establish a little private sanatorium down there for tubercular patients, and if it works out, well and good; but do not try the experiment upon the American soldier. I am not a specialist on tuberculosis, but I do know you need more than good water to cure it.

I shall leave that phase of the question, but I did ask for time for one purpose, and I want to take the first opportunity I have had to express myself—and that is on the freedom of action of this body. If there was any doubt in my mind about this bill, I would have given the benefit of the doubt to the passage of the bill, but I shall refuse to vote for it after having heard the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury. We must serve notice now that we are tired of these departmental edicts, these bureaucratic decrees, and the executive bulls. [Applause on the Republican side.] Gentlemen, I had occasion to preach democracy in Europe; I at least am going to practice the same thing here. [Applause.] Yes; and this side of the House is as much to blame as the other side of the House. Whatever came here, everything that was asked, at the sound of the lash of the whip you passed it. If you wanted to help the American boys, why did you not send aeroplanes and motors when we needed them? Why did you not get the machine guns over when we needed them? Everybody voted for everything if a letter from one of the departments ordered it. We wonder why these new governments that are being created all over Europe adopt a new plan of government, why they do not adopt a representative form of government. Do you blame them if the greatest legislative body in the world, the American Congress, the representatives of the people, absolutely abdicates and sits idly and passively while department chiefs run the legislative branch of the Government? I for one shall use every dilatory tactic I know of every time that a department letter is offered to be read on the floor of this House for the purpose of coercing or forcing through a measure. It is time for the American Congress to get back into its own. It is time to exercise our constitutional duties and control our departments.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman object to any of the heads of departments testifying before committees?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly not; and stop there. I would stop there, however.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I always stop when the gentleman says stop.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I did not mean it that way, and the gentleman knows that. I would stop after they had testified and the committee decides, with the approval of the House, of course, what is really needed. They should give information—not draft and compel legislation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman objects especially to this particular letter which has been read?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Absolutely. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill was pretty thoroughly considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which I am a member, and as I understand it comes here with a unanimous report from said committee, or at least without a minority report. The committee based its action upon a very careful hearing of those charged with the responsibility of caring for the maimed and the diseased and those who will be benefited under the provisions of this bill growing out of the world war. I can not imagine why there should be any opposition to so meritorious a measure as the one under consideration. The department of the Government charged with the care and the welfare of the returning soldiers has placed the stamp of its approval and recommended in the strongest possible terms this proposed legislation. It strikes me if we are to have a public-health department, a Surgeon General's department, that those of us who are not versed in medical science, who have not given years of study to questions of this kind, should carefully weigh and consider what they say in reference to legislation touching the welfare, the needs, and requirements of the soldiers when they return home. There can be no question as to the absolute necessity of the American Congress making provision for the care, comfort, and treatment of the countless thousands of soldiers returning from over the sea, where they have won imperishable glory for our beloved country.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. In a moment. This is not the only proposition of the kind which will be submitted to us for our consideration and action, because this country was not only wholly unprepared for war but equally unprepared to properly care for those who have borne the burden of winning this great war upon foreign shores. Thousands of returning soldiers who are wounded and maimed and diseased will be cared for in hotels which are rented temporarily for housing them, that are not equipped or constructed with a view to making them modern up-to-date hospitals. But this is only one of many similar measures which will be submitted to the American Congress which will require of us, in the performing of our duty, prompt and favorable action. Now I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I wish to ask if in the hearings any consideration was given to the work being done at the Government hospital for tubercular soldiers near Santa Rita, N. Mex.?

Mr. AUSTIN. I think that was perhaps referred to in a general way.

Mr. KNUTSON. A part of that hospital is not used to its full capacity at this time, and it is an ideal situation—pure water, altitude of 4,000 feet, and land can be bought in immediate vicinity at $1 and $1.50 an acre.

Mr. AUSTIN. There will be not only a vital necessity for the full capacity of existing hospital facilities in New Mexico, but a considerable enlargement of the hospital in that State and the construction of many other hospitals in the United States.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does the gentleman think now as a Member of Congress that, in his judgment, it is the right thing to do to fix the location of these various hospitals from time to time by a bill put through Congress fixing the location here and there according to places for which a majority of the Members of this House will vote?

Mr. AUSTIN. This location is virtually fixed, just as though we were to refer the selection to the head of the proper department for an investigation and recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GORDON. Fixed in the discretion of the Surgeon General, is it not?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GORDON. Of the Public Health Service?

Mr. AUSTIN. Fixed as the result of an investigation, report, and recommendation from the head of that department, which should not be overlooked or disregarded.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to inquire of the gentleman from Michigan how many more speeches there will be on his side.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, how does the time stand?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] has 5 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] 20.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have only five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. How many more speeches will you have?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will have only one more.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I was rather amused to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] talking about the Democrats having brought in this wasteful bill, and yet not so much amused when we all realize and appreciate the fact that the gentleman can not make any speech unless he injects partisan politics into it.

It is not a Democratic bill. Our committee is not a partisan committee, and it never has been. Every member of it that was present agreed to this bill, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] has had the courage to stand by the report after a full and complete hearing before that committee. I was rather surprised and a little amused that my good friend from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], who is on the committee and who joined in the report, is actually leading the fight and controlling the time against it. You Republicans undertake to play petty politics now. It is not the time, or the place, or the bill, Mr. Chairman, where men should begin to show the cloven foot rejoicing over recent victory. This bill involves the lives of human beings; men who have worn the uniform; men who have incurred disease and affliction in defense of the flag on the other side and on this side, and it seems to me to be an inopportune time, when the lives of men hang in the balance, to talk about saving $1,500,000.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] talked about this being a good time and a good bill upon which to begin retrenchment. Let us not retrench when we would jeopardize the lives of men who have taken their lives in their hands in defense of the Stars and Stripes. And yet that is the argument of the gentleman from Ohio.

Gentlemen, let us not descend now into petty partisan politics by delaying the passage of this bill, when it may occasion the loss of the lives of some of the boys that incurred these diseases in defense of a cause we believe to be right.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I have only five minutes. I beg the gentleman's pardon. With courtesy and with eminent respect for him, I can not.

Mr. Chairman, this bill was started before the comprehensive scheme for such sanatoriums was worked out. Now, is it to be delayed? The committee was considering that comprehensive scheme this morning and in a very short time will be able to complete it. But after that comprehensive bill is passed, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, they have got to locate the places all over the country where these sanatoria ought to be placed. Here is one that the eminent, distinguished, and able health officers, whose business and duty it is to investigate these things, have already located and pointed out as an ideal location, one of the best throughout the country, as these physicians say.

Mr. Chairman, are we going to delay the passage of this bill in order that a comprehensive scheme may be worked out, in order that the representatives of the Health Bureau and the War-Risk Bureau may go all over the country for the purpose of selecting places, when some woman's boy may forfeit his life because we have not such a place?

The hospitals at cantonments, I understand, are for soldiers in service. This sanatorium is intended for discharged soldiers and sailors. These gentlemen who made the investigation stated very cogent reasons why this place ought to be selected. The strongest argument the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has made against it is that the Secretary of the Treasury has written a letter down here urging it. Shame upon such an argument as that! From time immemorial the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, under the chairmanship of Republicans as well as Democrats, has been accustomed to elicit from the Treasury Department and from the different departments all the information it could gain. One of the first things that is done is to refer a bill to the Treasury Department in order that just such a letter as that of which the gentleman complains, with information and instruction, may be sent to us. And if we had come here without that letter one of the first objections of leaders on the Republican side would have been that we had not received any letter or information from the Treasury Department in regard to it. We have followed the custom. It has been so for years and years, Mr. Chairman, and I think it is a good one, because certainly I am willing, for my part, to receive light from any source. While I was on the minority of that committee—and I served for years on it before the Democrats got control of the House—nobody raised the question, nobody thought about raising the question, that the Secretary of the Treasury or that the head of any department had advised us or instructed us in regard to bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have three minutes more.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to read from the testimony of Dr. Banks. He is certainly an eminent man in his profession. He is selected by the War-Risk Bureau for that particular line. He says:

> We have a great many of the organic diseases like Bright's disease coming out of the Army, and rheumatic affections, and the water there at Dawson Springs, Ky., is practically the same as the Carlsbad water in Bohemia; is very efficacious as a steady drink in cases of that kind.

The idea of these professional gentlemen was that on account of the rolling character of the land, on account of the interior character, on account of the surroundings there, it was especially adapted to the treatment of tuberculous cases, and on account of the efficacy of the water it was especially adapted to cases of kidney trouble and other diseases where water of that kind would be beneficial. Therefore, for those combined purposes and in order that the matter might be expedited, this bill was reported. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] showed his desire to expedite the bill and made an effort to that end, but it was objected to by some gentleman on the other side when it was asked two months ago to have unanimous consent for the purpose of then getting consideration of the measure. If consideration had then been given to it, it would have been, no doubt, quickly passed at the other end of the Capitol, and by to-day we could have been at work in constructing these buildings and preparing this ground for that purpose, and perhaps have had some of the buildings completed in a very short period of time.

Dr. Banks goes on and says:

> I visited Dawson Springs at the suggestion of the Director of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau when an offer of land was made to the bureau for building purposes. I think the War-Risk Insurance Bureau has no authority to build, yet I went there for the purpose of making a recommendation, if it appeared to be a suitable place, to the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, whose hospitals the War-Risk Bureau now utilize for the treatment of our patients. There has been offered to us a very desirable tract of land situated on high ground, on a plateau between two lakes or a continuous lake which circles around in the shape of a bowl. The water facilities there—that is, the ordinary drinking water, aside from the special spring—are excellent, and it is good farming land, suitable for the grazing of a herd of cattle, which would be necessary for a tuberculosis sanatorium.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. BURNETT. Dr. Banks proceeds to say:

> There is also coal very close by, possibly on the ground itself, or at least within a mile or two or a few miles of the place, so that the question of fuel would be reduced to a minimum as far as cost goes, because there is bituminous coal in that region.

He gives cogent reasons why this place has been selected and why it is especially adapted to the purposes of a sanatorium of this kind.

Gentlemen, are you ready now in your places to assume the responsibility of playing politics and defeating this measure, and perhaps in that way causing the death of men who might be healed by the expediting of this work? I hope no gentleman will vote against this bill, and especially, Mr. Chairman, I should be ashamed of any member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds who would vote against this bill, when we had the unanimous report from that committee. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair made a statement a little while ago, when the inquiry was made as to the time. An error was made then. I find that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] has remaining 10 minutes instead of 5 minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman from Michigan use his time? We have but one speech more on this side.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I expected that when an effort was made on this side to perform our duty in an orderly manner and prevent waste of money there would be a charge that we were indulging in partisan politics, but I hardly expected that it would come from my friend from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT]. This side of the House and the Republican Party have always been first to care for the soldiers properly. They are also the first to see to it that the moneys appropriated are expended in such a way as will effectuate this purpose. That is what we want done in this case. The gentleman from Alabama says the Members on this side are unwilling even to make a beginning. The gentleman is mistaken. The Members on this side are willing to make a beginning, but we want to begin right. We do not want to begin to take care of tuberculous patients in a State and climate that are not fitted for that character of work. The gentleman says that even at this time there may be some soldiers suffering for want of care and that delay is being interposed in this proceeding by the action of this side. If gentlemen on the other side wanted immediate action taken, why have they not introduced a resolution which would enable the War Department to use the sanatoriums of that department for tuberculosis? They are already constructed, but they are not being used to their full capacity, like the one to which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] referred a moment ago, and they are located in a salubrious climate, in places where they could really do some good. This is the place where soldiers in immediate need of attention should be taken. It is said that this bill has been pending for some time and that no provision has been made for treating discharged soldiers suffering from tuberculosis. True, but gentlemen on the other side are all the more to blame for the situation. A resolution opening our partially used hospitals, hospitals constructed for the express purpose of treating tuberculosis in the Regular Army, would have passed this House long ago and upon this side by unanimous consent. But it would have taken no money from the Treasury, and they have never introduced any resolution of that kind.

We have buildings all over the country devoted to the soldiers, not used to half of their capacity, and yet they want to construct more in a place that is entirely unsuitable for the purpose. The gentleman reads the testimony of the doctor, and what does it show? It shows that down there at this place in Kentucky they have some sunshine most of the time, that it is up on a "high plateau," that it is even so much as 600 feet high, that they have some water there that the people of Kentucky do not want to use, and that they are perfectly willing that other people should have, as it is very good for treating certain diseases, but not of any use for treating a tuberculosis patient. And, wonder of wonders, it has some woods near it, some timber, also actually has a place where you can pasture cows; and all of these things show that this is an ideal place, so gentlemen say, for the treatment of tuberculosis patients. What could be more preposterous or ridiculous? There is no single thing about the place that adapts it for the treatment of tuberculosis patients, and there is not a thing to show that the committee took any testimony to find out whether there were other places adapted for that purpose. Not a moment did they spend on that. They did not inquire as to where the best places were to locate such an asylum. Apparently they did not care. Kentucky wanted this. It wanted this $1,860,000, and they propose to expend this sum in constructing a building down there, adorning the grounds, and improving the location and making a great resort in Kentucky where they could pasture cows and where the sun shines "70 per cent of the time." Why, they could have gone to Arizona and found a place where the hotel people are willing to let any man have his board free on any day that the sun does not shine! Yet they talk about this being a place for tuberculosis patients. One gentleman says, "Why does the gentleman from Iowa object to it?" I object to it because the people in my State do not want their boys sent there. I would not want my boy sent there if he was suffering from tuberculosis, and I do not want the other soldiers sent there. It is not a proper place for that purpose. I want them sent where there is at least some chance of improvement, if not a possibility of a cure, and I do not want the money of the people wasted on this project. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE].

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, if this bill had come to a vote upon its passage during the last session I should certainly have voted for it, as I did for every proposition that came before the House which seemed on its face to be of value in carrying on the war or in carrying on any of its incidental activities. But the change that has taken place is very great. We are no longer confronted with the exigencies of war, which sometimes require action without careful consideration, for fear we may make a mistake by withholding some necessary or desirable war agency. I feel now, however, that conditions are so different that I doubt whether I shall vote for this bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OSBORNE. I have very little time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman mean that political conditions or physical conditions have changed?

Mr. OSBORNE. I mean that we have changed from the condition of war to the condition of peace.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But we still have tubercular patients to be treated.

Mr. OSBORNE. I do not refer to political conditions at all. I have shown no disposition to introduce politics in this House since I have been a Member.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I merely wanted to inquire what particular conditions the gentleman meant had changed. We still have 14,000 tubercular patients to take care of, have we not?

Mr. OSBORNE. I meant the change of conditions from war to peace.

Mr. Chairman, there are a great number of cantonments in this country, with many hospitals already constructed. There is in the State of California, at Camp Kearney, for instance, a magnificent hospital. People have been brought there from Kentucky and Tennessee whose tubercular condition has been greatly ameliorated, and if they stay there long enough I think they stand a good chance of getting well. I believe consideration should be given to those numerous cantonment properties which now belong to the United States, in connection with which there have been fitted up splendid hospitals for soldiers, and which otherwise will be abandoned, instead of now going into new projects calling for large additional expenditure on the part of the Government. I therefore shall not vote for this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I think I have only two minutes left. In those two minutes I want to say that a question seems to have been raised because I voted in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds last September to report out this bill. I have now voted against this rule and voted against going into Committee of the Whole to consider the bill. It is true that I voted in the committee to report out this bill, but I have yet to learn that if a man votes to report out a bill he is bound to support that bill when it comes up on the floor of the House.

Now, if the war had continued I would be in favor of this bill for the same reason as that stated by the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE], who has just spoken. But now the war is over. In my district, I think, is located the largest sanitarium in the United States, with patients from the world over. In that district there is a cantonment, capable of taking care of 35,000 soldiers, connected with a splendid hospital. A soldier suffering from tuberculosis wants fresh air and exercise. Convalescent patients do not want to be brought in contact with soldiers suffering from contagious diseases. There is room in this city of Washington for thousands of convalescent soldiers, and there are buildings already constructed all over the country that could be used for this purpose. We had already made great preparation for the wounded and disabled soldiers by equipping and constructing a large number of hospitals and why not use those we now have standing idle and empty before constructing others at $1,500,000 each? We will soon be asked to buy billions of liberty bonds and raise billions by taxation to pay for and maintain the hospitals already built and standing empty. Under this bill they want us to take 10,000 acres of land for park purposes. They do not say they will use that land for the purposes of this hospital, but they say, if you will devote it to park purposes and make a park of it, a Government reservation, and maintain it at large governmental expense, then they will give this land, otherwise not. But because of the very great facilities we already have in the United States for taking care of these patients it seems to me the bill is inopportune. It seems to me that it would be better policy to use the cantonments for convalescing patients than tear them down.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take all the time I have left at my disposal, but there are one or two matters I would like to refer to for a moment. I shall do it by referring to what some of these gentlemen have said. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] seems to be very much amused at land selling for $10 to $100. The gentleman lives in Cincinnati, and I doubt if he knows very much about the value of land in the country. Here is a tract of 1,000 to 10,000 acres of land proposed to be donated for governmental purposes. The proposition is that they will donate anywhere from 1,000 to 10,000 acres, whatever amount may be necessary. When asked by the committee what the land was valued at gentlemen there conversant with the situation stated that it was worth from $10 to $100 an acre. The land on the hills was worth about $10 an acre and the land in the valley was worth about $100 an acre. There is nothing very remarkable about that, and it is about as near a correct judgment as any man who knows anything about estimating the value of land can give when considering property of that kind.

Mr. Chairman, there has been so much misstatement about this matter, there has been so much of error, that it is hard to keep up with it. What is the situation? This is the first time in my 14 years of service in this House that I have seen a report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which has never been a political committee, being made the means of involving the House in a political fight. It will be remembered that there was an effort made to pass this bill in the last session of Congress before adjournment, and it went out then because a Republican Member of the House made the point of no quorum. We have found that the Republicans have been fighting this bill from that good hour to this. For what purpose? What is the reason of it? Why should the Republican Party in this House line up almost to a man against a bill intended to alleviate human suffering, the ills of the boys who have gone to the front? You can not escape it; that is the position you are in. There is absolutely no possible escape from it.

Gentlemen ask, Why do you not put them in the hospitals that the Government already has—37 hospitals it has been said that we now own? I do not know how many we do own, but I know the testimony of Col. Banks shows that these hospitals are all being used by the men in the active service of the Army and Navy and are not open to men such as we propose to take care of in this bill. Here is what he says:

There are only two classes of hospitals now to which we can send these discharged soldiers and sailors, the hospitals known as Public Health Service hospitals and the Indian medical service, because the Army and Navy hospitals are not open for the treatment of civilians.

He says further that they are entirely occupied in the treatment of men connected with the active service in the war. And yet gentlemen stand here and quibble and say, Why do you not send them to the hospitals already established? The testimony of the medical officers of the Government is to the effect that under the law they can not be sent there, and the further fact that they are already occupied fully by these men in the active service.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Let me get through, and then I will. My friend from Massachusetts said that the law did not require the building of these hospitals. Here is what the law says, and I quote it from the report:

The war-risk insurance act provides that all discharged soldiers and sailors shall be treated in the Government hospitals, or, as the language of the act is, "shall be furnished governmental hospital, medical, and surgical service."

There is the contract which the Congress of the United States made with these men when they went into the service of their country, that they should be furnished with "hospital, medical, and surgical service," and yet the gentleman says that the law does not require it.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call your attention to one or two more things. My friend from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] said that Dawson Springs was the worst place on earth to send tuberculous patients. I looked at him and wondered if it were true that Col. Banks and Dr. Stimson, assistant to Gen. Blue, knew absolutely nothing about tubercular treatment. As I gazed upon him I wondered, "and still the wonder grew that one small head could carry all he knew."

These gentlemen know nothing about it—Dr. Banks, an eminent physician, and Dr. Stimson, for years eminent in the Public Health Service—and yet it remains for the gentleman from Indiana to discover that although these gentlemen went down and examined the location and made the request of Congress that this place be selected, they knew nothing about it, but he knew it all.

There is one other point that I desire to call to the attention of the House in this record. There are 14,000 of these men now, and the testimony is that there will probably be, in the years 1918 and 1919, 34,000 more, but all of these will not seek hospital treatment. The Public Health Service thought probably 75 per cent, or some 26,000 of them, would seek it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. In a moment. I want to say further with respect to the cost of the hospital that Mr. Perry, the architect in the Public Health Service, testified before the committee that under existing conditions, under the high war prices, it would cost, in his judgment, at least $3,000 a bed to build an up-to-date modern hospital with all the modern appliances and appurtenances which belong to it. He said that under normal times they figured they could construct such a hospital for about $2,000 a bed, but that includes every building that belongs to it. That includes all of the furniture and everything else on the ground. They figure it by the bed. That is the way that they get at the cost of the entire structure. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. The estimate with regard to the hospital facilities that would be necessary next year was made about 60 days ago, was it not, or longer, and was based on our continuing in the war?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; but we have still got 14,000 of these tubercular men now asking that they be taken care of. We had 14,000 two months ago, about the 18th of September. Those men have not been provided for and others have come on since. But my friend from Iowa goes out of his way to attack the Secretary of the Navy. He says that three days after the armistice was signed there was an advertisement in Josephus Daniels's paper calling for 12,000 men to finish or to build some cantonment at Fayetteville, N. C., or some other place.

That advertisement had probably been running for some time. The gentleman will not say that that was the first insertion of it, and he will not say that the Secretary of the Navy sent it out after the armistice was signed. If he did, I guarantee that he had good reasons for it, because I want to say that of all the men engaged in this great war, of all the men in the different departments, when the history of the war shall come to be written in the future, the faithful and impartial and unpolitical historian will write the name of Josephus Daniels high in the temple of fame. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I will say that the information that I received was contained in a letter written from North Carolina, in which the writer says:

With the war over——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Oh, I did not yield for that.

Mr. GOOD—

With the war over, why all this waste——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yielded for a question. The gentleman has not asked a question, but he proceeded to read a letter from some politician in North Carolina.

Mr. GOOD. He is not a politician, he is a manufacturer.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. When you get down to this whole proposition it is simply this: The department asks for this building, and my little friend from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], who has been over fighting on the other side, tells us what the boys are going to do when they get back. Mr. Chairman, I want some of the crippled boys we are trying to take care of, some of the fellows who got hit, some of the fellows that can give some evidence that they were where shot and shell were flying, to come back and tell me what they want us to do.

Mr. GOOD. You will not find any of them among the Members of the Democratic side of the House who left here to go over and fight.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12917 and had come to no resolution thereon.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask unanimous consent to dispense with business in order to-morrow, Calendar Wednesday, so that we can continue with the consideration of this bill. If that be agreed to, I will state that it is my intention to ask, when we adjourn to-morrow night, to adjourn until Saturday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to do away with the business in order on to-morrow, Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if we could not have Thursday on the Private Calendar or something else that is ready, without losing that day? We have got a lot of business on the Private Calendar.

Mr. KITCHIN. We would have to get unanimous consent for that. I am trying to get unanimous consent to do away with Calendar Wednesday to-morrow.

Mr. BURNETT. I do not think we ought to waste the day when we have a calendar here that ought to be disposed of. I do not object to dispensing with Calendar Wednesday, but I am talking about the adjournment over Thursday.

Mr. KITCHIN. I appended that to my remarks on the ground I have conferred with some of the Members who would probably object to dispensing with Calendar Wednesday unless it was in conjunction with unanimous consent to adjourn until Saturday after finishing this bill. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the business on Calendar Wednesday, to-morrow, be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the business on Calendar Wednesday, for to-morrow be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 4, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

WEDNESDAY, December 4, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee that in this great Union of sovereign States there is a dominant spirit of submission to the Divine will. Throughout the length and breadth of this land there are multiplied millions who reverence the name of the God of our fathers. We pray that Thy servants in the Senate, expressing the thoughts and ideals of the great States of the Union, may also have a consciousness of the Divine presence and a supreme desire to honor and reverence Thy holy name. Give us to-day Thy guidance as we commit ourselves to the unerring counsel of the Divine mind. For Christ's sake. Amen.

IRVINE L. LENROOT, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PRICE OF WHEAT.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have before me a letter written by Judge Glasgow, chief counsel of the Food Administration, which I am going to ask to have read. I deem it of great importance, and I am only sorry that so few Senators are present.

However, before the letter is read, if I may be permitted, I want to say that I have received a great many letters not only from citizens of my State but from citizens of other States with reference to the guaranteed price of wheat for the year 1919. I have answered a great many of them and stated the facts as I understand them to be. I have read in some of the newspapers of the country that the guaranteed price of wheat for 1919 could in fact not be carried out, but that the wheat guaranty would end with the war. This, as I understand it, not only places the Food Administration and the Department of Agriculture in a false light, but I think it also reflects upon the Chief Executive of the Nation, because the President of the United States has by proclamation fixed the price of wheat for 1919. While it is true, Mr. President, that no appropriation has been made for putting into effect the organization necessary to carry it out, that can, of course, be done by Congress, and I expect it will be done by Congress. Such an agency was designated to carry out this agreement for 1918, and I assume that Congress will enact legislation that will make it possible to carry out the guaranty for 1919.

I ask to have the letter read at the Secretary's desk, and I also ask that the proclamation made by the President of the United States on September 2, 1918, and which is printed in the Official Bulletin, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, leave will be granted, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., December 3, 1918.

Hon. ASLE J. GRONNA,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Referring to our conversation this morning, I have seen in at least one newspaper the statement that "the wheat guaranty is to end with the war," and I have seen in at least one newspaper the statement that "the conclusion of peace will terminate the effectiveness of the Government's guaranteed price for the 1918–19 wheat crop," and there could not be a more misleading or more inaccurate statement, as it is directly contrary to the act of Congress, the proclamation of the President made in pursuance thereof, and the uniform information given out by the officers of the Food Administration and the Grain Corporation.

By the proclamation of February 21, 1918, the President fixed the guaranteed price for wheat harvested in the United States during the year 1918 and offered for sale before the 1st day of June, 1919, and to carry out and make effective the guaranty for the 1918 harvest the President by Executive order of June 2, 1918, designated the Food Administration Grain Corporation as the agency of the United States for the purpose.

By proclamation of September 2, 1918, the President, under the authority of the act of Congress known as the Lever Act, fixed and determined the reasonable guaranteed price of wheat for the crop of 1919 for the principal primary markets, such price being $2.26 at Chicago and at other markets at a relative price, and the proclamation proceeds as follows:

"The sums thus determined and fixed are guaranteed by the Government of the United States at the principal primary markets of the United States, above mentioned, to every producer of wheat at any grade so established under the United States grain-standards act, upon the condition that said wheat is harvested in the United States during the year 1919 and offered for sale before the 1st day of June, 1920, to such agent or employee of the United States or other person as may be hereafter designated, etc."

While the agency has been designated for the 1918 crop, the agency to carry out this guaranty for the 1919 crop has not yet been designated.

Therefore the end of the war or the proclamation of peace does not in any way affect the present guaranteed price made by the United States Government for the wheat harvested in the year 1919. The only condition to the effectiveness of the guaranty is that such wheat should be offered for sale before the 1st day of June, 1920. Neither the officers of the Food Administration nor of the Grain Corporation have ever suggested any other view or have expressed any other opinion.

It is proper for me to say, however, that it is very probable that it will be necessary that Congress should be called upon to aid financially and perhaps by the creation of additional agencies to make good the guaranty as to the wheat harvested in the year 1919, and when the proper time comes and sufficient information is at hand upon which to base a recommendation Congress will undoubtedly be apprised of the whole situation and its powers be invoked for the maintenance of the guaranty made under its authority.

Believe me, very truly, W. A. GLASGOW, Jr.,
Chief Counsel.

The proclamation by the President of the United States is as follows:

PRESIDENT EXPLAINS PLANS TO INSURE FAIR WHEAT PRICE FOR CROPS GROWN IN 1919—BASIS OF GOVERNMENT GUARANTY—COMMISSION TO BE APPOINTED NEXT SPRING TO REPORT ON ALL FACTORS NOW OR THAT MAY THEN EXIST TO GUIDE HIM IN DECISIONS.

MEMORANDUM.

SEPTEMBER 2, 1918.

In issuing to-day the Government's guaranty of the same price for the 1919 wheat crop that was guaranteed for the 1918 crop I wish it to be understood that in the spring of 1919 I will appoint a disinterested commission, who will secure for me the facts by that time disclosed as to the increased cost of farm labor and supplies, using the three-year prewar average prices of wheat, of labor, and of supply costs as a basis, and that from this information I shall determine whether there should be an increase in price above the present level, and, if so, what advance, in order to maintain for the farmer a good return. Should it then appear that an increase is deserved over the present guaranty, however, it will be applied only to those who have by next harvest already marketed their 1918 wheat.

It is the desire and intention of all departments of the administration to give to the wheat grower a fair and stimulative return in order that the present acreage in wheat may be maintained.

I find a great conflict of opinion among various sections of the country as to the price that should be named as a minimum guaranty. It must be obvious to all, however, that the factors which will make for increased or decreased cost of production of next year's harvest can not be determined until the near approach to the harvest.

In giving a guaranteed price for wheat one year in advance (the only industry guaranteed by the Government) there is involved a considerable national risk. If there should be peace or increased shipping available before the middle of 1920, Europe will naturally supply itself from the large stores of much cheaper wheat now in the Southern Hemisphere; and therefore the Government is undertaking a risk which might in such an event result in a national loss of as much as $500,000,000 through an unsalable surplus; or, in any event, in maintaining a high level of price to our own people for a long period subsequent to freedom in the world's markets.

Despite this, the desirability of assuring a supply to the world of prime breadstuffs by insuring the farmer against the fluctuations in prices that would result from the uncertainties of the present situation and from the speculation those uncertainties entail, seems to me to make the continuation of the guaranty for another year desirable. On the other hand, it is clear that before increasing this liability by large sums with the risks set forth above, and before increasing the burden of the consumer, the matter should be subjected to searching inquiry at the appropriate time—the time when the pertinent facts will be known.

I feel confident that with this preliminary fixed guaranty, and with the assurance that justice will in any event be done to the grower, he will continue the fine patriotic effort by which he has served the country hitherto; that the Government will have acted prudently; and that the consumer will be satisfied that his interests are not unduly sacrificed, but just and exhaustive consideration given to every element of the matter at the proper time.

WOODROW WILSON.

PROCLAMATION GUARANTEEING PRICE FOR THE WHEAT CROP GROWN IN 1919 IS ISSUED BY PRESIDENT WILSON.

[By the President of the United States of America.]

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas under and by virtue of an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved by the President on the 10th day of August, 1917, it is provided, among other things, as follows:

"SEC. 14. That whenever the President shall find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat and that it is essential that the producers of wheat, produced within the United States, shall have the benefits of the guaranty provided for in this section, he is authorized, from time to time, seasonably and as far in advance of seeding time as practicable, to determine and fix and to give public notice of what, under specified conditions, is a reasonable guaranteed price for wheat, in order to assure such producers a reasonable profit. The President shall thereupon fix such guaranteed price for each of the official grain standards for wheat as established under the United States grain standards act approved August 11, 1916. The President shall from time to time establish and promulgate such regulations as he shall deem wise in connection with such guaranteed prices, and in particular governing conditions of delivery and payment; and differences in price for the several standard grades in the principal primary markets of the United States adopting No. 1 northern spring or its equivalent at the principal interior primary markets as the basis. Thereupon the Government of the United States hereby guarantees every producer of wheat produced within the United States that, upon compliance by him with the regulations prescribed, he shall receive for any wheat produced in reliance upon this guarantee within the period, not exceeding 18 months, prescribed in the notice, a price not less than the guaranteed price therefor as fixed pursuant to this section. In such regulations the President shall prescribe the terms and conditions upon which any such producer shall be entitled to the benefits of such guaranty."

Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, by virtue of the powers conferred upon me by said act of Congress, and especially by section 14 thereof, do hereby find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat, and that it is essential that the producers of wheat produced within the United States shall have the benefits of the guarantee provided for in said section, and in order to make effective the guaranty by Congress for the crop of 1919 and to assure such producers a reasonable profit I do hereby determine and fix and give public notice of reasonable guaranteed prices for No. 1 northern spring wheat and its equivalents at the respective principal primary markets as follows, to wit:

New York, N. Y., $2.39½ per bushel.
Philadelphia, Pa., $2.39 per bushel.
Baltimore, Md., $2.38⅞ per bushel.
Newport News, Va., $2.38⅞ per bushel.
Duluth, Minn., $2.22½ per bushel.
Minneapolis, Minn., $2.21½ per bushel.
Chicago, Ill., $2.26 per bushel.
St. Louis, Mo., $2.24 per bushel.
Kansas City, Mo., $2.18 per bushel.
Omaha, Nebr., $2.18 per bushel.
New Orleans, La., $2.28 per bushel.
Galveston, Tex., $2.28 per bushel.
Tacoma, Wash., $2.20 per bushel.
Seattle, Wash., $2.20 per bushel.
Portland, Oreg., $2.20 per bushel.
Astoria, Oreg., $2.20 per bushel.
San Francisco, Cal., $2.20 per bushel.
Los Angeles, Cal., $2.20 per bushel.
Salt Lake City, Utah, $2 per bushel.
Great Falls, Mont., $2 per bushel.
Pocatello, Idaho, $2 per bushel.
Spokane, Wash., $2 per bushel.

And that the guaranteed price for the other grades established under the United States grain standards act, approved August 11, 1918, based on said price for No. 1 northern spring wheat at the respective principal primary markets of the United States above mentioned, will assure the producers of wheat produced within the United States a reasonable profit; the guaranteed prices in the principal primary markets above mentioned being fixed by adopting No. 1 northern spring wheat or its equivalents at the principal interior markets as the basis.

For the purposes of such guaranty only I hereby fix the guaranteed prices at the respective principal primary markets above mentioned for the following grades of wheat, to wit, No. 1 northern spring, No. 1 hard winter, No. 1 red winter, No. 1 Durum, No. 1 hard white. The guaranteed prices at the respective principal primary markets aforesaid of all other grades of wheat established under the United States grain standards act approved August 11, 1916, shall be based on the above-guaranteed prices and bear just relation thereto.

The sums thus determined and fixed are guaranteed by the Government of the United States at the respective principal primary markets of the United States above mentioned, to every producer of wheat of any grade so established under the United States grain standards act, upon the condition that said wheat is harvested in the United States during the year 1919, and offered for sale before the 1st day of June, 1920, to such agent or employee of the United States, or other person, as may be hereafter designated, at any one of the above-mentioned cities, which are hereby declared to be the principal primary markets of the United States, and provided that such producer complies with all regulations which may be hereafter promulgated in regard to said guaranty by the President of the United States.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the District of Columbia this 2d day of September, in the year of our Lord 1918, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-third.

[SEAL.] WOODROW WILSON.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present resolutions adopted by the congregation of the First Congregational Church, of Decatur, Ill., in regard to the observance of a universal Thanksgiving Day. I ask that they be received and properly referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a copy of a resolution from the Home Market Club, of Boston, Mass., in regard to the preparation of peace conditions, which I should like to have printed in the RECORD. It is very short.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION IN FAVOR OF A PROTECTIVE TARIFF.

We remind the people of the country that we were unprepared for war. We warn the country that we are unprepared for peace. While every other great nation among the belligerents has given careful and constant study to the problems of reconstruction, we face the future without plan or program or preparation. We still retain upon our statute books a tariff law passed nearly a year before the outbreak of the war and which is entirely unsuited to the new conditions which will confront us now that the war has ended. It was clearly demonstrated before the war that the Underwood-Simmons tariff law brought distress to the country, unemployment to labor, and loss and bankruptcy to business. The energies of the Nations will now be directed to industry and commerce. Competitive conditions will be restored and the struggle for world markets will be renewed. The war brought tremendous expansion to our industries and largely increased wages to labor. These industries can not prosper nor can laber be properly remunerated if competition with foreign countries is unregulated and the importation of competitive goods is unrestricted. We believe in the maintenance of the American standard of living, in the ample reward of labor, and in a fair profit for business enterprise. These ends can be obtained only by such a measure of protection as will safeguard our industries, and we respectfully urge upon Congress the necessity of reenacting an adequate protective tariff.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Maine, praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent any German or Austrian reservist or other person opposed to the United States from returning to the United States for any purpose whatever, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE presented resolutions adopted by the New England Hardware Dealers' Association, favoring universal military training and the establishment of a league of nations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions of the South Middlesex Conference of Unitarian Churches of Massachusetts, favoring the establishment of a league of nations to maintain peace, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MOSES presented resolutions adopted by Local Division No. 1, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Manchester, N. H., requesting the President to use his influence in securing the freedom of Ireland, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ARKANSAS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 13153) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River, at the foot of Garrison Avenue, at Fort Smith, Ark., and I submit a report (No. 615) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 5086) amending the act approved March 3, 1918, relative to the incorporation of the National Conservatory of Music of America; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 5087) granting one month's extra pay to all officers and enlisted men honorably discharged from the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps on or after November 11, 1918; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

A bill (S. 5088) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. GORE:

A bill (S. 5089) to provide for the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Henryetta, Okla.; and

A bill (S. 5090) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the repairing and enlargement of a Federal building thereon at Okmulgee, Okla.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

CONTROL OF RAILROADS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I send to the desk a bill which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In full?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes. It is short. I wish to say that I consider it pertinent to perhaps the most important problem of our reconstruction. It deals somewhat with the railroad problem and suggests a step preparatory and probably necessary to the return of the railroads to their owners.

The bill (S. 5085) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918, was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

A bill (S. 5085) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918.

Be it enacted, etc., That the "Act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

That the following provision of section 10 of said act is hereby repealed:

"That during the period of Federal control, whenever in his opinion the public interest requires, the President may initiate rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices by filing the same with the Interstate Commerce Commission, which said rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices shall not be suspended by the commission pending final determination.

"Said rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices shall be reasonable and just and shall take effect at such time and upon such notice as he may direct, but the Interstate Commerce Commission shall, upon complaint, enter upon a hearing concerning the justness and reasonableness of so much of any order of the President as establishes or changes any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice of any carrier under Federal control, and may consider all the facts and circumstances existing at the time of the making of the same. In determining any question concerning any such rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, or practices or changes therein, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall give due consideration to the fact that the transportation systems are being operated under a unified and coordinated national control and not in competition.

"After full hearing the commission may make such findings and orders as are authorized by the act to regulate commerce as amended, and said findings and orders shall be enforced as provided in said act: Provided, however, That when the President shall find and certify to the Interstate Commerce Commission that in order to defray the expenses of Federal control and operation fairly chargeable to railway operating expenses, and also to pay railway tax accruals other than war taxes, net rents for joint facilities and equipment, and compensation to the carriers, operating as a unit, it is necessary to increase the railway operating revenues, the Interstate Commerce Commission in determining the justness and reasonableness of any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice shall take into consideration said finding and certificate by the President, together with such recommendations as he may make."

That the following provision is hereby substituted for the provision repealed:

"SEC. 2. That during the period of Federal control, whenever in his opinion the public interest requires, the President may initiate rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices by filing the same with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Said rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices shall be reasonable and just and shall take effect at such time and upon such notice as he may direct; but the Interstate Commerce Commission may of its own initiative, and shall upon complaint, enter upon a hearing concerning the justness and reasonableness of so much of any order of the President, heretofore or hereafter made, as establishes or changes any rates, charges, classifications, regulations, or practices of any carrier under Federal control, and may consider all the facts and circumstances in connection therewith, and said rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices may be suspended or modified by the commission pending final determination.

"After full hearings the commission may make such findings and orders as are authorized by the act to regulate commerce, as amended, and such findings and orders shall be enforced as provided in said act."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senate will permit me for just one moment, I will state that the object of this bill is to strike out from the present act authorizing the control of the railroads by the President the provision that permits changes to be made by the President or by the Director General of Railroads in the rates, fares, regulations, and management of the railroads without the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission. This bill will restore to the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to suspend any order passed by the Director General of Railroads with reference to rates or to review and modify any such order on its own initiative without waiting for complaints. It is intended to entirely restore to the Interstate Commerce Commission, now that the war is over, the jurisdiction over railroads and rates, even though in the hands of the President, which it had when they were in the hands of private owners.

MINING CLAIMS IN ALASKA.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, on October 5, 1917, the Senate passed a joint resolution suspending the section of the Revised Statutes requiring certain annual assessments and improvements to be made upon mining claims. Congress has passed a special act relating to assessments for the Territory of Alaska. It was thought for some time that the joint resolution applied to Alaska as well as to the continental part of the United States.

A very serious question has been raised as to whether or not that is true; and in order to avoid complications I have prepared a joint resolution extending the provisions of the joint resolution of October 5 to Alaska. I desire to present it and have it referred to the Committee on Territories. I trust that the chairman of the Committee on Territories will call the committee together at an early date to consider the matter.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 190) extending to the Territory of Alaska the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the years 1917 and 1918," approved October 5, 1917, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. GORE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to have printed in the RECORD an editorial appearing in the Christian Science Monitor of November 25, 1918. I commend the editorial to those who are engaged in the rather small partisan business of criticizing the President.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PRESIDENT.

Now that the war is over some of the conditions in the United States which the war created are either passing away automatically or are threatened with speedy removal. This newspaper pointed out, when the United States entered the conflict, that the Government of the Republic would, for the time being, become practically a dictatorship, more power being delegated to the President during the continuance of hostilities than had in modern times been granted to the rulers of most monarchies.

The United States is a Government in which the voice of the public rules. If the public in an emergency expresses its willingness temporarily to suspend ordinary processes its right to do so can not be questioned, even though this may involve, as it has involved since April, 1917, many departures from strict constitutional methods and common usages. By tacit and general consent of the people it was agreed that the President, in the conduct of the war, should be given full power to act. In this, Congress, whether it liked it or not, and there was no serious dissent in that quarter, had to acquiesce. Thus, in a sense, the Republic became for the duration of the war virtually an autocracy. What the President said became law.

He sought certain authority beyond that with which he was constitutionally vested; the public backed his demand; Congress granted it. He was enabled to do on his own motion that which, in the ordinary course of procedure, would require the sanction of Congress and a favorable opinion from the Supreme Court. The great end in view was the winning of the war, and the public, having implicit confidence in the Executive, permitted him to go about the winning of it in his own way. His way proved successful, so far as the part of the United States in the conflict was concerned.

In granting their President plenary power in the conduct of the Nation through one of the most critical periods of its history the people surrendered not an iota of the power belonging to themselves. They reserved the right to withdraw from him all the authority they had conferred at the turn of a hand or the quiver of an eyelash, should he fail in the performance of his duty; vox populi was the real autocrat; Woodrow Wilson simply its instrument.

Much stir is now made among a certain group in the Senate concerning the necessity of shearing President Wilson of his extraordinary or extraconstitutional powers, but even the most urgent in demanding that the country return to normal conditions in government are reluctant to say that the return shall be immediate. The war is over, but certain questions growing out of its triumphant conclusion remain to be settled. It may be said to be the universal belief in the United States that President Wilson should not be limited, either in the influence or in the authority which he shall take with him to the peace conference. What the so-called "revolting" Republican Senators are demanding more particularly is that the legislative branch of the Government shall reclaim and maintain its coordinate power with the Executive in carrying on the work of reconstruction.

In this position the people, when the proper time arrives, will be found on their side, and there is not the shadow of a reason to suppose that the President will be found in opposition. When the peace of the world is established, as it will be very soon, on a foundation of common justice, the Government of the United States will slip back into its normal groove without the slightest friction. Thenceforth, or until some other exceptional emergency calls for extraordinary procedure, Congress, as the Constitution prescribes, will make the laws and the President will execute them, as usual. No democratic institution has been undermined, impaired, or even threatened, by recent departures from the letter of the Constitution; the Constitution and the country are alike safe so long as they are made to serve the purposes of the people.

It is not a very wholesome symptom that, almost before the ink with which Germany has signed away her hope of becoming a dominating world power is dry, marking as the act does the greatest triumph of democracy in a century, if not in all history, certain irreconcilables in the United States Senate should be afforded opportunity of misrepresenting and attempting to belittle a man whom the whole world cheerfully recognizes as one of the most important factors in the achievement of this victory. There is no excuse for impugning the motives, much less for questioning the loyalty of Woodrow Wilson to the United States Constitution and to American ideals. It is not only nonsensical but exceedingly dangerous at this time, when hidden evil forces are seeking every possible means of expression, every possible method of propagating suspicion, discontent, and sedition among the masses, that men in high public office should indulge, through partisan rancor, in aspersions tending to create disunion among good citizens.

Common sense, common prudence, and ordinary judgment should, one would think, impel those intrusted with public responsibility to take a broader than partisan view of the work that lies before the President at this juncture. He is responding to a world invitation in consenting to attend the peace conference. His presence at the board is sought because his counsel is everywhere esteemed. The Nation he will represent should feel proud of the honor conferred upon him. It has stood behind him in the making of war; it should stand behind him in the making of peace.

PEACE TERMS.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I submit a resolution and ask that it be read by the Secretary.

The resolution (S. Res. 364) was read, as follows:

Whereas the President has informed Congress that the bases of peace outlined by him on the 8th of January last have been accepted by the allied Governments and by the central empires, and that it is his duty to see that no false or mistaken interpretation is put upon them; and

Whereas the President has never stated his own interpretation of such bases and the same, particularly those relating to "a league of nations" and the "freedom of the seas," are open to various interpretations, some of which may be in conflict with established national traditions; and

Whereas the President has announced that the various steps in the approaching negotiations abroad shall be promptly made known to the American people: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to make publicly known his own interpretation of his proposed peace terms as presented to Congress January 8, 1918, and not attempt to impose such interpretation upon the international conference about to assemble until full opportunity is presented to the American public to become acquainted with the same, to the end that this Nation may not be committed to policies in contravention of the traditions of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forthwith transmitted to the President.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes' time to express my views on this resolution before it goes to the Committee on Foreign Relations, the proper committee to which it should be referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, in his address to Congress of December 2 the President informed us that the bases of peace outlined by him to us on the 8th of January last have been accepted by the allied Governments and by the central empires, and by way of explanation of his trip to Europe he stated that it was his duty to see "that no false or mistaken interpretation is put upon them."

In view of this explanation it requires no argument to show that various interpretations may be placed upon the bases of peace which he outlined. Some of the bases relate not merely to a settlement of the present war, but to our relations in the future with all Governments. Heretofore we have been guided by certain traditions. The immortal Washington in his farewell address gave certain advice which we have religiously followed. He said:

> Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

It may well be that conditions have so changed that we should no longer follow advice by which we have been guided for more than a century. As a representative of the people, it seems to me that we should not bind ourselves to a policy at variance with it unless certain that such is the will of the people.

The fourteenth basis proposed by the President reads:

> A general association of nations must be formed under specific covenants for the purpose of affording mutual guaranties of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small States alike.

Does this basis mean that we will join with European nations in a guaranty of the political independence and territorial integrity of all States both great and small? Does it means that to preserve such territorial integrity and political independence we will in fulfillment of our guaranty use whenever necessary our Army and Navy? Does it mean that henceforth we must take part in all political and territorial disputes throughout the world? We have among us many who came to our shores and the children of many who came to our shores because of the constant quarrels and jealousies of European nations and because of the fear that such quarrels and jealousies might any day involve them in war. I do not say that we should not do our utmost to prevent future wars. That I concede is our duty, but if we propose to obligate ourselves to use our Army and Navy whenever necessary in any part of the world to preserve peace, we should be certain that we are conforming to the will of those whom we represent.

The President is the chosen leader of the United States. Any proposal which he may make will naturally carry with it great weight. If he proposes in behalf of the United States the use of its Army and Navy to preserve the peace of the world, or if he assents to any such proposal if made by another nation, what position will the Senate be in should such a proposal be adopted? Constitutionally we will be free to exercise our own judgment and to accept or reject any treaty which the Executive may negotiate. Will we, however, be free from embarrassment should other nations say to us, Your Chief Executive spoke in behalf of the American public and supposedly voiced their views? That brings me to the point of my motion. Is the President sure that his interpretation of the bases of peace is the interpretation of the American public? As he has never made known such interpretation, how can we be sure? Should he not, in all justice, before he makes any proposal on such momentous questions make known to the public what interpretation he places upon his fourteenth basis, and should he not afford the public an opportunity to voice its opinion?

The fourteenth basis is not the only one which involves a comparison of our past traditions with what should be our policy in the future. During the Civil War in order to preserve the Union we found it necessary to insist upon and to exercise the right to condemn cargo owned by a neutral and shipped from one neutral port to another neutral port where it appeared that such cargo was ultimately intended for transshipment to the enemy. In Europe the doctrine of ultimate destination was disputed, but if that doctrine had not been practiced during the present war who will dare say what would have been the result? Certainly the prevention of supplies reaching Germany through neutral countries contributed in no small measure to her defeat. Can anyone here tell me what is the true interpretation of the second basis of peace outlined by the President in January last? It reads:

> Absolute freedom of navigation upon the seas, outside territorial waters, alike in peace and in war, except as the seas may be closed in whole or in part by international action for the enforcement of international covenants.

If such had been the rule during the Civil War could supplies have flowed uninterrupedly from Europe to the South by way of Mexico? If in force during the present war, could supplies have flowed uninterruptedly from North and South America to Germany through Holland? I confess that I do not know what is the true interpretation of the phrase "absolute freedom of navigation upon the seas," and as a representative of the people I respectfully suggest that if the President's interpretation involves a departure from our traditions he should not propound such interpretation as a proposal in behalf of the American public unless he is certain that the American public approves it. How can he be certain that the American public approves an interpretation which has never been made known to it?

It is hardly necessary for me to call attention to any other basis of peace proposed by the President to illustrate my viewpoint. There has never been a time in our history which called for greater caution and wisdom. There has never been a time when the practice of pitiless publicity, so frequently advocated by the President, was more urgently required. The American public is a reading public, a thinking public. It does not hesitate and will not hesitate to express its opinion if afforded an opportunity. In my opinion the President should not in behalf of the American public make proposals which involve a radical departure unless he is certain that his proposal carries with it the approval of the people. Though we are not bound by any treaty which he may negotiate, still, in view of the fact that he was chosen by the people to the highest position in the country, other nations may not recognize that his proposals are subject to our review and may feel affronted should we differ from him. It is his duty as well as ours to act for the people; and, to avoid misunderstanding, it seems to me that the people should be told by him what is the interpretation which he places upon his bases of peace and should be advised to what extent he intends in their behalf to propose a policy which may involve an abandonment of our traditions. All I ask is that the public should be taken into the confidence of the President, that he should afford the public an opportunity to express its views, and, should it appear that there is a pronounced view upon any subject, that he will not run counter to it. It is for such reason that I have introduced my motion.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in the very pertinent remarks made by the distinguished Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] he adverted to the rather embarrassing position in which the Members of the Senate would be placed in the exercise of their constitutional duties should the peace conference act in accordance with and confirm the 14 points that were advanced by the President as the proper basis for the treaty of peace in his address to Congress on the 8th of January last. Of course, as indicated by the Senator from New Jersey, every Senator will be at liberty to exercise his own judgment concerning the matter of confirming or rejecting any treaty that may be submitted to the Senate; yet, as stated by the Senator from New Jersey, every Senator holding adverse views will be laboring under very particular embarrassment, these views having been presented by the Chief Executive of the country at the peace conference.

I want to submit, Mr. President, that the embarrassment will be increased, however, by the fact that this address was made to Congress nearly a year ago. On the 8th day of January last the President announced his views as to the kind of a treaty of peace which should be made. Up to within six weeks of this time I have no recollection that any Member of the Senate has expressed any divergence from those views thus announced by the President. We have heard within the last 30 or 60 days no little criticism of these 14 points as a proper basis for peace, and much has been said concerning the indefiniteness of these declarations and of the necessity for further elucidation of their meaning in order to clear up the obscurity which may inhere in them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. Just a moment.

Now, Mr. President, we shall be under an added embarrassment by reason of the fact that we did not speak earlier, as it seems to me, in relation to these 14 points. If the address to which we have listened this morning by the Senator from New Jersey had been made immediately upon the address of the President in January last, of course the world would have been put upon notice that the President did not speak the universal voice of the people of America; but it seems to me, Mr. President, that, in the absence of any particular criticism of the address down to within the most recent times, the people of the world very justly assumed that the views thus expressed by the President were indorsed by this great Nation.

Now I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if it is not true that he heard at the time the President made this address and various other addresses on the terms of peace—some of them made even before we had begun the war and continued at frequent intervals from that time down to the present—criticism of the President for discussing terms of peace while we were endeavoring to concentrate our energies upon gaining the victory?

Mr. WALSH. I have no such criticisms in mind. I do not undertake to say that they were not made; but that is not the point that I am making. The President did declare that a treaty ought to be made upon the basis that he laid down; and I undertake to say that, in this body at least, down to within 60 days no dissent has been made from those principles; at least I speak from my own recollection about the matter.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I have yielded to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

Mr. KNOX. May I correct the Senator from Montana as to the facts?

Mr. WALSH. I have yielded to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. KNOX. May I have the floor for a moment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will conclude in just a moment.

Mr. KNOX. Very well.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I want to say in my own behalf as an individual, enjoying the right of independent opinion, as every other citizen of the country does, and in whatever responsibility devolves on me as a Senator of the United States, that I do not feel that I am in default in not having expressed opinions on this subject and I do not believe that the American people are in default upon it.

My understanding of the attitude of those who differed with the President in regard to this matter is that they deprecated the continuous discussion by the President, or by anybody else, especially anyone else in authority, of peace, and the cry of peace, peace, peace, and what the terms of peace should be, before we had even been able to mobilize our resources to gain the victory which was the essential foundation for any peace, whatever its terms might be.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I now yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, referring to the specific proposition of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] that he had not heard in this body any dissent from the views expressed by the President last January, I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact, which he has evidently overlooked, that, so far from this body being estopped from criticizing the points made by the President, the action of this body, at least technically, stands adverse to those points, and for this reason: Within a day or two after the President had delivered his address announcing the 14 points the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] introduced into the Senate a resolution approving the conditions of peace announced by the President. That resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; it was taken up by that committee for consideration, and it was developed that to press the resolution would be to cause a spirited and untimely discussion of the subject upon the floor of the Senate, which would not be to any advantage; and that resolution lies to-day in the pigeonholes of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the fact remains, however, as I have stated, that no one has arisen on the floor, until the Senator from New Jersey spoke this morning, to express the slightest dissent.

I now desire to add further that in the month of May, 1916, in a public address delivered in this city, which was introduced as a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the President announced, in a general way at least, his adherence to the idea of a league of nations for securing the permanent peace of the world. I have no recollection of any particular criticism upon the floor of the Senate of the views thus expressed by him until within the last 60 days.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Do I understand the Senator from Montana to assert that the American public are irrevocably committed to the 14 principles as declared nearly 11 months ago by the President of the United States?

Mr. WALSH. No; I have not said so, and I have not said that any Senator is irrevocably committed; but I do say that any Senator who has remained silent for a year after these views of the President have been expressed and after the people of the world have had just reason for believing that he spoke the views of the American people ought to hesitate a little bit now about voicing his criticism.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. May I state, in reply to the Senator from Montana, that at that time we were at war, the outcome of which was in doubt, and it was the feeling of many Senators, including myself, that at that time it was not proper to criticize the peace terms of the President.

Mr. JOHNSON of California and Mr. KELLOGG addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I am very glad, indeed, that the resolution was presented by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], and much that he says finds a very responsive echo in my own thought. I feel, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] has stated, that no man upon this floor is estopped from questioning, opposing, or controverting the terms that were laid down by the President in his address of January last. I recall that address most vividly. I remember that after that address was made and the general principles announced in it there were some of us who dissented very vigorously from it, and I recall, too, that just one month later the President of the United States made another address, in which, substantially, he said that his previous terms were tentative and that they constituted but a provisional sketch. I do not state his language exactly; I state my interpretation of it. I remember also that after that February address some of us commented upon it and expressed our approval of it and our approval of the fact that it was a modification of the January address.

As the Senator from New Jersey well says, we are to-day in the situation that we do not know the President's interpretation of what he has stated regarding terms of peace; the American people do not know the President's interpretation of his 14 points. Some of them are nebulous; some of them are yet indefinable; some of them as yet are not understood; and the President of the United States has departed, or is about to depart, for a foreign shore, leaving the American people neither understanding what he meant nor knowing what he goes for.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. He says that he goes for the purpose, as I understood his address the other day, of interpreting to somebody else the terms of peace that he laid down in January last. What we ask, not in any partisan spirit at all but echoing what our people ask, is that he interpret first to the American people and to the American Congress.

Mr. PITTMAN. I wanted to ask a question of the Senator from California.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. THOMAS. Has morning business been concluded?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

PEACE TREATIES.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I offer a resolution, which I think is pertinent particularly at this time, and ask that it may be read and lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 365) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas the President of the United States on January 8, 1918, declared that the first prerequisite of a durable peace was "open covenants openly arrived at, after which there shall be no private international understandings of any kind, but diplomacy shall proceed always frankly and in the public view"; and

Whereas this was a clear denunciation of secret diplomacy, the chief weapon of despotism, and the most prolific source of the world's disturbance; and

Whereas no covenants of peace can be concluded or be binding upon the people of the United States except through treaties ratified by the Senate of the United States; and

Whereas the people who waged and won this war in behalf of democracy are entitled to know in advance of their being bound by the terms of any treaties of peace: Therefore be it

Resolved, That when such treaty or treaties of peace relative to the termination of this war are transmitted to the Senate of the United States for consideration it or they shall at once and as soon as received be made public, and that the consideration of the same and all discussions relative thereto shall be in the open sessions of the Senate.

THE PRESIDENTIAL OFFICE.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, before the morning business is closed, I should like to secure unanimous consent to comment for a few minutes upon a case which appears to me as in point with regard to the discussion which occurred yesterday of the powers of the President when he leaves the territorial limits of the United States. I shall take only a few minutes—not more than 10 or 15 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have found a case in the Seventy-eighth Missouri Reports, at page 139, entitled State ex rel. Crittenden against Walker, which, it seems to me, covers this matter better than any case that has been presented or any case that I have been able to find. It relates to the question as to what is the power of the governor upon leaving the State, and as to whether or not a lieutenant governor can take upon himself the powers of the governor as soon as the governor crosses the boundary of his State. It arose when Mr. Crittenden was governor of Missouri, and when he went to New York upon some business affairs of the State and was gone a considerable length of time. When he came back his salary was held up by the auditor on the ground that he had been out of the State, that there had been a lieutenant governor administering the affairs of the State, and therefore that he was not entitled to receive all of his month's salary from the State.

I will read extracts from the opinion:

"The question presented, therefore, is, Can the governor who absents himself from the State for the purpose of performing duties imposed upon him by the constitution and laws of the State be deprived of his salary during such absence? The attorney general, in an argument characterized for its plausibility and ingenuity, insists that he can, and bases his argument on the following section of the constitution: 'In case of the death, conviction or impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the State, or other disability of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall be removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.' It is insisted that by virtue of this section, in case of the absence of the governor from the State for any purpose or for any period of time, however short, that pro tempore he ceases to be governor, and all executive functions, as well as the emoluments of the office, devolve upon the lieutenant governor."

I will call attention to the fact that that section is much more specific than the clause of the Constitution of the United States, because the clause in the Federal Constitution does not refer to absence in specific terms. It says simply:

"In case of the removal of the President from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice President."

There is no reference to his absence from the territory of the United States. It is a pure question of ability or inability to perform the duties of the office. The opinion continues:

"We are of the opinion that the construction contended for is too narrow, is not warranted by the section. Treating conviction or impeachment either as meaning conviction on impeachment, conviction of any crime as well as impeachment, it will be perceived that there are five specified causes, upon the happening of any one of which the duties and powers, as well as the salary of governor, devolve upon the lieutenant governor. It will be observed that four of these causes, viz, death, conviction on impeachment, failure to qualify, and resignation, are of such nature as absolutely to create a vacancy in the office; and all of the four are of such character that no one of them can occur without its being a matter of such public notoriety as to be known throughout the State in 24 hours after the death, impeachment, failure to qualify, or resignation occurs, thus not leaving in doubt or to conjecture the right of the lieutenant governor to assume at once the performance of the duties and powers of the gubernatorial office and to receive the emoluments thereof.

"In view of the fact that the death, impeachment, failure to qualify, or resignation of the governor involves necessarily a vacancy in the office, and the further fact that whenever any one of the above events occurs the right of the lieutenant governor is not left open to question or doubt, it may well be insisted upon, as it is by relator, that the fifth specified cause, viz, 'absence from the State,' does not mean either an absence from the State for the purpose of performing a duty imposed by law upon the governor or a mere casual absence of a few days, but that it is necessarily implied from its connection with the other specified causes that such absence must be of such a character as to indicate on the part of the governor an abdication for the time being of the duties of the office, and such as, in the opinion of the governor, would make it necessary for him to call upon the lieutenant governor to take his place and perform such duties as the condition of business in his office and the exigencies likely to arise might require during such absence, and when so called upon his authority to act could neither be questioned nor his right to the emoluments of the office denied until the governor returned and resumed his place.

"Speaking for myself, and using the language of Ludeling, C. J., in the case of the State ex rel. Warmoth v. Graham (26 La. Ann., 568; s. c., 21 Am. Rep., 551), when a like question was under consideration, I do not believe 'that it was ever contemplated that the movements of the governor should be watched with a view that the lieutenant governor * * * should slip into his seat the moment he stepped across the borders of the State.'

"It is neither provided by the constitution nor by any law of the State how the absence of the governor from the State shall be ascertained or made known either to the people or to the lieutenant governor, so as to authorize him to assume the functions of the executive office or to impart knowledge of the fact to the people of his authority so that it may be recognized and unquestioned.

"In the event of the death, impeachment, failure to qualify, or resignation of the governor no such difficulty presents itself. If the lieutenant governor or auditor may assume to determine that any absence of the governor from the State, without reference to the purpose of the absence or the character and extent of it, is such an absence as for the time being ousts him of his office and casts upon the lieutenant governor the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office, why might they not, in passing upon the meaning of the words occurring in said said section 'or other disability of the governor,' determine that he was disabled by reason of insanity, without waiting for the judgment of the court pronouncing him insane, in a proceeding to determine that question by inquest of lunacy.

"The only authority we have found upon the question is the case of the State ex rel. Warmoth v. Graham (26 La. Ann., 568), which was a proceeding by mandamus to compel the auditor to pay the warrant of the governor for his salary from the 6th to the 19th of May, 1871, and from the 26th of June to the 17th of July, 1871. The auditor refused to pay this warrant on the ground and for the reason that during said periods the governor was absent from the State and that the duties of governor, as well as his salary, devolved upon the lieutenant governor, to whom the salary had been paid.

"Under the constitution and laws of Louisiana, it is provided, as it is in our Constitution, that in the absence of the governor from the State, or his inability to discharge the duties of the office, the powers and duties as well as the salary of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor. It was held in that case that it was the duty of the auditor to pay the warrant, and as it is the only case in point we have been able to find it is deemed not inappropriate to quote what was said by the court in the disposition of the question, which is as follows:

"'It is evident if the lieutenant governor be authorized to assume the functions of the governor during any temporary absence of the governor from the State, he may also, whenever the governor is unable to attend to the duties of his office on account of sickness, in case of "inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office." We do not believe this to be the meaning intended by the framers of the constitution. The inability to discharge the duties of the office, as well as the absence from the State spoken of in the article, are such as would affect injuriously the public interest. The mere absence at Pass Christian, within a few hours' run of the capital, could not by any possibility affect the public interest. How is the absence of the governor to be ascertained? It is manifest that there ought to be some certain proof accessible to the public from which they may with certainty derive the knowledge as to who is authorized to act as governor of the State. As the law makes no provision for the mode in which the governor shall manifest to the public his absence from the State, it necessarily is left to his discretion, subject to his responsibility to the people. If the interests of the State should suffer in consequence of his prolonged absence, he would be amenable to public sentiment and to the control of the impeaching power of the State. Some public record should be made of the intended absence, or the governor should publicly place the lieutenant governor in charge of the government, so that the term of absence shall appear of record, and during such absence the acts of the acting governor would be of unquestionable validity. Anything less than this might create confusion and uncertainty.'

"The only difference between the above case and the one before us is that it does not appear that the governor of Louisiana was absent from the State in the discharge of a duty imposed upon him by law, while in the case under consideration the governor was absent for the purpose of performing a duty which the law enjoined upon him in conjunction with others. And while the facts in the present case do not call upon us to go as far as the court went in said case, it may not be improper to say that the views therein expressed are not inconsistent with sound reason, and if an enlightened court under a constitution and laws which, like our Constitution, devolve the duties of the office of governor upon the lieutenant governor in the event of the absence of the governor from the State, has determined, as it did in the case above cited, that the absence of the governor from the State for a limited time creates no such vacancy in the office as to authorize the lieutenant governor to assume the duties and prerogatives and receive the salary of the governor, it is, at the very least, persuasive authority for the soundness of the conclusion we have reached that the absence of the governor from the State for the purpose of performing a duty cast upon him by law did not authorize the lieutenant governor to assume the functions of his office during such absence and receive his salary."

Mr. President, the Constitution imposes upon the Chief Executive the duty to negotiate and make treaties, subject to ratification by the Senate. It does seem to me that as the peace of our own Nation and of all the nations of the world is involved it is the highest official duty of the President to be at that place where he can be of most benefit to our own country. In my judgment, his presence at the peace table will be the inspiration which will produce a treaty based upon American ideals. I can not conceive that any court would declare his "inability to discharge the powers and duties" of his office when he is performing his highest duty imposed by the Constitution itself.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. I thought the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well, I will yield the floor.

Mr. KELLOGG. As the morning hour seems to be taken up by general discussion, I ask unanimous consent to submit some remarks upon the question of a league of nations and the resolution introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me to have an order made?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield for that purpose.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—POMEROY PARKER.

On motion of Mr. OVERMAN, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers accompanying the bill S. 7281, Sixty-first Congress, second session, to correct the military record of Pomeroy Parker, no adverse report having been made thereon.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator from Minnesota kindly yields to me to have an order made for a committee assignment, which I send to the desk.

The order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That Senator VARDAMAN be assigned to the chairmanship of the Committee on Manufactures, and that he, on his own request, be relieved from further service as chairman of the Committee on Conservation of National Resources, but not from membership thereof.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, were the revenue bill now before the Senate, or any very pressing legislation demanding our attention, I should not take the time of the Senate to discuss this subject. But, Mr. President, the Senate, the coordinate treaty-making body, is not represented upon the peace commission, and the only way we have of making our views known upon the important world issues of to-day is by a resolution of the Senate declaring principles or by the individual expressions of Senators upon the floor.

I am not complaining of this situation, but it was with interest that I saw the resolution introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] yesterday, declaring certain principles. That resolution is entirely different from the resolution of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] providing for the appointment of commissioners to visit Versailles during the sitting of the peace commission. That resolution I do not approve of. It is proper that the Senate should express its views in a resolution upon any subject. I do not think it proper for the Senate to send commissioners or ambassadors to Versailles to the peace conference. They would have no position; they would not be entitled to admission to the conferences of the commissioners of the allied and other nations; they would be embarrassed in their position and they would embarrass our friends, the English, French, and Italian commissioners, who would desire, of course, to show respect to the representatives of this great body. They would also embarrass the President.

I believe that the first object of the Senate and of the Senators is the good of the Nation and their desire is that the President and his commissioners may bring out of the great conference at Versailles a solution which will reflect honor upon this Nation and will be a lasting benefit in the generations to come. That ought to be the controlling motive of the Senate, even though we may believe that the Senate should have been represented upon the commission.

I merely make this remark in passing in order to distinguish the resolution from that of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I shall not discuss the resolution at length, but some of its provisions are inseparably connected with the subject upon which I crave the permission of the Senate to submit a few remarks.

Our objects in this war might well be stated by the Senate, and perhaps after the settlement of those questions directly involved it would be better to postpone to some future period the question of a league of nations or a change of the general rule for the freedom of the sea.

I take it that we entered the war not for any vague idea of establishing world democracy or a league of nations, but for a definite purpose, because our rights upon the high seas had been invaded, our citizens murdered, the agents of Germany had plotted in our midst against our peace and security, violated our laws, and incited our neighbors to war with us. In order that we might make this country safe against the domination of Germany, we went to war. I think it quite proper that when those issues are settled around the great council table, the issues of indemnity to Belgium, France, and Serbia and other nations, what shall be done with the German Navy and the German military armaments, and many, many other questions, it would be proper to take up the question of a league of nations, not alone between the belligerent countries, but with all the civilized nations of the world, because the neutral nations are as much interested in the subject as we are.

Furthermore, that conference will be interested, at least the principal nations of Europe will be interested, in defining the boundaries and in declaring the independence and perhaps guaranteeing the integrity of various nations or would-be nations of Europe. I take it that this country is only very indirectly interested in that subject, and that we are not going to fix the boundaries of the Balkan States or other States of Eastern Europe, or of those people who aspire to sovereignty, and that we are not going by an armed force to guarantee those boundaries or guarantee the integrity of those countries during all the years to come.

Are we to police the vast and disturbed domain of Russia or be forever embroiled in the Balkan troubles or the troubles over the Golden Horn or the aspirations of Poland? While we should hope that they will be settled so that each of the great peoples of the world may have an opportunity to develop their nationality, yet it is another question if we are called upon to fix their boundaries, their autonomy, and to forever guarantee them. That is the entanglement against which the Father of his Country warned us.

Furthermore, I am admonished when I come to study the question of a league of nations that no peace convention could possibly settle upon the terms of such a league within the time that the great issues of this war should be determined. The world has been disturbed and ravished for four years. The nations are weary of war. It is now practically over, and as soon as possible the issues pertaining to the war should be settled, our Army returned, and we and all the other nations allowed to pursue the pathways of peace. But I do not mean by that that we should not make an effort toward a league or concert of nations which shall have in mind the preservation of the peace of the world.

Mr. President, the establishment of a league of nations is, I believe, now foremost in the minds of statesmen as well as in the minds of the people of the civilized world. It is being discussed by publicists and journalists the world over. The impelling causes which at this time bring this ancient and honorable subject before the public are too fresh in our minds to need extended discussion.

The appalling calamity through which the world has just passed, the destruction of life, the awful suffering, the shocking crimes committed under the guise of war, and the waste of nations has created anew in the minds of the suffering people a determination to put an end to such conflicts.

It is probably too much to hope that the world will be permanently at peace. De Segur, the great general and historian of the French Revolution and the Napoleonic régime, said:

Universal peace is the dream of the wise; war is the history of mankind.

As much as the world longs for peace to-day, we are confronted by the cold facts that unfortunately this is true. A league of nations to enforce peace has been a favorite theme for discussion by benevolent statesmen and publicists for 2,000 years. From the Hellenic League to the Holy Alliance—in fact, to the last Hague convention—it has been tried time and again, and although its ameliorating influences have undoubtedly been felt in decreasing the number of those conflicts which from time to time have devastated countries, yet the wrecks of nations, scattered along the pathway of human progress, testify to its failure as a complete preventative of war.

This, however, should not discourage us. I believe the time has come to try to establish a league to prevent war and to enforce peace, which may not be an entire preventative, but, backed by a world public sentiment, will have a tremendous influence toward maintaining just and equitable relations between nations and preventing the horrors of war.

If ever there was a period in history when it behooves statesmen to exert themselves to the utmost to find some means for the settlement of those controversies which divide nations other than the resort to arms, the present is the time.

I do not for a moment disparage the principles upon which we, with the allied nations, have carried on this war. I was an advocate of entering the contest. I believe the cause was sufficient, and the principles for which we were fighting soared high above the horrors of the battle field; that America in this struggle has found her soul. The splendid spirit of her sons who have given their lives in this sacrifice, the splendid spirit of the people which has made it possible to send that great tidal wave of humanity to crush the devastating military power of Germany, does not lead us into the paths of war but into the paths of peace. We should not overlook this fact. The peoples of the world, the toiling millions upon whom this war has fallen with crushing weight, were determined that it should end by victory, and are determined now that no step shall be neglected which will tend to bring a permanent peace.

I have no sympathy with the tenets of socialism, State or international. The growth of this spirit has been augmented by the abuses of war, and I am willing to lift my voice in favor of a league of nations to maintain peace. But I am not in favor of an impracticable, I might say an impossible, scheme that I believe yet rests in the brain of the dreamer and in the womb of the far-distant future. The condition of the world is far better for the successful establishment and maintenance of such a league at this time than ever before. No league of nations can succeed unless it originates and is sustained by an honest public sentiment of the peoples involved, and unless the Governments joining in such league are responsive to the demands of the people. These conditions exist to-day to a greater degree than ever before. I believe with the closing of this war irresponsible government will have practically disappeared from the face of the earth and in its place there must come in Russia, in the central empires, and in the other nations, a government responsive to the will and voice of the people, such as exists to-day in the great allied nations, fighting, as we all hope, the last world war for the supremacy of right and justice. One thing is sure. Unless Germany changes her attitude toward the rest of the world, unless the aspirations and policies which have guided that nation in the past are to be changed and a more enlightened sentiment shall control the German people, and a government is established responsive to this sentiment, there must be a league of the allied nations to see that Germany is rendered powerless to renew the contest.

Again, another thing which will make a far more permanent peace is the abolition of the system of secret treaties and alliances. I believe, as I have said before, that the treaties which close this greatest of world conflicts and settle the disputes upon which the future of nations depends should be made in the open, in the light of public opinion, and approved by an honest world sentiment. How many leagues of nations, like the Holy Alliance, have foundered upon the rocks of disaster because they were based upon false principles of justice and sustained by secret alliances and the hope of dynastic supremacy? I deplore what seems to be the disposition of the President not to take the American people into his confidence, especially that body of the supreme legislative power of the Nation, the coordinate treaty-making body, the United States Senate. So far as possible we should know his views upon the difficult problems which must be settled in Paris. I would have the world informed as to the progress of the negotiations and the principal issues involved from time to time between nations surrounding the council table. It is only in this way that a healthy public sentiment can be expressed and a peace arrived at which shall meet the judgment of the civilized world.

I come now to the more concrete question—what kind of a league or concert of nations we should approve—and upon this subject I desire not to make dogmatic statements but to keep an open mind. If I am permitted to take part in the deliberations of the Senate upon the confirmation of the treaty of peace, I shall go as far as possible in sustaining measures necessary to prevent the recurrence of war, provided they do not infringe upon those national rights which I believe all of us deem to be necessary to the future prosperity and happiness of this people.

I listened with interest to the eloquent speech of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] voicing his opposition to a league of nations. Granting his premises or definition of a league of nations, I do not, in the main, disagree with him. But it depends upon what we consider to be a proper league of nations. If you mean by a league of nations that there shall be established a world supergovernment, with legislatures and judicial tribunals—under which the signatory powers will be to some extent vassal states—with power to legislate or interfere with our internal affairs, our foreign trade, our tariff duties, our regulations of commerce, the development and disposition of the great natural resources of this country, I say emphatically I am not in favor, and I know of no one, except, possibly, some extreme, impractical dreamer, who would favor such a scheme. I have studied, as far as possible, the public expressions upon this subject during the war, and I believe that the great preponderance of sentiment of the leading statesmen and publicists of the world, as well as all the organs of public expression, is that such a scheme, or any scheme of a world government whose laws can be enforced by international tribunals, is impracticable and inadvisable.

I do not favor the establishment of any supergovernment over nations. Nor do I believe, considering our position, that it would be policy to do it. Furthermore, I am of the opinion that under the principles of our form of Government, established by the Constitution, we have no power to enter into such a treaty. The Constitution of the United States irrevocably vests the government in the legislative branch, to be elected by the people, the execution of the laws in the executive branch, and the judicial to construe those laws and to perform other judicial duties.

Under Article VI of the Constitution it is provided that—

This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land, and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

While it is true that in this country a treaty, if it is self-executory, has the effect of a law, and if it pertains to any subject within the treaty-making power is supreme over the laws and constitutions of States, yet it is not supreme over the Constitution of the United States or of a subsequent law of Congress, for it is clear that under the Constitution Congress has power to denounce any treaty.

Let me illustrate, for example. Suppose we should join a league of nations with an international force which had authority to bind the signatory powers to make war upon any country, and such league should undertake to exercise such power. The Constitution of the United States irrevocably places in the Congress the power to declare war. Has the Senate of the United States and the President under the treaty-making power the authority to enter into a treaty that will permit a supergovernment of the world to involve us in war or to declare war for us against another nation? That is one case of many which might be made to illustrate this principle.

Mr. President, I ask permission, without reading, to insert in the RECORD a quotation from the decision in Whitney v. Robertson (124 U. S., 190).

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

A treaty is primarily a contract between two or more independent nations, and is so regarded by writers on public law. For the infraction of its provisions a remedy must be sought by the injured party through reclamations upon the other. When the stipulations are not self-executing—that is, require no legislation to make them operative—to that extent they have the force and effect of a legislative enactment. Congress may modify such provisions, so far as they bind the United States, or supersede them altogether. By the Constitution a treaty is placed on the same footing and made of like obligation with an act of legislation. Both are declared by that instrument to be the supreme law of the land, and no superior efficacy is given to either over the other. When the two relate to the same subject, the courts will always endeavor to construe them so as to give effect to both, if that can be done without violating the language of either; but if the two are inconsistent, the one last in date will control the other, provided always the stipulation of the treaty on the subject is self-executing. If the country with which the treaty is made is dissatisfied with the action of the legislative department, it may present its complaint to the executive head of the Government and take such other measures as it may deem essential for the protection of its interests.

Mr. KELLOGG. In the case of Thomas v. Gay (169 U. S., 264), the Supreme Court said—and I will read this, for it is very short and, I think, very pertinent:

It is well settled that an act of Congress may supersede a prior treaty and that any questions that may arise are beyond the sphere of judicial cognizance and must be met by the political department of the Government.

It need hardly be said that a treaty can not change the Constitution or be held valid if it be in violation of that instrument. This results from the nature and fundamental principles of our Government. The effect of treaties and acts of Congress, when in conflict, is not settled by the Constitution. But the question is not involved in any doubt as to its proper solution. A treaty may supersede a prior act of Congress and an act of Congress may supersede a prior treaty. (Foster v. Neilson, 2 Pet., 253; Taylor v. Morton, 2 Curt., 454.)

It would seem, therefore, of questionable propriety as well as doubtful authority to attempt to establish over this country an arbitral chamber or tribunal which can, without the consent of our legislative authority, in any way control our internal policies or any activities of the Government which are, by our Constitution, committed to the legislative authority. While some of the foreign governments are not embarrassed by such limited powers, yet I believe it is the consensus of opinion of the leading nations of the world that any such plan of supergovernment is impracticable.

It is, of course, impossible for me, in the space of these remarks, to review the principal expressions even of the leading statesmen of the world upon this intricate and difficult problem. I think there is great diversity of opinion among the allied powers, centering, however, upon a general and almost universal sentiment that some league or general treaty must be made which will have an effect to prevent the recurrence of such a calamity. The nearest expression to a national sentiment, perhaps, comes from the House of Lords in England. All the leading statesmen in England have declared in favor of some kind of a league of nations; not, however, such a one as received the condemnation of the Senator from Missouri.

On the 19th of March, 1918, Lord Parmoor moved, in the House of Lords, the following resolutions:

That this House approves of the principle of a league of nations and the constitution of a tribunal whose orders shall be enforcible by an adequate sanction.

Mark those words.

After most elaborate debate, the resolution was modified and adopted, reading as follows:

That this House approves the principle of a league of nations and commends to His Majesty's Government a study of the conditions required for its realization.

Quite a different thing.

The debate was participated in by Lord Parmoor, the Marquis of Lansdowne; Lord Bryce; Lord Parker, a thorough student of the subject; Lord Curzon, a member of the Government; and many others. I wish to briefly quote from some of those statesmen their views upon this important question.

In the discussion of the subject, Lord Parker, who has been one of the advocates of a league of nations, said:

As soon as the risk of war becomes great, nations will begin to settle their differences by other means. Arbitrations may be resorted to, possibly international councils or international conciliation boards may be made use of, but tribunals in the ordinary sense of the word—legal tribunals for the administration of international law based upon an organized international force—is a very different matter, and one which must be left, in my opinion, to grow out of that sense of mutual obligation which is beginning to exist amongst nations. If we attack that part of the problem at first, I have very serious fears that the whole structure which we are trying to build may fall about our ears. Probably if any dispute now arose between ourselves and any other great nation—say the United States of America—the nations in difference would easily arrive at some means of settling the dispute otherwise than by war, whether by a tribunal ad hoc or in some other way. It is a very serious matter to ask great nations in the present day to agree beforehand to submit disputes of whatever nature to the arbitrament of a tribunal consisting of representatives of some two dozen or three dozen States, many of whom may be indirectly interested in casting their votes on this side or on that.

Lord Bryce, who, everyone knows, is a distinguished scholar of the science of government and international law, discussing this problem on June 26, 1918, in the House of Lords, said:

Now, the creation of such a machinery as that to which I have referred, the provision of means for the pacific settlement of disputes instead of resorting to war, is a difficult and an infinitely complex question. Attempts have been made heretofore—the one which is most familiar to your Lordships was that made under bad auspices by the Holy Alliance in 1815—to provide some method for permanent peace. That attempt was destined to failure from the false principles upon which it was founded. We must go far deeper, and found it upon principles compatible with freedom. I do not for a moment underrate the difficulties which must be faced, and I think that we may dismiss all those grandiose notions of what has been called a federation of the world, an attempt to induce the great States to forego their sovereignty and to submit themselves to some superior authority and to constitute an international army. All these schemes, if they ever are realizable, must belong to a very distant future, and I do not think we ought to contemplate any further limitation of sovereignty than is necessarily involved in the obligations undertaken by a treaty. But, however limited and cautious our plans may be, it is not to be denied that the difficulties in the way are very great, and that the questions to be solved are of the utmost complexity. I do not think anyone can appreciate how great those difficulties are unless he addresses himself to a close and long-continued study of the subject, and to the various plans that have been advanced.

Earl Curzon, while supporting the general principles of a league of nations and arbitration of the disputes which lead to war, used the following significant language, which I ask to include in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Then I come to the question of the sanction, which also, I think, must be somewhat closely scrutinized. The two forms suggested have been that of economic pressure or boycott and that of the use of force. In theory economic pressure is, of course, the easiest method to adopt, and it would seem prima facie to be likely to be the most effective. You suspend commercial intercourse with the offending nation; you stop her imports and exports so far as you can; you prohibit communication by telegraph, by telephone, by post, by railway, by wireless telegraphy with her; you desist from lending her capital or from paying her debts; you blockade her coasts. Well, a good many of these expedients we have adopted; almost the whole of them we are practicing in the present war. They did not, it is true, succeed in preventing the war; they have not, at any rate at present, curtailed its duration. But I should like to put it in this way: I doubt very much whether, if Germany had anticipated when she plunged into war the consequences, commercial, financial, and otherwise, which would be entailed upon her by two, three, or four years of war, she would have been as eager to plunge in as she was. Remember this: Though we have not done possibly all that we desired, we have done a great deal, and we could have done a great deal more if your hands had not been tied by certain difficulties. It is naturally a delicate matter for me to allude to this. A good many of them have been removed by the entry of the United States of America into the war, but we have always the task of handling with great and necessary delicacy the neutral States, and this difficulty still remains with us. But observe that this difficulty will not arise if you have a league of nations to which all the States belong, because then there will be no neutral States whose interests you will have to consider.

This brings me to the final point of the proposed sanction force. And here I am very much in agreement with what I understood to be the argument of my noble friend, Lord Bryce. Some people seem to imagine that you can set up an international court—or a supernational court, I suppose it ought to be called—with an international police. The powers in general under these suggestions are to retain only such forces as the court may decree; the whole of them are to be at the disposal of the central tribunal; and if that were so, it is clear that such a force would have to be so preponderant in numbers and in the other elements of strength as to exercise an overwhelming superiority in arms over any offending party with whom it might have to deal. Speaking for myself, I doubt not merely the wisdom but the possibility of setting up an international police. I doubt very much whether sovereign States would submit to this restriction, almost this derogation of their sovereignty, and I do not see how an international police, marshaled and set on foot in the way I have described, would be able to cope with the difficulties that might arise, not so much in Europe, but in the heart of the African continent or elsewhere.

I suggest, in respect of all these schemes, that we should not proceed too quickly or too far. I think that the attempt at this stage to construct a hard-and-fast juridical system would be attended with failure; and if you fail now, observe that you not only destroy the chances of the scheme which you may be trying to construct, but you may throw back the movement for generations. That has been the fate—I was alluding to history just now—of those earlier attempts at leagues of nations; they were premature; they were presently diverted from their proper object, and they expired in ridicule and scorn.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is sufficient to say that, while Earl Curzon suggests economic pressure, he dissents emphatically from any superjudicial tribunal whose decree shall be put into effect by international force. He is speaking, we must remember, after the greatest contest and the greatest trial the British Government has ever passed through probably in all its history, and certainly since the Napoleonic wars.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. May I not ask the able Senator if he will not recall that Lord Curzon, particularly in the very matters to which the Senator is alluding, seems to rest his final determination upon the inability of having all nations become a party to the league? To use an ordinary phrase, his stumbling block was as to whether we could bring all nations into the league, but he did not say—and I yield to the Senator's better memory, as I have not had that proceeding so lately before me as the Senator has—in that same discussion, following Lord Bryce and others, that the league would depend for success upon having all of the nations enter into it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think so.

Mr. LEWIS. And that upon that he rested his conclusion.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have read with great care, within the last few weeks, all of the debates in the House of Lords and the House of Commons upon that subject; I have read the principal comments of the European journals, including the French, and I do not recollect that Lord Curzon or any of the other distinguished English statesmen placed their objection upon that ground; but they placed their objection upon the ground stated by Lord Parker, Lord Bryce, and Lord Curzon in the quotations I have given.

It is true that Mr. Balfour and the prime minister, Lloyd George, have made general declarations in favor of a league of nations, as we hear constantly in the press and by Senators' declarations that they are in favor of a league of nations, but it depends upon what the league of nations is to be. When you come to define it as a supertribunal, a standing army of the world, whereby nations of necessity give up their sovereignty or a portion of their sovereignty, few statesmen of the present day, I believe, recommend it or are in favor of it.

I was saying that the statesmen of Great Britain were standing with the great war then in their faces. They were looking over the past three years of bloodshed and ruin which had tried the British nation as never before in its history, and they were longing for peace. They were Anglo-Saxon statesmen, whose desire was to spread the doctrine of liberty over the world and not that of military power; and yet these gentlemen, with their clear-sighted vision, did not recognize in a league of nations of this kind a solution of the world's difficulties, but did recognize the necessity for a closer relation, a concert of nations, an educated public national and international sentiment, that will go far toward ending these terrible struggles.

The discussion in the House of Lords, as well as the discussion in the House of Commons, by the principal ministers in the present Government, leads me to the conclusion that England is probably willing to go as far as if not farther than any of the other nations of Europe in the establishment of a league of nations which shall exercise the right of mediation, conciliation, and arbitration of disputes between nations which lead to war; that England is not ready to pronounce in favor of a superjudicial tribunal, whose decrees shall be executed by international armed force; but I think it is the consensus of opinion of her statesmen that she is willing to go much further than heretofore in the establishment of suitable machinery for mediation, conciliation, and arbitration, and to exert international pressure by concert of peoples for maintenance of peace. It will be seen that some of her public men advocate economic pressure; others the appeal to the enlightened sentiment of the nations.

In France there has been no declaration by resolution of the Chamber of Deputies or the Senate, so far as I am aware, expressing an opinion upon this subject.

I am informed that a commission was appointed by the French Government to study this important question—I believe it was headed by that distinguished jurist, Leon Bourgeoise—that a report has been made which has been furnished to the allied Governments, and that our Government has a copy, although I have not had the opportunity of seeing it and can only state what developed in the debate in the House of Lords and from what I have gathered from the French journals.

Lord Curzon stated on June 26, 1918, that such a report had been made and communicated to the allied nations, but that it had not yet reached the British Government. He said:

> The French commission appears to have pointed out that it would be out of the question to set up an international police—a State above all other States whose aims should be to substitute law for force in the settlement of these national disputes. That is a statement of opinion with which I think we shall all concur.

This commission was appointed by the French Government, as I understand, simply to make inquiry and recommendations; that it has no authority to speak for the Government. From the accounts in the French papers I would judge that while this report has not been made public the conclusions of the commission have, to a considerable extent, reached the public through the press. As near as I can judge, the French commission does not recommend any league of nations having control over the governmental affairs of the signatory powers. The commission apparently recommends the continuance of The Hague tribunals, a provision for the submission to an arbitration tribunal of those legal questions which are called, in diplomatic parlance, justiciable as distinguished from political, and the establishment of a court or commission of conciliation or mediation, to be composed of representatives from each country, which shall take up and adjust, if possible, those political or nonjusticiable disputes between nations. The question I am in doubt upon is what pressure or power this commission recommends for the enforcement of the judgment of such commissions. I am led to believe that the pressure of public opinion is the principal one relied upon and that if any force is recommended it is after all other means have been exhausted, and I am not clear that such force is recommended at all.

Mr. Robert E. Olds, a lawyer of distinction, a student of the affairs of government, and who has had an exceptional opportunity to observe public sentiment in France, writes me on October 14 as follows:

> I assume you also are following closely the career of that ancient and honorable idea of a league of nations. It is a favorite theme at the conclusion of all great wars. I try to read each day the London Times and a couple of Paris papers (usually the Figaro and the Gaulois or Journal des Debats). Two or three times a week I get the Journal de Geneve. The British and French periodicals are also, of course, available. The English, I find, are pretty generally for the league, although opinion is by no means unanimous.

I think I have shown the kind of a league that the English statesmen are in favor of.

> In France the idea has taken no root at all. I have looked in vain for any rational discussion of it. There is a studied avoidance of the subject alike by statesmen, publicists, and journalists. One gains the distinct impression that the French regard the notion as chimerical and visionary. Perhaps the national loathing of Germany and the consequent reluctance to go into any combination of which Germany might be a member goes far to explain the attitude.

For those who have not already done so, I suggest the consideration of an outline of a league of nations proposed by Lord Parker in his speech in the House of Lords on the 19th of March. I do not believe that we are going to enter into a treaty of peace to end this great war without an earnest effort, guided by all the wisdom and experience of preceding ages, to arrive at some agreement, some league or concert of nations, which shall exercise influence not only upon world public sentiment but in guiding nations to the pathway of peace and preventing a conflict of arms. I am not, of course, willing that this country, if we could do so, should turn over to any supergovernment control over our domestic policies, the development of our great natural resources, or our trade and commerce with other nations, questions of immigration, of customs duties, or the Monroe doctrine. We are fortunately situated. We produce within our domain not only our own needs but a surplus of all the principal raw materials going into the commerce of the world. With food supplies, iron, copper, oil, timber, cotton, and other products there are but few things for which we must depend upon the outside world. But we should undoubtedly yield, as far as possible, in order that at the close of the war we and the other nations shall not commence to prepare for the next war.

In addition to the enormous burden which this war has left upon the belligerent nations, upon our country as well as the European countries, are we to press down upon the people the burden of growing armament and gigantic militarism?

I have not advocated that we should not always be prepared to meet and protect our territory and our rights, but that if possible we should stop the competition of growing armament between nations. Nor do I advocate that we should undertake, in concert with other nations, to fix the boundaries of all the States of Europe and by leagues of nations guarantee their boundaries and the integrity of their Governments. This is not within the scope of international action to try and obtain concert of the leading Governments to adjust the disputes of nations and prevent resort to arms.

As far as I am able to judge the consensus of public opinion among the allied nations to-day is in favor of the general principles of a league of nations to prevent war. You may say this is generalization. I think we may go further and say that the consensus of opinion is that there should be a league by treaty binding all the signatory powers which shall provide not only for mediation, but shall make it the duty of the powers joining to offer mediation between contending nations; that it shall provide for commissions of investigation and conciliaton and provide for the members to submit their disputes to arbitration. The vital point, to be sure, is what disputes shall be submitted and what means shall be taken to compel the enforcement of the decrees of the arbitral tribunals. I realize this is the difficult point. It is said that unless there is some force to execute the decrees of the tribunal the whole proceeding will be a farce, that nations like Germany will neither submit nor abide by the judgment.

In the first place, I believe, the conditions for conciliation and arbitration have never been as favorable as to-day and as they will be in the future. Nations heretofore have hesitated to agree to submit their disputes to arbitration for the reason that they did not wish to go into a court perhaps more or less interested in the question or kindred questions and submit matters vital to the national life to arbitration, and various schemes of excluding from arbitration those questions which were considered quite nonjusticiable or vital to the nation's welfare have been evolved. But the trouble is that those are the questions which often bring on conflicts, and it is a question whether we should not agree to submit to a proper tribunal of arbitration many questions which we are not now willing to leave to arbitration where the enforcement of the judgment is left to the enlightened sentiment of mankind. That there should be a world police or armed force is, in my judgment, impracticable and unthinkable.

It may be said that we have arbitration treaties with the principal nations of the world. We have, to be sure, with France and Great Britain an arbitration treaty, negotiated, I believe, by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] when he was Secretary of State. He will correct me if I am not stating the facts accurately. In that treaty it was provided that justiciable questions depending upon law and fact should be submitted to a tribunal, and that a board or commission of conciliation should be created. The treaty did contain a clause guarding, I think, to a great extent the interests of the country, to determine what were the justiciable questions; but the Senate did not approve it and the treaty stands as I suggested.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KELLOGG. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And did not the Senate advise the world, by its action then, that we were entirely opposed to any kind of international tribunal that might pass upon our vital interests, our national honor, or any problems of government that might affect this country?

Mr. KELLOGG. I think it did, as I said before.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was in the Senate at the time, and it was the first opportunity I had to take part in the consideration of a great question; the debates then show, as did the final action of the Senate by a substantial majority, that even a majority of the present Senate then in the Senate could not agree to ratify any treaty or any program that submitted even to arbitration between two countries, to say nothing about international tribunals representing numerous nations, the important questions of government or problems of vital interest or of national honor belonging to our own country.

Mr. KELLOGG. Answering the Senator from Georgia, I think it did; and I do not think the Senator from Georgia will draw from any remarks I have made any conclusion that I thought to the contrary.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not. I was only desiring to supplement the view of the Senator by calling attention to the fact that when it was said that we should have advised the President earlier of our attitude I meant to suggest that the Senate had advised the world as far back as 1912 of its attitude upon many of these questions; and I meant further to suggest that it was entirely proper for the Senate now to exercise its responsibility by giving its advice on the pending treaty, as to the character of the treaty that we would be willing to ratify.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. I merely wanted to state that the exact point of divergence between the Senate and the executive department of the Government at that time over that particular treaty was this: The treaty provided that all justiciable questions should be submitted to arbitration, and then it defined justiciable questions to be those questions which are susceptible of determination by the application of the ordinary recognized rules of law and equity. But obviously a question always arose as to whether a question was justiciable or not; and the proposition of the treaty was that that question—that is, its justiciability and, therefore, its arbitrability—should be left to commissioners; and the Senate declined to do that, because it said that would possibly submit vital interests to the decision of outsiders.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Because the commissioners might determine contrary to the view of this country. So guarded were we as to the preservation of the independent action of our own country about problems of vital interest that we declined to accept the treaty with those provisions.

Mr. LEWIS and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. May I be pardoned for suggesting that as I recall the debates—and I can only speak of my knowledge of the debates, having studied them, in this body—Senator Rayner, of Maryland, asserted on the floor, seeking to advocate the position of the eminent then Secretary of State, now equally eminent Senator from Pennsylvania, that the real item of dispute was because the words "law and equity," as contained in the provision submitted, had no equal definition or no equal meaning in the other Governments, and that therefore the definition "law and equity" left it so open that there was no defined thing which made the limit of the conduct on the part of the commissioners to whom the subject was to be committed. Am I right about that—that that was the real, serious grievance?

Mr. KNOX. No; I am sorry to say that the Senator from Illinois is mistaken. The Senate accepted that proposition. There was no difficulty about the arbitration of justiciable questions, and there was no question raised, in the sense that no controversy succeeded, as to the definition of what a justiciable question was. The controversy arose as to whether the question of justiciability should be left to a commission if it was disputed.

Mr. KELLOGG. I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wanted to ask the Senator if he does not believe that this war, when it is considered in all of its aspects, naturally had a tendency to lead men to include questions that might be defined as justiciable that they would have excluded eight or ten years ago? In other words, referring particularly to what the Senator from Georgia has said about the Senate having gone on record, does not the Senator believe that one of the lessons of this war is that men will be more inclined, in order to avoid war and to reach an agreement, to agree to arbitrate things that probably before this war they would have hesitated to enter into any agreement to make arbitration treaties to cover?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I have no doubt of that. I believe it is the firm opinion of the intelligent world to-day that if Germany had had a responsive government, and if war could only have been declared by a legislature after discussion, there would not have been this terrible war; and I believe that the sentiment of the world to-day is ripe for the exercise of all the powers of arbitration and conciliation that the nations can safely grant consistent with their independent sovereignties. I do not think the public sentiment has ever been as favorable to such action as at the present time.

I was suggesting the two treaties between this country, France, and Great Britain. I believe that some definition or some means of determining what are justiciable disputes can be arrived at to safeguard this country, so that our vital interests will not be submitted to nations which may have interests to the contrary, and that some means of conciliation and investigation by permanent commissions may be devised that will largely take care of the political questions.

It may be said that we have the treaties negotiated by Mr. Bryan as Secretary of State. There are a large number of them. They are all substantially alike. They simply provide for investigation and conciliation, and some of the countries agree that they will not make war while this investigation is going on. The treaties have done no harm. In fact, they may have done a great deal of good. They may, in some instances, have softened the passions of nations by giving time for consideration. But it is entirely a different proposition to negotiate a treaty between Brazil and the United States and a treaty between the United States and Chile when there is no treaty between Chile and Brazil. A league or concert of nations with the sole purpose of preventing a war, with a proper tribunal of conciliation and investigation, which shall meet periodically, which shall keep in close touch with the affairs of the various nations parties to it, is a far different thing than the separate treaties which have been negotiated for investigation and arbitration between various nations. It is the combined and concerted action of the great nations of the world at the close of this war which will prevent the recurrence of such a calamity which has devastated civilized lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 4637.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I am not to be understood as advocating that this country, situated as it is in the Western Hemisphere, under our form of Government, is going to enter into a league of nations which will involve it in the pitfalls and dangers of European intrigue or the maintenance of a world army which may be turned against us. But I do advocate that every effort shall be made by The Hague tribunal or some similar tribunal for the conciliation of political disputes and the arbitration and settlement of all questions which are justiciable, and for some means of determining what those questions are.

We have before us the example of two great, intelligent, progressive Anglo-Saxon nations that have been at peace for more than 100 years. The nations of the earth are growing closer and closer together, international relations are multiplied, space has been annihilated, and I believe that every effort should be made toward the conciliation of those disputes which from time to time divide the nations of the earth.

But we must remember that few nations, if supported by a proper public sentiment, which I believe is growing, will defy the arbitral tribunal and the public sentiment of the world. In the nineteenth century there were 471 international disputes favorably submitted to decision by arbitration, and in the last 20 years many such disputes have been settled in this way, in not one of which have the Governments involved refused to abide by the decision of the arbitrators. The nearest approach to such a failure is the finding of the tribunal in the case of Panama and Porto Rico, which has not yet been fully complied with. Such a league of nations could provide for mediation, for commissions of conciliation which should investigate and find the facts and make recommendations which should be furnished to interested Governments.

It may be said that this was substantially provided for by The Hague Convention, and that in spite of the agitation for world peace, which has been the most prominent in the last 25 years, this war—the greatest since recorded history—has devastated the world. But The Hague conference did not go to the limit which I believe the principal nations are now willing to go. The central powers were not willing to agree to submit their disputes to arbitration. It may be that nothing would have prevented a trial of strength between the central empires and the rest of the world. Had there existed in Germany a responsible government, an intelligent public sentiment which could be expressed through legislatures and ministers, even with the incense burning which has been going on in Germany and the training of the German mind toward the supernation, I do not believe war would have broken out. But with the boundless ambition of the Hohenzollerns, with the control over all the resources and activities of the nation, there apparently had to come a trial of strength to decide whether this great military autocracy should survive or go down before the free peoples of the world. That time has passed, and while I do not expect that the millennium has arrived or that war will cease in the world, I do believe that the growing, enlightened public sentiment; the abolition of irresponsible governments; the growth of science which increases the instruments of destruction; the increase in the magnitude and the burden of war and all the horrors, miseries, and crimes of four years, has created a fertile field and an educated public sentiment, which is determined that such a war shall not again occur.

.I am not unmindful of the teachings of our forefathers, of the wisdom of Washington, whose precepts we have followed. I believe the opinions which he expressed, the examples which he gave to the world, the influence which he exerted upon his time, have been among the most potent civilizing influences.

Notwithstanding his admonition, we did go forth and engage in battle upon foreign soil. We sent one of the greatest armies ever marshaled in war. We backed this Army by the resources of a great country and by the patriotic sentiment of a generous and enlightened people. We did this not only for our own material protection, that the institutions which we had reared might remain, but for the establishment of right and justice as the ruling factor in human destiny. Shall we hesitate now, while maintaining all our institutions, our Government, and the right to control all our internal affairs, to join in a league of nations which may have a lasting effect upon all the generations to come?

Mr. President, when the sun went down on that memorable August day four years ago, its last rays were clouded by the gathering storm of war. It was to rise upon a new world—the old had passed away—a world to be deluged with human blood and laid waste by the ravages of ruthless war, but a world of peace-loving, free people, animated by a new determination, inspired by new ideals and by new hopes, a determination that lawless military rule should end, ideals of democracy founded upon justice to all peoples, and a hope for a lasting peace. Lincoln uttered a great truth when he said, "This Nation can not exist half free and half slave." Neither can the world exist in peace half autocratic military government, recognizing no principle but that of force, and half free, self-governing democracy. A conflict is inevitable and must go on until one or the other is mastered.

Mr. President, it may be a delusion, but I like to indulge in the hope that the contest is ended, that the great preponderance of world government is representative democracy founded on safe guaranties of personal liberty, security of property, and opportunity for individual initiative and progress. It is either that or the reign of license and lawlessness, a despotism more terrible than autocratic power, which is its usual sequel.

Mr. LEWIS obtained the floor.

Mr. KNOX. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for a moment? I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to a matter.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania, though I expect to occupy only about five minutes.

Mr. KNOX. For just a moment. The Senator from Minnesota has performed a great public service in bringing to our attention the views of the English and French statesmen whom he has quoted and by his reference to the parliamentary attitude in both those countries; but he has overlooked what I regard as an even more important fact—one with which we have more concern and one which should have a greater influence over us.

We have not been behind Great Britain and France in parliamentary expression as to our attitude upon this great subject. As late as 1916, almost two years after the war began, the Congress of the United States passed an act expressing its policy, expressing its attitude not only as to the extent that we should go, but as to the method by which a conference should be brought about which should pass upon the great question as to a league of nations or a combination for the prevention of war.

Allow me to read the act of August 29, 1916:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to adjust and settle its international disputes through mediation or arbitration, to the end that war may be honorably avoided. It looks with apprehension and disfavor upon a general increase of armament throughout the world, but it realizes that no single nation can disarm, and that without a common agreement upon the subject every considerable power must maintain a relative standing in military strength.

In view of the premises, the President is authorized and requested to invite, at an appropriate time, not later than the close of the war in Europe, all the great Governments of the world to send representatives to a conference which shall be charged with the duty of formulating a plan for a court of arbitration or other tribunal, to which disputed questions between nations shall be referred for adjudication and peaceful settlement, and to consider the question of disarmament and submit their recommendation to their respective Governments for approval. The President is hereby authorized to appoint nine citizens of the United States, who, in his judgment, shall be qualified for the mission by eminence in the law and by devotion to the cause of peace, to be representatives of the United States in such a conference. The President shall fix the compensation of said representatives, and such secretaries and other employees as may be needed. Two hundred thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated and set aside and placed at the disposal of the President to carry into effect the provisions of this paragraph.

So we have a definite American plan in respect to a league of nations. We have a definite American method by which this thing can be accomplished. We have a definite request to the President of the United States to call a conference of the representatives of the world before the close of the present war or at any earlier time he sees fit, and we have the appropriation necessary to carry the act into effect. So if there is such a thing as an American idea expressed by the representatives of the American people in an American Congress upon this subject it is found within the four corners of this act. I think this should be added to the presentation of the attitude of the other countries made by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PITTMAN. Will the Senator from Illinois yield that I may ask a question of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question, and I do it because he is undoubtedly thoroughly prepared upon this subject. I have listened to his remarks with the very deepest interest. It is the first speech on this subject in the Senate I have had the pleasure of hearing which shows a careful study of the question, or that is not flavored with prejudice or possibly with politics. I was impressed with the fairness of the discussion by the Senator from Minnesota, and while I gained a great deal of information with regard to the many and various views of what should constitute this league of nations, I do not know that I definitely understand the particular league of nations the Senator from Minnesota favors. I should like to know if the Senator from Minnesota would be prepared, not to-day, of course, but within the next few days, to present to this body and argue as intelligently as he has this subject a proposed constitution or a proposed plan, with the necessary limitations, of a league of nations.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield, of course, to the Senator on the theory that it will not deprive me of my right to the floor. I know he does not intend to do so.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, it was frequently said in the House of Commons and in the upper House of Great Britain it was more important at that time to discuss general principles than details. I did not intend to burden the Senate with writing a constitution for a league of nations. What I did wish to do was to inspire if possible a sentiment in favor of some action to move the nations of the earth to enter into some agreement whereby peace might be permanently obtained. I did not flatter myself that my suggestions would reach Versailles, or have any influence upon the deliberations of the peace conference, but that it might start a discussion in the Senate by those far abler than I and better known in Europe, and produce perhaps a resolution from the Senate declaring some principles which we believe should be enacted for a league of nations. But I will say this to the Senator: I believe that there should be some permanent body like The Hague tribunal, with stated meetings, to which the United States should send representatives, which should create an arbitral tribunal to dispose of those questions which we may be able to define as justiciable, and which do not so involve the internal government and vital interests of our country to make it advisable to agree in advance to submit to arbitration. I think with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] we might go further in defining what those justiciable questions are and providing for some tribunal to determine them from time to time. I think we can go further in a united action through commissioners of conciliation who shall keep in touch with the affairs of the world and whose duty it shall be to intercede at once in the event of a threatened war.

I realize the difficulties. I have not prepared a charter, and I did not think it was necessary or would serve any good purpose. My hope was rather to start a discussion upon this question which is to-day occupying the attention of the civilized world, that the older and more experienced in mind of the Senate might discuss it for the benefit of the American people.

Mr. PITTMAN. I thank the Senator, Mr. President, and with the permission of the Senator from Illinois for a second——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am now satisfied that if the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, who has given such careful consideration to a league of nations, is not now prepared to more definitely define a league of nations than he has done to-day, and he has defined it more carefully and fully than I have ever heard it defined before, it must be recognized that there is possibly some doubt even in the mind of the President as to the details to be worked out in the accomplishment of a league of nations. It is possible that all will admit, and I know that the Senator from Minnesota believes, that the President in asserting the general principle of a league or a concert of nations looking to an enduring peace has exactly the same purpose that the Senator from Minnesota has, and had exactly the same purpose in announcing it, that was, to stimulate the world to try to accomplish the same purpose.

I would have been surprised had the Senator from Minnesota gotten upon this floor and demanded a detailed explanation from the President of the United States as to what kind of a league of nations he intends to propose. I would not have been surprised if some of the other Senators had done so who knew nothing about it and did not have time to study the question, and they are the ones who have generally criticized any pronouncement of principle. I think possibly the same objections were made at the time it was suggested throughout the world that governments should agree upon rules governing civilized warfare. There was not any statesman on earth who could define the rules of civilized warfare, yet all the world believes in it. It could not be defined except by the people to be bound by it. It was defined subsequently by the nations to be bound by it. This principle is understood just as well as was the principle of civilized warfare, and this principle will be defined by the people to be bound by it, as I take it.

I think the Senator has done a wonderful service in so clearly delineating the various thoughts with regard to a league of nations.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield further?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr KELLOGG. I do not understand that in my remarks I criticized the President in not going into the details of a league of nations, nor would I criticize any Senator for not defining accurately what kind of a league of nations should be established, a question that has perplexed the greatest minds of the world for hundreds and hundreds of years. I would like to know whether the President believes in a world tribunal which should have its decrees executed by force or not, but I have made no complaint against the President for not going into the details of a league of nations.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I gave notice yesterday that I would on Friday address the Senate upon the proposition of a league of nations for peace. I therefore at this time do not rise to address myself to that particular subject, but I do assume to refer to the preliminary remarks of the eminent Senator from Minnesota, that which evidently was not a part of the speech he had prepared and has delivered in the present hour on the league of nations.

Mr. President, I concur with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] in his complimentary allusion to the Senator from Minnesota paying tribute to the speech as being wholly divorced from anything of a partisan tinge or touch of personal prejudice; also I concur with the able junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] that the paper presented by the Senator from Minnesota this morning is a liberal contribution to history, literature, and statesmanship of the subject. Whether we will agree with his conclusions is a matter to be after determined.

But in the preliminary remarks of the eminent Senator I was very much interested. It is the first time on this floor that any Senator has referred to the failure of the President of the United States to appoint Senators as members of the commission to go abroad and attend the present gathering ordered for Versailles touching the matter of peace. From the Senator came the first expression in the Senate that could be taken note of for purposes of reply.

Mr. President, the public at large has been given the impression that in his appointments to the peace commission the President cast some slight upon this body; that by failing to appoint Members of it he indicated to the nations at large a lack of respect for its personnel or an indifference to the position it occupies in the affairs of government.

Mr. President, I am sure that the President had not any such views and was in no wise animated by the slightest sense of indifference to the very high position of this body or the influence its Members exert in anything they advocate, but I wish to bring to attention now, in reply to the Senator from Minnesota, and therefore in reply to the criticisms on this feature, some few things which I trust may not occupy any length of time, at least not any objectionable length of time, as a clear justification for the President declining to name Members of this body or of his failure to do so.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I did not criticize. I gave my views.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator is quite acquit of criticizing the action. He merely expressed the view expressed in other quarters of regret.

Mr. President, when it is suggested to the country that Senators should have been named on that tribunal there ought to arise at once this interrogation, which I hope the very faithful members of the press will present now to the Nation as from an humble Member of this body: What would be thought of any power naming as a judge to decide a cause a lawyer who had for eight months been the advocate on one side of the controversy? What would be said of that bench made up of appointed judges to try one certain cause where every one of them had been for eight months presenting his demand as to what should be the final judgment of that court? What would be thought of a court made up of members each of whom had defined what he felt to be the duty of the litigants, their obligations, and already through himself presented a final decree as to what that court should decide in the dispute? The reply would be that it was such a prejudiced tribunal that no fair man ought to suggest such, and no honorable man who had been such previous advocate would have taken a place upon it.

Mr. President, with that interrogation let us view this situation for a moment, that we might indicate to the public what must have been in the mind of the President of the United States, who must be conceded to be a learned man and a historian of the past, as to why a Member of this body was not placed by him as one of the commission to serve on that international peace tribunal.

Mr. President, first we view them entering into Versailles. They are met at once by the Governments who are interested in the conflict, with this acknowledged conclusion: "Gentlemen, you have in the United States Senate, in speeches manifold, presented the viewpoint that Alsace-Lorraine should go back to France. Yet you are here to sit upon a bench as a judge while Alsace-Lorraine is asking to be made an independent State on her merits after the order of Poland, and which you insist should be the fate of Serbia. Gentlemen of the United States Senate, you are brought here and put upon the bench when you have time and time again been urging that the attitude of France and Britain concerning certain boundary lines touching the Rhine should be of this and that conclusion." Conceded. "You have made speeches as to what should be done with Turkey; you have laid down your doctrines; you have announced them to your people; your people have accepted them from you; you have sought election; you have sought honor and position upon your views." Conceded. "And yet you come to sit as judges, with impartial minds, presumably, to have presented to you the relative contentions of these different countries as to what they feel to be the future rights, the divisions, the dispositions, the applications of all their future."

And then, further, Mr. President, we can hear them reflect: "You have, gentlemen of the Senate, time and time again stated what your opinion was as to what should be the penalty upon Germany, among which are retribution, indemnity, and the keeping by the allies of all the captured colonies of Germany."

"Yes." "You have felt it deeply in your hearts." "Yes." "You have proposed it to your countrymen." "We have." "You have received their verdict." "We have." "And yet you are brought to sit on this bench as impartial judges with your judgment heretofore pronounced, having been accepted by your people, against which you dare not go and the reverse of which you dare not attempt. You are here to say if the Irredenta of Italy-Austria is to go all to Italy or some to Greece or any to South Slovakia. Yet you have announced too often to count that the Irredenta should all go at once to heroic Italy. You are here to decide as to a national Poland, a national Bohemia, a national Hungary. Yet as to all of these there is conflict of peoples within their domain insisting that no such organization should be created including them because of race, sect, or religion. Yet you are here," they will say, "to decide, after hearing, that which you have prejudged and time and time again announced your decision in Senate and public speeches."

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. NEW addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Utah, who first rose. Then I shall yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois if the same situation that he has just described as affecting Senators would not also apply to Lloyd George, to Clemenceau, and to the President of the United States, who, of course, will sit in the same case as judges?

Mr. LEWIS. I first answer the Senator from Utah. I must say "no." I had intended to refer to that feature, but I say "no," and I say "no" with great vigor. First, Lloyd George does not sit afterwards as a supreme court upon his own action, as would these Senators in Senate on confirmation of the treaty; neither does Clemenceau, to ratify for France what shall transpire in that peace body. As to the President of the United States, I must impress upon the Senator from Utah his constant statement that he goes to "tender his judgment," to "participate in a consultation," but not in the decision.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield again to the Senator from Utah, but shall then yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that what I stated was just exactly what Lloyd George does do, and that is more particularly true as to him than it is as to the President of the United States. In referring to the President of the United States, I only had in mind the question as to the return of Alsace-Lorraine. I do not want the Senator to think that I went further than that as to the President of the United States, but the position that Lloyd George holds gives him the absolute power, more so than the President of France or the President of the United States, to determine, after the decision is reached, that it shall be final and binding upon England and upon the English race.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Utah and myself can not concur in that for this reason: He has a viewpoint as to certain forms of British legislative action which has no application to the present proceeding. I will illustrate that to him in a single clause. When the overtures of peace were sought to be presented by Fox as having been presented through Napoleon, Pitt was then premier. Pitt opposed Fox in the British Parliament, denying that these overtures of Bonaparte were just, and refused particularly to accept them as presented by Talleyrand. I invite the attention of the able Senator from Utah to the fact that subsequently the subject was debated upon the floor of Parliament. It was 1800—I think February. The question then arose, if the overtures as presented were to be agreed upon, whether the Houses of Parliament had the further right, after the agreement, to pass any judgment upon them. It was then held, sir, it has always been since held, so far as I know—I do not know the history preceding this event—that after the Parliament had designated, if it did, or the King had designated, if he did, delegates to represent the Empire, and the decision had been reached, that was the conclusion, so far as Parliament had power over the decision. The only thing that could then be done, I will tell my honorable friend, is for members to oppose it as a policy, then bring it up as a resolution of party confidence if the vote is adverse. They then go to the country for a new election, this course being different from ours and more democratic. That opposition, then, is sent at once to the ballot box as against the actors, and not, as my eminent friend assumes, to Parliament for a confirmation or rejection in form, as our Senate serves.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me further?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes, for we are seeking to get the history of this correct. I have other things to say on other branches later.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I must dissent from the position taken by the eminent Senator from Illinois, as I understand the situation. I may be wrong and the Senator from Illinois may be right; but I understand that after this peace treaty shall have been concluded Parliament will have nothing whatever to do with it; that it is an executive function entirely, so far as England is concerned. It is not so much so with France and the United States as it is with England.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I be pardoned to say that the Senator from Utah is absolutely correct? I have been seeking to make that exact situation clear to him. He is absolutely correct in making it. Parliament has absolutely nothing to do with it. The only action to be taken if objections are made—and they are made then on the ground, sir, that it is wrong or unjust to England, and a vote of confidence in the government making the treaty is denied—is at once to issue writs for an election. If they choose a new Parliament, may I submit it to the eminent Senator, he is quite right in the assumption that it does not take the part as our United States Senate here does, to confirm the action.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That would not change the treaty.

Mr. LEWIS. And, as the Senator from Michigan well says, it could not change the treaty.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I ask pardon of the Senator from New Hampshire. May I yield first to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], to whom I owe that courtesy?

Mr. NEW. The question I proposed to ask was covered by the question asked by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. LEWIS. Then I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois a question. Being unfamiliar with the functions or prerogatives or powers of Senators, may I ask the Senator from Illinois if he deems it likely that a single speech or any number of speeches made by Senators here would be likely to commit either the Senate or the people of the United States to any policy whatsoever regarding our foreign relations?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that, knowing the high character of the men occupying this body, I would assume they would be free from being prejudiced, and that they might still be wholly impartial; but it would be very difficult to impress the people of Britain, the people of France, and of the smaller nations, who are now pleading at the bar of this gathering, that such men will be impartial judges, who had already rendered decisions both to themselves and to the Senate and to their country. It is for that reason I must impress upon the Senate that the President must have seriously been influenced by these situations when he came to the consideration of naming Members of this body. It would have been, sir, as though one named members of the Supreme Court to sit in the lower tribunal to make decision of that which they themselves were to review for affirmance or reversal.

Mr. President, apart from the fact that the instances and situations I illustrate would seriously impair the usefulness of such a Senator in that tribunal, weaken his force, lessen his strength, limit his influence, or becloud a needed esteem, what effect, sir, would it have here when he returns to this body when the treaty is presented? Would not this body well know that whatever vote he had cast there or reasons for such more or less had to be in compliance with previous views expressed in this tribunal? Would not the peace tribunal know that his influence here would be to exert the views he had expressed to his people and to the Senate previously, the reverse of which he might not dare to assume? Would they not feel therefore that the final conduct of his action there as commissioner or here as confirming Senator could not be regarded as wholly impartial? Or, let us take the other aspect—the measure the Senate would give to such Senator here on matters of confirmation. Would not certain party colleague Senators feel that they were called on to confirm the treaty out of that comity which Senators bear to each other and out of that courtesy that suggested that if they did not confirm the action of their colleague they would put that Senator in his State as one repudiated by the body of which he was a Member? Would not these party compatriots see that only by confirming could they sustain him? They know the political effect of repudiation. Would not all these considerations be pressed on them as of prime importance and necessary to reckon with?

I now invite the attention of the Senate to just a morsel of history. Henry Clay was so impressed with the fact that he would be beaten for the Presidency if he dared confirm by his own action as commissioner the treaty of Ghent, which arranged the peace of the War of 1812, that he declined to sign it. When Gallatin, one of the commissioners, took him out into the corridor of a little hotel at Bruges to impress upon him—as history records—that if he did not sign it it would weaken us with Britain, with whom we had lately been at war, he refused upon the ground, as he then gave it—and, Senators, you are historians and you will bear me out—that the treaty in no wise contained one single line guaranteeing to us the seas, for which we went to war, and, as he said, for which he had demanded we go to war. He said—pardon the expression—"How in the hell could I sign such and go back to Kentucky?" Finally, sir, Henry Clay was called upon, through influences, to lend his acquiescence; but when the treaty came to this body and was confirmed it was so known to have been compromised to its acceptance that it lost its weight, and never to this hour is the procedure of confirmation or the terms of the treaty cited by any Members of this body as a precedent for anything.

Sir, let us recall that when the commissioners were selected to conclude peace with France in 1799 Oliver Ellsworth, Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, and W. R. Davie and W. V. Murray were chosen. The mission was successful and ratified here without a dissent.

Now, my able friend, the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], brings to my attention a matter which I shall advert to; it is that President McKinley named Senators to settle the treaty of Spain and America. Before I enter on this subject, may I ask to have a message sent the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] saying that if he has finished his lunch I should like to have him present, as I shall refer to a matter in connection with that treaty that I think is within his memory as a personal witness, and if I am in error I want correction, and if I am right I want confirmation.

Mr. President, I now state that when the war was concluded between our country and Spain President McKinley designated Senator Frye, of Maine; Senator Davis, of Minnesota; and then a Democrat, who had been a Senator, but, as I now think, was then a judge of a United States court, the Hon. George Gray.

Mr. THOMAS. Senator Gray was a Senator at the time he was appointed.

Mr. LEWIS. Was he a Senator at that time?

Mr. SMOOT. He was at that time a Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senators for the correction.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And he was a very eminent Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. He was an able man. Indeed, I recall being an advocate of his for the Presidency.

Mr. President, then, apart from the fact whether he was then in the Senate or had been appointed judge, he was designated as a minority representative. There was at that time all over this land a very serious dispute as to whether the United States should take over the Philippine Islands. It was a question to which our country was very alive. I lived on the Pacific coast then; I had the honor then to represent in Congress, as Congressman at large, a State on the Pacific coast, the State of Washington; but in New England and in the South there was great resentment against taking the Philippines, while in my section of the country there was seemingly a very strong demand for that action, on the theory that it strengthened the Pacific coast. I opposed it, and was in the minority.

Mr. President, when that treaty came back to this body it embodied the taking of the Philippine Islands and the paying of $20,000,000 to Spain. The treaty also carried with it certain other provisions. The debate as to the confirmation of that treaty continued days and weeks. Senators sitting about me, such as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], who were then Members of the other House, will recall with what fiery dispute that peculiar debate swayed to and fro. Sir, I ask the memory of those who were around at that time to recall one of the charges which Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, made on the floor of this Senate against the confirmation of the treaty. Among other things he said that Senators were being implored out of a comity of the relations they bore to Senators who had participated in making the treaty and in accepting what he called "the burden of blood" and putting it on the country.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But the country did not adopt their view.

Mr. LEWIS. That is positively true—to later qualify its position.

Mr. President, that treaty was discounted on this floor by Senators who were called upon to vote for its confirmation because of the knowledge that there was being imposed upon them a sense of fraternal obligation because of their fellow Senators being a part of the board. There has passed to heaven, let us believe, the then distinguished senior Senator from Maine, Mr. Hale, the differences between whom and Senator Frye, his colleague, who helped make the treaty, were not altogether closed even at death, if political history, incidental and otherwise, is correct, because of that peculiar situation put on Senator Hale by the position of his colleague. Senator Hale conscientiously opposed that treaty, and he was put in the peculiar position of warring against his colleague, and the burden put upon him was so heavy because of the charge that he was reflecting upon the State of Maine by his opposition to his colleague that it greatly disturbed him.

Mr. President, there was a Senator on this floor—I do not know what political designation he went by then, whether Republican, silver Republican, or Democrat—Senator Pettigrew of South Dakota—who in his opposition to the treaty——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. He was a Democrat then. He was a Democrat in 1896, and this occurred in 1898.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Michigan tells me he was designated as a Democrat. I thought he was a silver Republican, so termed. Among other things, if the public press be right, he characterized the attempt to enforce the treaty upon this body as an effort to secure political advantage to the Members of the body who had participated in framing the treaty. And, Mr. President, let the Senate recall that so bitter became the dispute in this body and so divided its counsels that that treaty was ratified finally by the very smallest margin, and the action left for years afterwards, sir, wounds which were never thoroughly healed in the lifetime of those who participated.

That being true, Mr. President, what think you, sir, would have been the result if Senators had been named by the President of the United States and had presumed to sit upon this Versailles tribunal and, although urging the best conclusion they might, had returned here and asked that all be ratified? Will anybody fancy that it would not be said that their judgment had been made before they ever took their place? Will it not be said over in Europe that we gave them a prejudiced tribunal? Will it not be charged that we sent men who were partial and who had already prejudged the case? And when they returned here would not those who had found objections to the treaty feel that they were under some obligation of fraternity, some comity of relationship, some courtesy of association to confirm that which individually they may have felt they should oppose? Would not their freedom of opposition be stinted, if not paralyzed, to a great degree by the knowledge that their assault upon the result was an assault upon one of their colleagues? And, sir, if we should confirm things that meet the objections of those of our fellow citizens anywhere, could you ever quell the voice of our protesting citizens, who could charge us with having done so for no other reason than that Members of our body had their political fortunes in the balance and at stake, and thus deprecate our action and discount the treaty? It would have a cloud on its title forever.

Surely, Mr. President, these reflections must be recorded as a very just reason why no fair man standing as the President has stood, and does stand, could have ignored the very impending and influential reasons against naming one of the members of the supreme court, who must ratify this treaty, to sit in the lower tribunal and make a decision which he himself would afterwards pass upon as right or wrong against assault.

Senators have said—I have heard them on this floor most sincerely say—that they have a right to be kept in touch with the proceedings. Mr. President, I pause. I observe the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is now in the Chamber, and I desire to ask him if his memory accords with my own. I stated before the Senator came in, and when I sent word to ask the Senator to come in, that the public press reported that his then eminent colleague, Mr. Hoar, in his opposition to confirming the treaty known as the Spanish-American treaty in 1898, then charged, among other things, an attempt to influence the free judgment of Senators by the mere fact of the comity amongst Senators; that this treaty had been presented, among others, by those who were Members of this body; and that prevented fair and free thought. I also called attention to the speech which Senator Pettigrew is reported to have made in the Senate, who likewise, following Senator Hoar, and, seemingly to me, adopted his viewpoint, charged that they could not have free and fair consideration because of the influence of the fact that Members of this body were participants in the peace tribunal. I charged, as a result of that, that the very narrow margin by which the treaty was ratified was due to that feeling of comity. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts if his memory of those debates, if he has memory of them as a then Senator from Massachusetts, agrees with the newspaper reports. I was not a Member of the Senate at that time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is impossible for me at a distance of 20 years to state just what occurred in that debate. My colleague, Mr. Hoar, was very much opposed to the treaty; but I do not remember whether or not he said anything about comity to other Senators. I have no recollection of it. It would be discovered—no, it could not be discovered, because that treaty was discussed in executive session.

Mr. LEWIS. I may say to the eminent Senator that I would have gotten the RECORD and produced it but for the fact that I had to take such information as I have only from the public papers and traditional recital from those who recall the incidents.

Mr. LODGE. Of course. I do not recall that my colleague said it, although he may have done so. The question of the Senators being signatories to the treaty, however, played very little part in the debate, and I do not think had any influence whatever on the result. The contest arose, as the Senator is well aware, out of the provision of the treaty taking the Philippine Islands.

Mr. LEWIS. I think the Senator in the latter remark confirms what I have previously stated to the Senate was to my knowledge the contention of the time—the Philippines—as I was not then a member of this body, being a member of another body, which had no right to participate in the deliberations incident to the ratification of the treaty.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the concluding feature, to which I ask Senators' attention for a moment. Senators have stated here that they have a right to be kept in touch with the proceedings, and therefore, for that reason, should have a representative at the peace conference. I reply to that by saying that if a Member of the Senate were there, however, the Senate would not be kept in touch with the proceedings; all he could do would be when he came back to arise and recite what transpired. The Senate could not have a report from him every minute an expression was had, the atmosphere that surrounded it, the sentiment that enhanced it, the prejudice that weakened it. Mr. President, does the Supreme Court of the United States have each step of the trial in a lower tribunal brought to it each moment it transpires as a reason or basis for reviewing the opinion that is before it under complaint of error and in the process of appeal for reversal? Not at all. But if the proceedings are to be made familiar to this body, it will not be overlooked that there will be stenographic reports, and the Senators will have the same reports as any other tribunal would have upon appeal. They will have the reports exactly as they have upon any other treaty negotiated and brought from abroad. They never know respecting other treaties each step that is taken in the deliberation; they have to take the paper as it is sent in to them in its entirety, not the deliberations and the debates at all, but, if so, they are in the stenographic report and in the bound official volumes. Will not that material also be before this body in this incident, as has been the custom for all time?

Then, Mr. President, is there anything else this body shall pass upon but the final conclusion reached, and the conclusion, sir, is the treaty complete? This action is measured only by the evidence that is brought before the Senate in the record. Therefore I must differ from the eminent Senators who lay down the doctrine that there should be a Senator upon the board, or many Senators, in order that the Senate may be kept in touch. First, I deny the premises; we would not keep in touch by such a plan. Second, they are not called on to keep in touch, but they are only to be cognizant of, aware of, and informed of the proceedings as concluded, and such proceedings as will enlighten them to the conclusion they will have to reach; that is, whether they wish to ratify or to reject the treaty. There can be no amendment, no change, no addition or reduction—the whole as a whole or none at all, complete acceptance or wholly rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Illinois which may not be timely or important.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I fail to see, as one Member of the Senate, why the treaty of peace with Germany and Austria-Hungary is so fraught with danger to our country. We are in no peril; we were victorious and sit in judgment; whatever the terms the vanquished must yield. We are not at war with Turkey, and therefore there will be no treaty of peace with Turkey so far as our country is concerned; we are not at war with Bulgaria, and there will be no treaty of peace with Bulgaria. We have renounced in advance any general monetary indemnity from the central powers, and therefore the question of a monetary indemnity can not arise. We have absolutely foreclosed ourselves against any territorial acquirements, and therefore that question can not arise; and the question of putting into treaty form with Germany and with Austria-Hungary any provision which links our Government to theirs in a league of peace must await the trend of events and the ultimate good faith of those Governments. I am speaking only of the actual work to be performed by the Senate. The Paris conference will take wider scope and undoubtedly lay the foundation of peace broad and deep. In this the President will have an important part, but the Senate need not be consulted until such action takes definite form. In other words, a league of nations is a league between England, France, Belgium, and Italy, our allies, and ourselves, and if the peace conference at Paris should finally determine informally that a league of nations was desirable an agreement must be made separate and apart from the treaty of peace with Germany and with Austria. It may be that very important questions will arise affecting the territorial limits and the integrity of smaller States; I know that they are apprehended, but this will be a matter of policy and not of law and ample information will be forthcoming. I have been very much impressed by some of the things I have heard to-day about their importance; but, nevertheless, the question of indemnity and territorial compensation having been voluntarily eliminated, it seems to me that our duty in the first instance will be a very simple one, and if we league ourselves with foreign States afterwards upon any basis of obligation and reciprocity that must be brought about by voluntary cooperation among the victors and the vanquished or by the victors alone. I have full faith that American interests will be protected by the chosen representatives of the American people.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, of course that subject referred to by the Senator is fraught with serious difficulties and impends with very difficult problems. I expect on Friday to refer to that phase and will not intrude it now. It does not enter upon the present discussion to which I am addressing myself, as the Senator very wisely saw; but I nevertheless invited his observations by yielding to him. I will conclude upon the single thought——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I hope I did not interrupt the Senator against his will.

Mr. LEWIS. Not in the slightest. I invited it. The Senator did not interrupt me against my will; we have had associations for many years, and nothing that he has ever done that touches me has been against my will. I have not always been able to agree with him, but interrupting me by him meets my approval.

Mr. President, I was concluding upon the line of seeking to disprove wholly the ground that had been urged in many quarters, that it was necessary that Senators should be made members of this commission or that they should be kept in touch; and I replied by saying that the Senate would not be kept in touch had Members of the Senate had membership on the commission. I had stated that the only touch they are called upon to have with the proceeding is, at the conclusion, with that which will be reported to them officially, as with any other treaty, for acceptance or rejection. I reaffirm my views as expressed.

Mr. President, I have assumed at this time to offer these observations because the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota in the opening of his speech—in harmony with similar observations made in many quarters—would have led the country to conclude that which it has drawn too generally from other observations—that the President had failed to do a necessary and legal thing, or that he had failed in a necessary duty, or that there was no excuse for what he did in failing to put Members of the Senate upon the peace commission. Mr. President, may I be pardoned for saying—I can speak of my own knowledge—that it was the wish of the President of the United States to have Members of this body and some of the other legislative branch upon that tribunal, and not until close investigation and reflection restored him to the difficulties and revived to his mind what undoubtedly would confront them was he compelled to dismiss that consideration. I only mention that now that it might be known that at no time was there contumely or indifference cast upon this body by the mere omission to make those appointments.

I have made these statements, I have set forth these grounds why the President was justified, in my viewpoint, not, sir, that I wish to enter upon the discussion at this time as to what might be called the propriety or the impropriety of naming Senators, but in order that we may do no wrong to anyone. We do not wish to send the President of the United States from this country with the stamp of the scorn of his countrymen upon him. There is no patriot of this body who would send him forth striped with the maledictions of the United States Senate or send him forth as one who goes with a verdict of his countrymen of repudiation and discredit. Surely every man wishes that in the mission upon which he has entered the President shall have Godspeed and shall have success and come back with glory. That means the honor of his country; it means the victory of his Nation. Anything else felt in the heart of any man or uttered from any American could be little less than treason to his country.

It is, therefore, for the reason only that he may be set right by a mere suggestion, which I know is sufficient when reflected upon, that I have assumed to enter upon this phase of the discussion, feeling that it is justice we seek, and only that; and my mind reverts—it is not inappropriate to enter upon that theme here in this forum—I take my text from the famous line of Bulwer-Lytton in Richelieu:

For justice, all seasons summer, all places a temple!

I thank the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just for the RECORD I wish to say that Hon. George Gray, the gentleman referred to by the Senator, served in the Senate from March 19, 1885, until March 3, 1899. He was a member of the commission which met in Quebec in August, 1898, to settle the differences between the United States and Canada, and later of the commission which met in Paris in September, 1898, to arrange the terms of peace between the United States and Spain. Therefore, he was a Senator of the United States at the time of his appointment.

Mr. McKELLAR. The treaty being concluded on February 6, 1899, before the expiration of his term of service on the 3d of March.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. Now, Mr. President, I want to get back to the bill before the Senate.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am compelled to leave the Chamber at this time to attend a very important meeting of the Finance Committee, and I want now to offer and have pending, unless the Senator in charge of the bill agrees to them, the amendments which I am about to state.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall not object to the amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will just offer the amendments now and let them be passed on now.

Mr. McKELLAR. That will be all right.

Mr. SMOOT. On line 4, page 4, I move to strike out the words "and elects to receive" and insert "or is receiving."

Then I move to strike out the last word on line 4 of the same page, the word "disability," and line 5 down to and including the word "his."

After the word "service," on line 6, I move to insert the words "the period of such military or naval service."

After the word "act," on line 7, I move to insert:

And nothing in this act shall be so construed as to affect in any way his right to a pension in addition to the annuity herein provided for.

This will be adopted, I suppose, as a whole—all one amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Senator says this is practically all one amendment. Will he state the object of it?

Mr. SMOOT. I will state briefly the object of it.

As the bill was reported, it prevents a soldier of the Civil War from receiving any benefits under its provisions. My amendment simply allows him to receive the emoluments provided for in the bill notwithstanding the fact that he is receiving a pension for service in the Civil War.

Mr. THOMAS. In other words, it permits him to receive two pensions.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, if you could call them two pensions. If this is a pension, then what the Senator says is true.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Presiding Officer submit the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that there is an amendment pending.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that this amendment be considered now, because I have to leave the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The SECRETARY. On line 4, page 4, it is proposed to strike out the words "and elects to receive" and insert "or is receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On lines 4 and 5 it is proposed to strike out "disability incurred in the line of duty, the period of his."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On line 6, after the word "service," it is proposed to insert "the period of such military or naval service."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On the same page, line 7, after the word "act" and the period, it is proposed to insert a comma and the following words: "and nothing in this act shall be so construed as to affect in any way his right to a pension in addition to the annuity herein provided for."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I ask to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Tennessee offers the following amendment: On page 7, line 18, strike out the words "to whom this act applies" and insert "in the classified civil service, or of each person thereafter inducted into such service, with the exceptions herein made."

Mr. McKELLAR. That is an amendment to which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] called attention yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

The SECRETARY. On page 8, lines 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

There is also appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum which, when added to the deductions herein provided and transferred from other appropriations under the provisions of this act, shall be sufficient to make payments provided by this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. The next amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado offers an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 17. Any employee who shall advocate, encourage, or participate in any strike against the Government, or any department, bureau, or commission thereof, or who shall join with other employees in refusing or failing to perform their duties as required by law or the rules and regulations of the heads of the departments, bureaus, or commissions, shall forfeit all right to and shall receive none of the benefits of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Johnson, S. D.	New	Smoot
Beckham	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Spencer
Brandegee	Kellogg	Page	Sutherland

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], is still absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. POMERENE and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator if he wishes to speak on the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. I was going to offer an amendment as a substitute.

Mr. REED. I desire to have read a very short statement, to which I should like to have the Senate's attention directed, if the Senator will let me have the floor that long.

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read a portion of a letter written by Hon. D. J. Haff, of Kansas City, Mo., a very prominent lawyer, who has had a great deal to do with the organization of the National Security League and who has been a tower of strength in all matters of preparedness in this country. I should like to have read to the Senate the part that is not marked out. I think it is well worthy the attention of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read the matter referred to.

The Secretary read as follows:

The President in his message to Congress yesterday had not one word to say on the lessons of the war, not a word regarding universal military training for our country; and he should have spoken then if ever he intended to. Indeed, he had nothing to say on the subject of future national preparedness except to recommend the continuance of the prewar naval program, for which let us be thankful. So if a policy of national defense is to be adopted the people must force it.

One of the things that already are turning the thoughts of the people from the necessity of an effective policy of national preparedness is the belief which the President has fostered that we are going to have a league of nations that will effectively prevent all future wars. This, for the most part, is a dream upon which we can not afford to rely. Much can be accomplished by the coming peace treaty by clarifying and extending the principles of international law and by punishing the German murderers and pirates who have willfully and deliberately violated them and criminally and wantonly disturbed the peace of the world, as Lloyd George so ably proposed in his speech last week. A league of the more decent nations can be formed having common ideals and based purely upon treaty and honor and a sense of moral responsibility and whose membership is limited to those nations which in the past have not regarded solemn treaties as "scraps of paper"; but to have a league that will prevent war by force, that will coerce its members, is to create a supernation, which means the surrender or destruction of the independence and sovereignty of all its members.

Does any intelligent, thinking man seriously believe that we are—that the nations and the peoples of the world, or a sufficient number of them to dominate the world, are ready for such a thing, for a United States of the world? Can Aryan, Mongolian, and Hottentot, white man and yellow man and black man, Christian, Mohammedan, and Buddhist, speaking a hundred different mutually incomprehensible languages, striving after innumerable opposite ideals, rooted in thousands of years of different habits and of thinking different thoughts and molded by different educations, prejudiced by different and hostile religions, and trained in widely different moral codes, be brought together in the next three months by a peace treaty and formed into a common brotherhood, a world federation, that will kill ambition, annihilate the spirit of revenge, extinguish race pride and prejudice, hatred, greed, lust for power, and all the human passions, evil and noble, that have caused wars since the beginning of history, and thus, by a parchment-created league of nations, immediately and for all time insure the peace of the world?

Who can possibly believe, if he has intelligence and a reasonable knowledge of history, of ethnology and human nature, that it can be done in the next six months, or in a century, or in two or five centuries? Was it not Bacon who said that the only safe teacher is experience? Have the last four years taught us nothing? Did we not have an awakening that at least this generation can not, or at least should not, forget?

Well, then, let us get out of the clouds and remember the processes of evolution, the slow and painful steps by which are attained the progress of mankind and the improvement of human government.

To my mind the subject upon which the people of this country most need education during the next three months, immediately and while the peace congress is in session, is this very question of what can and what can not be accomplished by the pending peace commission and the proposed treaty in the prevention of future wars. Fools are running around dreaming foolish dreams, making much noise, and disturbing sober thought.

We shall be induced to sell our birthright for a mess of pottage if we are not careful.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, what is the name signed to that letter?

Mr. REED. I stated who signed it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but I want to know the name. I did not hear it.

Mr. REED. D. J. Haff, a prominent attorney of my city.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to say just this in connection with that subject——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the Secretary to send me the letter. I am not certain that I can recall the language to which I refer.

Mr. REED. It is a private letter, and I had only a part of it read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know; but the Senator put it in the RECORD.

Mr. REED. I put a part of it in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to get one part of that part of it which has been read. [Reading:]

The President in his message to Congress yesterday had not one word to say on the lessons of the war, not a word regarding universal military training for our country, and he should have spoken then if ever he intended to.

Evidently this gentleman expects the United States to go into the Prussian universal military training system immediately after the war. He expected the President to advise the representatives of the people in the Senate and the House to go into it.

He had nothing good to say on the subject of future national preparedness except to recommend the continuation of the prewar naval program, for which let us be thankful.

I am very glad to hear that this gentleman is thankful for that much, because if we keep the naval program up to where it is now nobody in Europe can ever attack us. We will be isolated—on the defensive—from all future wars. But that is not the part I was trying to reach in connection with this letter. I am trying to find the part where, as well as I remember it, he says that there are still fools raging around, having visions concerning future peace.

Mr. REED. I will find it for the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah! Here it is:

Fools are running around dreaming foolish dreams, making much noise and disturbing sober thought.

We shall be induced to sell our birthright for a mess of pottage if we are not careful.

"Fools are running around dreaming foolish dreams!" Jesus Christ dreamt it. David, the sweet singer of Israel, dreamt it. George Washington dreamt it. Robert E. Lee dreamt it. The poet Tennyson dreamt it. All these people are fools in the opinion of this Missouri lawyer. I suppose he is a lawyer. It sounds like it, from the way he talks.

Fools are running around dreaming foolish dreams, making much noise and disturbing sober thought.

I suspect that about the Stone Age, when one fellow went after another with a club and a piece of flint, and drove that fellow and his partner—not his wife, but the female that he had captured—back into the cave, and took her away from him, that somebody rose up at once and said: "Don't be a fool. Don't be an ass. Don't run around dreaming foolish dreams. Of course, men have got to capture women every day and carry them off out of and into caves; and of course other men that are stronger have got to invade the cave and carry the woman away again; and of course barbarity is perpetual, and we can not help it." And if the argument of the Senator from Missouri be correct, of course the whole world has got to put itself upon an equal footing with Prussia after this war is over. According to the Senator from Missouri we have got to make an armed camp for the whole world as the only hope of peace.

Now, if that is the only hope of peace, upon my honor I would rather Prussia and Germany would have whipped us and we would have had universal domination with some degree of peace. If we are to tax the people all our lives to keep prepared one against the other in mutual suspicion for future warfare and look for it every morning before breakfast; if peace be a useless dream, and if the Prince of Peace be an idle superstition, and if there be no sense in the hope that perhaps humanity may settle its quarrels without murdering one another, then, as far as I am concerned, I would rather be foregathered to my forefathers to-morrow than to live in this world another 10 years. I have seen enough of it during this war.

Fools are running around dreaming foolish dreams, making much noise and disturbing sober thought.

"Making much noise." Who is making the noise? The Prussians made it in their time. The Hohenzollerns made it in their time, and the men who wanted to wait until Prussia could get to America before they fought, instead of accomplishing peace by offensive attack, made it in their time. The Huns under Attila made the noise in their time. The Goths under Alaric made it in their time. The maddened and impassioned soldiers of the French Revolution, who started out to conquer liberty and wound up by undertaking to conquer glory under Napoleon, made it in their time.

There is or is not a God. And God either is or He is not a prince of righteousness and justice. If it be true that fools only dream of peace and fools only dream of an agreement amongst nations whereby peace can be perpetuated, then there is no God of righteousness and no God of justice and no God of mercy, or else, on the other hand, if there be a God of justice and righteousness and mercy He has given me and you a common sense and a common conscience whereby we can be guided in peace consummation. Common sense means merely the sense of all average men in the aggregate, and common conscience the conscience of the average man throughout the world. If He has given us common sense and common conscience, He has given it to us as an instrumentality whereby we can reduce the world to order and to peace and to progress and to civilization, and whereby we shall not be forced to go to the Prussian junker system of universal armament, one man and one nation and people suspecting the other all the time.

"Dreaming a fool's dream, making a noise." It has not been the poet and prophet who have made the noise and dreamed the foolish dreams. It has been the men who have violated all the dreams of the poet and all the visions of the prophet who have done it.

I was mighty glad when my boys were willing to go out and imitate their grandfather, who went out to fight for what he thought was right, but in another sense I was mighty sorry that the condition of the world was such that they had to go. I am not willing at the end of this war to confess that America and England have been wrong and that we must imitate the continental custom of keeping always armed cap-a-pie. We have just proven that we can call upon the reserve forces of our nations and conquer a constantly prepared military barbaric power. I am not willing to keep the people ground down with taxes throughout years and years because somebody says that the dream of peace is "a fool's dream." It is not a fool's dream. It is a poet's dream. It is a prophet's vision. It is a Christian's communion with God, and it is the purpose of the God of justice and of righteousness throughout the world, and that purpose must be finally accomplished through the common sense and the common conscience of the common men in all democratic countries fighting against all autocracy and against all bolshevism and all nonsense throughout the world.

Mr. REED. I hope the Senator from Ohio will indulge me for a few moments.

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, when I offered the letter of Mr. Haff to be read I had no idea of incensing the Senator from Mississippi; neither did I expect to arouse in him that zealous fervor which always makes his speech charming. Indeed, in hastily running my pencil through the paper—because this was a private letter—I inadvertently did not carry it down far enough to cut out one paragraph which might have been taken to be a criticism of the President, although it was not of an unkind or cruel nature. What I wanted to get before the Senate was this gentleman's very sane and logical statement, a statement which the Senator from Mississippi did not hear throughout, I am sure, or he would not have singled out a single sentence and made it the subject of his bitter criticism.

I do not know what the Senator may believe about a league of nations to enforce peace, but I know that although Jesus Christ nearly 2,000 years ago taught the doctrine of peace, taught the duty of men to maintain peace toward each other, He never promised us that condition until the day should come when the great God had purified the hearts of men and out of their souls had driven all cruelty, all lust, all evil, so that the lion and the lamb might lie down together. That day has not yet arrived. It may come in the providence of God and in the fullness of time. When it does come my brother from Mississippi and myself and all others will be very different men from what we are now. We will be more charitable. We will have a truer vision. We will be less inclined to get irritated. We will not fly into a passion at the opinions of another. We will have just views on all questions. We will, in truth, be fit for the angelic abodes. But I am afraid that it will never come to my friend from Mississippi or to myself until death has closed our eyes, until we have been enfolded in the embrace of that God whose charity may be great enough to cover entirely with its broad and generous mantle our manifold faults and imperfections.

Mr. President, poets have dreamed of peace, parliaments of man, and federations of the world. The vision has been and is a beautiful one, but thus far in the history of the world it has only been a dream. The nation which to-day relies solely upon maintaining peace by moral force will almost certainly become the victim of military force. There must be something besides trusting in God. The old continental commander added, "Keep your powder dry." While we are in this workaday world we must observe the actual conditions of life.

It is true that there ought to be no savages; but if a man were to go into a savage country unarmed and unprepared to defend himself it is altogether likely that he would never come out alive. It may be said that some have done this. Some saints have gone and with their kindliness have won the hearts of savages. That is true, but taken by and large men do not place themselves within the power of uncivilized men.

As there are differences between individuals and tribes, so there are differences between the nations of the earth. Some are inspired by lofty ideals, by a spirit of justice. They recognize the priciples of law and equity.

Others are controlled by motives of cruelty and selfishness. All of them are more or less the victims of prejudice, of race hatreds, due to differences of religion, differences in morals, differences in education, differences in blood, differences in likes and dislikes. And, above all, they are divided by hatreds born of oppression. These differences have during the course of the ages so separated races that they almost seem not to belong to the same human family. It is lamentable to the last degree that this is so. It is equally lamentable that there should be living in peaceful Christian communities men who can lay their hands to the hilt of a knife and drive it into the breast of a sleeping man or woman and rob them of their property. Yet there are murderers. It is lamentable to the last degree that there are men who break the doors of houses and rob and plunder. Yet it is so that there are now, as there always have been, criminals upon the earth. It is regrettable that there are men so base that they will cheat and defraud their neighbors, who can gather to themselves wealth by dishonest practices. And yet every court there is in the world is but a monument to the fact that human cupidity and human cruelty and human injustice are everywhere. They universally are to be found. It is a most regrettable fact that we must have a police force in the city of Washington and in every other city of our land and in every city of the world, a police force without which women would not be safe upon the streets, homes would not be safe. Even strong men would not be safe without a force of law and order to suppress the evil elements of society.

It is a pity, sir, that men do not observe throughout the world a spirit of unalloyed equity, unsullied justice, and exalted righteousness. How beautiful a world it would be if all men would be just! There is no song that ever fell from lip or pen of poet with a more exalted or beautiful theme than that of a world in which justice rules and universal equity holds unchallenged sway. But it has not been. It is not now. We may dream that on some future day it will come, that sometime the divine light will penetrate the darkness of the human soul and the holy finger of love be laid upon hard and cruel heart of man. Yet though we may dream these beautiful dreams, the practical man, the sensible man, knows that he must guard his door, must be prepared to protect wife and child. He also knows that for similar reasons he must at all times be prepared to help protect his city, his State, and his country.

The men who assert this doctrine of common sense can afford to be sneered at. They can afford to exercise patience with those who grow excited and inclined to scold when they are told their vision of universal peace at this time is an idle dream—a foolish vision—and that at this day and age of the world it is impossible to substitute divine love for human cruelty and selfishness by the mere signing of an international agreement providing for a league of nations. If they believe it is foolish, they have a right to say so. I believe it is foolish; but I do not think everybody is a fool who does not agree with me. I made a speech the other day extemporaneously, and I believe I used an expression of that kind. I did it inadvertently. I withdraw it. There were a lot of people before the war came on who were telling us that the time for universal peace had come. I remember that one distinguished statesman negotiated some 20 treaties with some 20 nations. In those treaties agreements were made looking toward the arbitration of international difficulties.

The difficulty, as suggested to me wittily by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], was that the treaties provided that all controversies were to remain in cold storage for a year. During all that time nothing was to be done to right any wrong; there was to be no war waged, no force used. I did not vote for those treaties. I nevertheless just as much desire peace as does my distinguished and brilliant friend. I just as much want peace as anyone. If dreams could only bring peace, I would be willing to dream from now until my eyes are closed for the last time in that dreamless sleep which comes at last to all.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator yield for a suggestion?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I understand the Senator refers to the treaties negotiated by Secretary Bryan?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think those treaties provided for arbitration.

Mr. REED. They provided a method which we may call a method of arbitration for the purpose of what I am saying at the present time.

Mr. President, I did not vote for those treaties, and I will tell you why. As I understood them, a year must elapse before our Government could take any steps to arrest by force the doing of any act, except possibly the invasion of its own territory. I did not believe that was wise. One illustration will serve to present my view, whether it was correct or incorrect. Conceive this sort of a situation: A foreign nation seeking to gain control of the country immediately adjacent to the Panama Canal either through the negotiation of a treaty with or by force entering Colombia.

Conceive that this nation should start to build fortifications that would command the canal. Suppose that we should protest and our protest be disregarded. Suppose we should under such conditions find ourselves confronted with a treaty which bound us to wait a year, but did not bind the other nation to cease preparing for our injury, perhaps our destruction. Suppose we thereupon sat down to wait the expiration of the allotted 12 months. Suppose that during all that time our enemy should continue to build impregnable fortresses and to back them by an army of three or four million men. Might we not be forced ultimately to sacrifice hundreds of thousands of lives and billions of dollars to drive out the fortified enemy?

Mr. President, I may have been mistaken, but that was one of the provisions I believed was wrong about those treaties. It is true we might in an exigency of that kind disregard the treaty, disregard its letter, or disregard its spirit. That is only coming back to the ancient doctrine which all of us when we are exercising our sound judgment must acknowledge, and that is that as long as we remain a sovereign nation we must retain at all times the right to defend our vital interests upon the instant, for otherwise we may receive a deathblow while we wait.

Who is to guarantee the safety of America? It can be guaranteed in two ways. One is by the strength of our own arms. It may be the trained military arm or it may be the untrained arm possessing still enough of untrained strength so that it can defend itself even against all comers. I do not stop to argue that question. But, I repeat, we can defend ourselves in one of two ways. One is by our own strength. The other is by reliance upon other nations. Find me, if you can, any other means. Either our own strength must be relied upon or else we must rely upon the strength of other nations or, I might add, a combination of the two. How, then, shall we rely upon the strength of other nations? We must rely upon their agreements. We have nothing else to rely upon. We must substitute for the ability to defend ourselves the expectation and hope that other nations will assist us if we are attacked. That means that we are to make alliances and agreements.

There never was an agreement made between nations that did not involve reciprocal obligations. If other nations agree to defend this country if attacked, then we must in turn agree to defend them if they are attacked. If other nations in mutual agreement bind themselves to maintain the peace of the world by going to war to force peace, then we are bound to likewise go to war in the quarrels of others. Thus we have a defensive alliance and also a league that binds us to enter all the wars of the world.

The advocates of the league have now reached the point where they propose that the United States shall take her sons, boys from farm and factory and countinghouse and office, and transport them across the sea to defend not the rights of the American Nation but to settle the quarrels of European or Asiatic nations with which we are not at all or only remotely concerned.

Gild it as you may with all the ecstasies of oratory or the rhapsodies of religion, soar to every height of poesy, you can not escape the hard and cruel truth that this Government, this people, must be prepared to defend itself or it must rely upon other nations to defend it in whole or in part. I repeat that if we rely upon other nations to defend us, then we must agree to reciprocally defend them.

Now, Mr. President, that being the case, is a man just exactly a monster who suggests that it is better and cheaper in the long run to have some preparation here than to be unprepared? That is all this good lawyer said, even if he is a Missouri lawyer, and my friend seemed to find offense in that. I am sorry for it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not call him a Missouri lawyer.

Mr. REED. Yes, you did; but that is all right. It would not be offensive to me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You will find by the RECORD that I did not use the word Missouri at all.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; but it is immaterial, Missouri and Mississippi both being a part of this great Union.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And both beginning with "M-i and a double s."

Mr. REED. Both of them are good States, and it is a credit to any man to come from either of them. What did this gentleman say?

Much can be accomplished by the coming peace treaty by clarifying and extending the principles of international law and by punishing the German murderers and pirates who have willfully and deliberately violated them and criminally and wantonly disturbed the peace of the world, as Lloyd George so ably proposed in his speech last week. A league of the more decent nations can be formed, having common ideals and based purely upon treaty and honor and a sense of moral responsibility, and whose membership is limited to those nations which in the past have not regarded solemn treaties as "scraps of paper," but to have a league that will prevent war by force, that will coerce its members, is to create a supernation, which means the surrender or destruction of the independence and sovereignty of all its members.

Now, I hope that that is not very far from the doctrine in which the Senator believes. I can not believe that the Senator is prepared to indorse the doctrine of a league of nations in which this country shall bind itself to engage in the quarrels, the broils, and the battles that may hereafter arise in Europe, although our interests may be entirely separate from them. I would be interested to learn what the Senator's view is upon that important question.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

Mr. REED. I will be glad to yield to the Senator now if he desires me to do so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I thought the Senator from Missouri had concluded. I will state to the Senator my view in a moment.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. President, the Senator before the last war was one of the advocates of peace; he was a pacifist; it did honor to his heart. I will not say it did dishonor to his head. I should say nothing would do dishonor to his head, for he is known as one of the ablest men of our country; and I say that from the very outpourings of my heart. But the men who taught universal peace before this war were mistaken. That is all there is about it.

I have been a believer in the old doctrine of a small standing Army and a small Navy. After I got a little closer to the scene of action as a Member of this body I began to see the necessity of a larger Navy. I believe now, Mr. President, that if the United States had had a Navy three or four times as strong as she had Germany would never have dared enter upon her program of universal destruction of the commerce of the seas and would therefore have never warned us off the waters of the Atlantic Ocean. But whether that is true or is not true we need not pause to discuss.

The Senator from Mississippi frequently says, with that terse wittiness of which he is master, that "only fools refuse to change their minds." We all in this day and age of the world are changing our minds. I have made my mind up that I do not want to see another war ever fought; but if it does come I do not want the war to be over before the United States can put on the battle front a single battery of first-class cannon that was made in our own foundries. I do not want to see a situation again where the war is fought and over and still 12 months must elapse before our first-class ordnance can be ready for the field. I do not want to see another war fought with American troops sent into action not properly defended by shell fire.

I had rather, instead of paying interest on a war debt, employ some money to build works in which we can make cannon at reasonable prices in time of peace. I would make them and cord them up and have them ready, so that if any emergency should hereafter arise we shall have the guns to fight with. I am wicked enough, reactionary enough, barbaric enough, "Stone Age" enough, to actually believe that it is good common sense to have enough rifles with which to arm our men. We did not have them when we entered this war. We were forced to change our weapon. We were able to do that with reasonable speed because England had been at war and England had employed great factories here to make her rifles. They were, therefore, prepared on rather short notice to turn out a similar rifle; otherwise some of our men would have been drilling with broomsticks up to this hour.

I am absolutely wicked enough, Stone Age enough, to have arrived at the conclusion that if England retains her great fleet—and I think she will; I have no idea that England is going to surrender that fleet, though all the poets sing the sweetest songs that ever thrilled poetic souls, though orators may soar to heights above the clouds and cavort from star to star, still Great Britain will keep that fleet; mark what I tell you; every British man-of-war will still pursue its invincible course through the waters of the seas—if that is going to be, I want the United States of America to be in a position of safety. If Great Britain will stop building ships, why, then, the rest may do so. Whatever we may be able to do by mutual agreement as to disarmament, well and good; but that is not the thing of which my friend wrote in this letter. He wrote of a league of nations by which all or a part of the nations of the world should agree to stand together and crush the power of nations that stand against them and enforce the decrees that they may write. Against that he protested; against that I protest.

Lest I forget it later on, let me say now, as I said a day or two ago in a speech here, we ought to rewrite international law. It can be done. That law should be codified; its loose precedents should be gathered into form and crystallized into an agreed law of nations. Had we possessed a law providing in plain words what I believe the law to be, according to the best precedents, no nation would have the right to declare a blockade save of ports, and there the blockade must be maintained; but no nation should have the right to undertake the blockade of an entire sea, either by scattering mines or by a paper declaration. I believe that if that had been fairly written in the law, England would not have undertaken to blockade the North Sea; and I believe if England had not undertaken to blockade the North Sea some of the difficulties that followed later might never have come. But that again is arguing a question that is in the past and one which perhaps would better not be argued too fully just now.

But thus all of the great questions of international law that have caused trouble during this war, especially those involving the rights of belligerents and neutrals upon the high seas, ought to be written down in a code of laws. Then a nation guilty of violating that code of laws would at least be compelled to answer to the moral court of the world for a willful breach of national faith.

While that itself will not guarantee us, still the ignominy which has fallen upon Germany for treating her agreements as scraps of paper would, to a large extent, tend to discourage breaches of the law agreed upon in the manner I have indicated. So there may be by common consent agreements made limiting the arms and armaments of nations. If that can be done, I am most heartily in accord with it, and I have always been. That might be accomplished, because it is reasonable. For, observe, if two men are antagonists and each of them is carrying two or three pistols as he hunts his enemy, if each shall then agree to lay down one or two of his weapons and each, in fact, shall carry out the agreement, he is comparatively as strong as he was before. Therefore that might be accomplished.

But the doctrine I am assailing and the doctrine that my friend assails in this letter is that there shall be an agreement effected between certain of the nations which shall lay down the rules of conduct for themselves and others, and that if any astute nation shall violate the rules, or if any member violates them, then that this coalition of nations will use their joint power to coerce and conquer the offender.

It may be said that is not the doctrine of the league of nations. I admit it is pretty hard to get out of all these visions that have been floating around here just what any of them mean. There was a full-page article printed in one of the papers the other day—an advertisement which was printed in many of the papers—advocating some of these doctrines. Some of the statesmen of Europe have been advocating doctrines; some of the statesmen of the United States have been advocating other doctrines. It is hard to get at what each may have in mind. Yet we may, perhaps, arrive at some general deduction.

Broadly speaking, a league of nations which goes no further than to agree that certain things are proper and certain things are improper will meet with no opposition from anybody, but a league of nations that proposes to enforce its views upon others and that binds us to contribute to it, that puts us into controversies and broils and battles and wars of Europe is another proposition, and is one that I believe the people of this country will utterly repudiate.

Mr. President, why should they not repudiate it? It is contrary to every tradition of our country. We were warned against it by Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Jackson, and all the host of men who laid the foundations and built the early structure of this Government.

If we go into an arrangement such as I am speaking of, what shall be its limitations? What nations shall be admitted? In a speech by an English statesman the other day, as I recollect it, he suggested that this league should begin with the allied nations. What is it the allies on the other side of the water are going to guarantee for the benefit of America? Are they going to guarantee us against attack? From whom do we fear attack? Are they going to protect us? From whom will they protect us? I know of no nation on earth, save one of the allies, that could harm us to-day.

The only nation that flies a flag that can seriously harm America to-day is England, and nobody anticipates trouble with England. If we did anticipate it, we would hardly be making an alliance with England to protect us against herself.

What are we to get on this side of the water from this alliance? I am speaking now in a selfish way, it is true, but it is an element of selfishness that has common sense back of it. I repeat, there is no nation save Great Britain that can land a soldier on our soil and maintain him there for 30 days; and I do not think he can land, and I am in favor of fixing it so that he can not land even for 30 minutes. If we have to have more cannon and more ships, let us build them. We are spending enough money out here in front of this Capitol now on war workers' dormitories, that never will be occupied and still are going on to completion, to build one or two good battleships.

We pay out more money for moving pictures every year than would build a fleet of vessels. I am not an advocate of great navies unless we have to have them. I repeat, and I still repeat, what protection will we get from such an alliance?

Oh, it may be said, we will have trade abroad. Well, that is not a thing of such gravity as calls upon us to engage in all the wars of Europe.

But upon what a sea of trouble are we asked to embark? Senators, turn to the pages of your histories and ask yourselves why it is that for 2,000 years and more each war in Europe has been succeeded by another war. Many causes may be assigned, but away down deep under them all is race hatred and race ambition. Conquering hordes have time after time swept over Europe. They have crushed with brutal strength the native populations. The native populations have for years, sometimes for centuries, lain prostrate, hating and still hating their oppressors, waiting, waiting, for an opportunity to rise and strike for vengeance and liberty.

Time after time they have risen and driven them out only to find them returning. Sometimes they have held them back. In that case two races hating each other are face to face. The hatred may be wrong; it may be wicked; but you can no more eradicate it by a league of nations than you can wipe out the prejudice between the blacks and the whites in the South by passing a resolution in a New England sewing society. That may furnish the occasion for a dissertation to the effect that there is no prejudice; but, sirs, there is a prejudice.

Do you think that you can mix these alien peoples of Europe and of Asia and make them love each other by having a half dozen gentlemen of great distinction meet at The Hague or at Versailles and sign a paper? I tell you the Roumanian will remember the ravishment of his women and the murder of his old men a thousand years from now and hate the Hun as men hate who have suffered wrongs so great they can not find a voice.

Do you think that France will forgive the Hun in a thousand years? Will the Frenchman remember his women? Will he fail to remember how they were taken for medical examination before they were taken for ravishment? A thousand years from now will Belgium have forgotten the night of her horror? Will she ever cease to witness the burning of her cities, the defilement of her virgins, the massacre of her old men and old women? Will you make them love their oppressors and lie down in sweet serenity in a bed of peace, embracing with the tenderness of lovers? Will you make the Armenian love the Turk? Why, sirs, a million five hundred thousand new dead lie rotting in the ground—babes, little toddling babes, their brains dashed out before the mothers' frantic eyes, the fathers' maddened gaze; girls bound and borne off in brutal savagery to make a bed of lust for fiends incarnate, for such creatures as Moore describes:

> One who could pause and kneel unshod
> In the warm blood that his hand had poured
> And mutter o'er some text of God
> Engraven on his reeking sword.

Will you make the Armenian love the Turk?

What is to be the nature of this league of nations? If it be an agreement between Christian and enlightened nations to observe just rules of conduct toward each other, trusting to their honor and integrity as nations and binding them as honor binds, then well and good; hats off, and all acclaim to such a thing as that; but, if I understand the league of nations, that is not its scope. It is to bind the signatories thereto to employ force to compel obedience. If we so bind ourselves, then when Turkey and Armenia come to clash we must send our troops there. If the Serbians and the Russians come to a clash again, our troops must cross the seas. If England and France hereafter, breaking asunder the bonds of love that bind them now, shall go to fighting, then are we again to be bound to send our sons across the sea? Shall we each time there is a broil in Europe summon our troops, impose the draft, demand the first born and the youngest of the family, and once more send an endless stream of courage and heroism, but still of flesh and blood, across the distant seas to fight in foreign lands over quarrels between races that do not speak our tongue and whose rights and wrongs we do not understand?

It may be wicked, it may be the very acme of brutality, but I protest that if this great country of ours but knows its mission it will stay here within its seagirt shores, protect itself, retain its independence, suffering no single diminution of its sovereignty by agreements with other powers, making only that character of agreement I have so often referred to, and that it will seek to continue as the great guiding influence upon the Western Hemisphere; that we shall bind to us by ties of commerce and of love those great and virgin countries that lie to our south; that we shall seek to direct the energies of our people and the energies of their people to an honest interchange of products; that we shall make the Monroe doctrine an inviolable doctrine of nations; and that we shall seek always and at all times, by kindly counsel and by generous aid, to help to maintain the peace and the happiness of this world.

Mr. President, I have made these purely extemporaneous remarks because I thought there was nothing in the letter I had read from my friend to call for any castigation of him by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I hate to take up the time of the Senate this late in the afternoon. It is right difficult to reply to the Senator from Missouri, because one has to wait so long to begin the reply.

The Senator from Missouri has skillfully avoided and evaded the issue. The issue was the sentence in the letter which he read calling all men fools who dreamt of a permanent and just peace. Nobody was quarreling with a great deal of the other things that the Senator from Missouri said, and nobody was quarreling with the other part of the letter that this lawyer wrote.

The upshot of all that the Senator from Missouri has said is this, that if he is to have his way we are to go back to just where we were before this war started and all the nations of the world are to be armed camps, watching and suspecting one another all the time, ready to move for purposes of aggression and ready to move for fear that others may move for purposes of aggression. Are you going to put up with that? Do you stand here and tell me that that is unavoidable? Do you tell me that the common sense and common conscience and civilization and enlightenment of the world can not avoid it?

Who was talking about trying to make the Belgians love the Germans that raped their women? I was not. Who was talking about trying to make Armenians love Turks? I was not. Nobody imagines that they can do it. But what we are trying to do is to fix the status of things so that Prussians shall no more ravish Belgian women and so that Turks no more shall drive into the desert the women and children of Armenia while they take prisoner, subject to their lust, such of the women as they choose.

The Senator has, with the usual skillfulness of an adroit lawyer, attempted to shift the issue, and has attempted to put me in the position of defending the very thing that I do not defend and of attacking the very thing that I do not want to attack. Are you going to confess that what has recently happended can not be avoided for all the future to come; that junkers and barbarians are to continue, whenever they choose, to tear up treaties as "scraps of paper," and rape women whenever they please? If so, then the Senator's speech has been successful, because it seems that he thinks that that can not be avoided. I think it can, and I think that the common sense and common conscience of the common man, welded in and devoted to democracy throughout the world, can and will avoid it for the future.

Mr. President, if I believed, as the Senator seems to believe, that ever again this disgraceful spectacle could come upon the world's arena, to be witnessed helplessly by humanity, then I would cease to believe in God, and I would cease to believe in the common reason and the common sense and the common conscience of men, His creatures.

The Senator tells me "it may be very wicked but it is inevitable." Why, when 15 or more pioneers went into Missouri or into Mississippi in the early days, the very first thing they did was to form a league of individuals, just like the only league of nations I want. They said, "We have no government, we have no sheriff, we have no clerk, we have no law that binds us, but the man who steals a horse or kills one of us we will hang." So they formed a league of individuals without any court. Every pioneer that settled any part of America went into it with other pioneers with common sense and common conscience and his judgment that said: "We must have law, we must have order, we must have justice, we must have righteousness, and we will have it if we have to hang the fellow that interferes with it." Now, that is what we are going to say, through a league of nations, to Germany or anybody else.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. One minute. We are simply going to say that hereafter, by the grace of God and by our own might, conjoined and not disunited, that "any civilized country, or country pretending to be civilized, that dares to make war upon another without either consenting to arbitration when it is offered or offering arbitration upon its own part shall become the common enemy of mankind," and we will deal with it like the early pioneers in Missouri dealt with a horse thief or a murderer, that is all.

Now I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. Of course there is nothing to be gained by the Senator or myself discussing moot questions. I was about to ask the Senator to define what he meant—what he thinks ought to be the objects of this league of nations and the reciprocal obligations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just precisely what was the object of the first 25 men that ever met in Albermarle County, Va., when it was upon the frontier. That was to agree that there should be peace and law and honor and justice and righteousness, and if anybody interfered with it they were going to be put outside of the pale of the law and be treated accordingly.

Mr. REED. And punish them, if necessary, by force?

Mr. WILLIAMS. And punish them, if necessary; yes.

Mr. REED. Now, will the Senator yield, just so that I may understand him? That is all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. REED. I am not asking this in a controversial vein.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ask your question. I yield for a question.

Mr. REED. I am going to ask it. Does the Senator believe that we ought to agree with one or more or all of the nations of Europe, so that in case some nation in Europe did not obey the regulations of this league we would become a party to helping conquer that nation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator speaks of "the regulations" of this league. I have said nothing about the regulations of this league, and I have not said that they would make any regulations, except one plain proposition, and that is to spread abroad and proclaim the ukase, if you choose to call it so, that no civilized nation shall dare make war upon another without either offering or accepting fair arbitration. Now, that is the only regulation necessary. If they refuse to abide by that, then I say unhesitatingly that the civilized world ought to declare them the enemy of mankind and of civilization; cut them off from traffic and travel upon the high seas; cut them off from all other traffic and travel, as far as you can, and from raw materials of industry; and, if necessary, send my boys, yes, to whip them into order.

Mr. REED. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why, what happens in ordinary society? Why is it that the Senator from Missouri does not load himself up to kill me when we have a difficulty?

Mr. REED. Because I would not do it under any circumstances.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, I say, but why do you not if you are mad enough?

Mr. REED. The Senator does not mean that I am mad, of course.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not because you are too good to do it, or that I am, if we get mad enough, but it is because you know the force that is behind the constable and the sheriff. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. Mr. President, of course, in the case of a timid man like myself that might be true; but as for a valiant soul like the Senator from Mississippi, I know that if he wanted to shoot a man he would not hesitate on account of the sheriff. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am arguing seriously. What keeps the world in order? What keeps all of you in order? What makes you carry your controversies to the court instead of settling them with pistol or knife is the fact that the court has force behind it, and what actually occurs is this: In not one case in ten thousand does the court ever have to show its force. Your mere consciousness of the fact that the force is behind the court keeps you in order, keeps the Senator from Missouri in order, keeps me in order, and keeps a whole lot of other people in order. He and I have seen the time when we would have liked to kill a fellow that made us mad enough, but we have been educated to believe that we ought not to do it. We have been educated to believe that society had a right to settle our controversy and that we had no right to settle it for ourselves.

The Senator a moment ago said that it "might be wicked, but even the city of Washington had to have police," and every city has to have them. Yes; but every man in Washington is not his own policeman, is he? All the people in Washington together select a police, and they police; but if you left each man to be his own policeman and go out and arm himself cap-a-pie to fight the balance of the world and put a chip on the top of his head and dare you to knock it off, what sort of civilization would you have?

The whole truth is, the world has one more step to make. Long ago individuals agreed that it was better to suffer a little wrong now and then than it was to let each man be his own judge and his own executioner, and the nations of the world have to learn the same thing. Civilization will never be transmitted into enlightenment until they do, and it is not necessary to have any long list of regulations. You need only one principle; that principle is simply to say: "Before you dare go to war you must submit to the national arena, some fair arbitrament of your own choice and of your antagonist's choice, or, if you choose, some court selected beforehand by all nations of the civilized world the question in controversy." If you do not submit it, or if somebody offers to submit it to you and you do not agree to it, then you shall become like any outlaw in the United States or the District of Columbia becomes when he declines to leave the cause in controversy to the courts and undertakes to settle it for himself.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to get through.

Mr. REED. On the point, of course I suppose the Senator means to include in the proposition that the question must be submitted the further thought that the decision, when made, must be obeyed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. Then the Senator proposes that if our country has a controversy with any nation, before it can defend itself by force it must submit to the decision of some tribunal.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Absolutely.

Mr. REED. Who is to select that tribunal?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the Senator's question. The Senator a moment ago, in his own speech, answered his own question. He said there never was any obligation without reciprocal obligations. If we enter into an agreement whereby Turkey and Germany must be made to behave themselves before an international tribunal, then we also must agree that we shall behave ourselves, and there must be a tribunal organized that is fair enough, or we can select arbitrators and they can select umpires, and we must abide by the decision. It is no disgrace, if I have quarreled with you, for me to abide by the decision of the court.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will.

Mr. REED. Would the Senator be willing to submit the Monroe doctrine to an international court the majority of which of necessity would be composed of Europeans?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if what I hope to see is consummated, the Monroe doctrine, like a great many other things, will cease to be at all, because there will take its place a Monroe doctrine of the entire world, and a Monroe doctrine merely confined to the Western Hemisphere will cease to exist; there will be a Monroe doctrine for the world. When you undertake to say that there shall be no war unless after arbitrament, that applies to the Western Hemisphere as well as to everybody else; and when the Senator asks that question there is in his mind the idea that while we are willing to subject Europe and Asia and Africa to a sort of league of nations, we are not willing to subject America to it.

Mr. REED. The Senator——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to get through, but still I will answer another question.

Mr. REED. I beg the Senator's pardon; just this one:

The Senator states that he hopes to see the Monroe doctrine abrogated, or its place taken——

Mr. WILLIAMS. By a universal world Monroe doctrine.

Mr. REED. He hopes to see substituted for it a universal world Monroe doctrine. I will not stop to discuss that; but this is the question:

Suppose, notwithstanding the setting up of this universal world Monroe doctrine, some nation should actually cross the ocean and break the Monroe doctrine upon this side——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am ready to answer that question.

Mr. REED. And suppose that an international court had been set up to which that question was to be submitted; and suppose the majority of that international court was composed of the representatives of European governments, as it would be.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can not suppose that.

Mr. REED. It is necessary to suppose it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not necessary to suppose it.

Mr. REED. Or else it is necessary to suppose that European governments are going to——

Mr. WILLIAMS. We would select arbitrators, and the other country having controversy with us would select arbitrators, and they would select an umpire.

Mr. REED. Suppose you could not agree on arbitrators.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, we would agree; the world and humanity would make us agree.

Mr. REED. But you would not agree in a case of that kind—that is exactly the point—unless you had a permanent court.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, let the Senator ask the question.

Mr. REED. Would the Senator be willing to submit that question to any court?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if any nation in the world undertook to invade Central or South America and to defy the Monroe doctrine it would become our duty, if this scheme goes through, to leave to arbitration not the Monroe doctrine but the question in controversy, whatever it was. You can not leave the Monroe doctrine to arbitration.

Mr. REED. No; you leave the invasion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But you would have to leave to arbitration the question in controversy, which, in our opinion, involves the Monroe doctrine. We would propose it; and if the other nation did not agree to it then we would have behind us Great Britain and her colonies and France and Italy and Belgium and Roumania, if my idea shall be consummated, to whip that nation into agreeing to arbitration. Now, if they did agree to arbitration and we went to it and the arbitrators decided against us, then we ought to submit. No man has a right to speculate on the court. No man has a right to agree to leave a thing to arbitration with the back thought that he will obey the decision provided it is his way and he will violate it if it is not. That goes without saying, if we are honest men.

I noticed another thing about the Senator's speech. He could not keep from betraying the fact that back of it all was either a hatred or a fear of Great Britain. He spoke very contemptuously of "the blockade of the North Sea." If it had not been for the blockade of the North Sea, we would have been whipped to-day; Germany would have been successful.

Mr. REED. The Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; the Senator said: "From whom do we fear attack, unless it is from Great Britain herself?"

Mr. REED. Oh, well, Mr. President, I did not use the phrase in that way. I do not want the Senator, at this period of the international situation, to intimate that I said that we fear attack from Great Britain.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not say you did. You said: "From whom can we have a fear of attack except from Great Britain herself?"

Mr. REED. Oh, no. Let me get the Senator right, because, while I care nothing about the matter of controversy——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish the Senator would let me make, in an orderly way, the few remarks I have to make. If I am wrong, the RECORD will show it. That was my recollection of what the Senator said; and if I am wrong, the RECORD will show it.

Mr. REED. Let me make the statement. It will take but a second.

The thought I sought to express was that there was but one nation in the world that could injure us, and I said that it was unthinkable that she would attempt it; but there was only one that could, and that was Great Britain. That is very different from saying that I feared attack from her.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand; yes. The innuendo was there, however.

Mr. REED. Well, all right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Great Britain has had command of the seas for over a hundred years, and with the exception of ourselves she is the most peace-loving nation in the world. There is no reason why we shall not have command of the seas in another 20 years if we choose. We have the resources, we have the money, and nobody can object to our building the ships. The Senator has undertaken to make it rather appear as if I did not want any Navy. He did not say so, but he argued against a man of straw, and he was answering me. It looks as if that was the impression that he meant to leave.

I want the English-speaking race to control the seas of the world, and I want them to do it not because they are the English-speaking race or my race, but because they are the only two branches of any race in the world who love peace and who will fight for peace. We will both do it, and I think we are a little bit better tempered to do it than the English, even. We love peace more than the English, even. Our passion is peace.

So I have no idea that England is going to surrender the control of the seas. There is only one thing that could make England surrender the control of the seas, and that would be an absolute reliance on the fact that we had control of the seas; and if we had it she might be willing to surrender it, because she would know that we were never going to use the control of the seas for the purpose of waging a war of aggression or of starvation upon her. She is bound to keep control of the seas as far as the Continent of Europe is concerned. If she allowed the Continent to have control of the seas, she would be starved in eight weeks; and you do not expect her to surrender the control except upon the one condition that we get it and can hold it. In that event both of us would have it and keep it with a common peace purpose. If so, we will hold it as trustees for her, just as her fleet held the seas as trustees for us during this war. If it had not been for the fact that she had control of the seas, if it had not been for the English fleet, we would have had a pretty hard time. We could not have got the men over. We would have had to wait here until these pacifists and front-dooryard fellows had been satisfied—the fellows that wanted us to stay in our yard until the enemy got in through the gate, and for God's sake not to go outside and meet him in the street. If he had got as far as the front yard, we would have been gone. That would have been the end of us for a while, at any rate.

Mr. President, this war has been fought in vain, the blood of our sons has been shed unavailingly, our treasure has been poured out like water for nothing, if at the end of this war some other autocracy, some other junkerthum, some other despotism, can perpetrate the outrage which Germany perpetrated when she invaded Belgium and which Austria perpetrated when she sent the ultimatum to Serbia.

The Senator goes on and talks about what a vain dream it is "that the lion and the lamb shall lie down together." Of course, it is a vain dream that the lion should willingly lie down; but in every civilized country in the world the lion has been controlled so that he either had to lie down or get out of the country, and that is what we are going to do with the lion in this case. He has either got to lie down or he has got to get out and go into the desert. Christ said that He did not come "to bring peace to the world but a sword"; and what He meant is just what I am talking about—that as far as the unrighteous are concerned, and the wicked, and the barbaric, and the men who believe in war, and who believe that war is the only way to carry on the world, they must either lie down in peace and make out like they are lambs, or they must be killed, or they must take to the desert.

The Senator speaks of "this workaday world." Why, the world that we have been fooling with for four years is not a workaday world. It is a murder-a-day world. It is a murder-a-second world. We do not want any more of it. Nobody is trying to control the world by moral suasion. Every word that I have said shows that I want behind the agreement of the nations that enter into this agreement something besides moral suasion. I want the force of each nation by its solemn plighted word, or I want, at any rate, enough appearance of force to make the wicked and barbarous peoples think that the force is there, and therefore fear to defy it.

The Senator says very truly that thus far we have not come to that sort of thing. No; we have not. Up to a few years ago—not many years as the world goes—somebody might have risen and said that "so far we had not come to the point where men were willing to leave their controversies to the courts." A man might very well then have been justified in believing that humanity would never reach the stage of perfection where it would agree to that.

I believe, Mr. President, with Thomas Jefferson, not in the perfection of humanity but in its "indefinite perfectability." You may tell me this, that, or the other desirable thing can not be done because of human nature, but my answer is that all you have got to do is to change your own human nature and use your own influence to change other people's human nature until there shall be a revolution in human nature that will suit new conditions.

Of course, you can never have justice and peace and righteousness on the earth as long as men get up and say it is impossible to have it, or as long as the majority of men say it, because until you get a majority of common sense and common conscience of the common people together on a proposition the minority is helpless. It is a psychological problem after all. All you have got to do is to have enough people will to have it, and then you will have it. If the Senator and I were about to engage in a controversy in which we had made up our minds to kill one another, and somebody would have me will not to kill him, half of the controversy would have disappeared, and if somebody would have him will not to kill me all of it would have been gone.

Mr. President, I understand that this is a sort of a question that ought not to be very much a matter of controversy but of mutual debate; it ought to be a matter of cool consideration in a mood that neither the Senator from Missouri nor I are experts, and that is a prayerful mood. He and I do have prayerful moods, I do not doubt, at times, notwithstanding the fact that we make no preachment of anything of that description.

It would be a sad thing to believe, it would be an awful thing to think, that humanity was absolutely chained and bound and helpless, and that this carnival of crime and barbarity and atrocity that we have just witnessed should be permitted to occur again. I remember that the British Army went into an action with the cry on their lips, "Never again"—fighting in order that that sort of thing should never again be necessary. You do not want it, I do not want it, nobody really wants it. Then, if we do not want it hard enough and strong enough and earnest enough it will not happen, and if there is somebody such a barbarian that he wants to have it, that he wants to carry it on, just say to him, "As much as we hate bloodshed your blood is the penalty." Kill him; yes, kill him like a mad dog. Kill him because he is a mad dog. Kill him because there is no other way to deal with him. Kill him in the name of peace, and kill him in the name of the Prince of Peace. Put force behind your league or your alliance or your agreement or whatever you call it. Put behind it also the willingness that when fair arbitrators decide against you you will submit, and when fair arbitrators decide against the other fellow you are going to make him submit.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think I could have done the Senate no greater service than when I offered this letter. It has been the occasion of clearing up, at least so far as the distinguished Senator from Mississippi is concerned and so far as I am concerned, a question that ought to be made plain, namely, what the proposal of those who bring forward the league of nations really is. The Senator from Mississippi has frankly stated that the proposition is to create a league of nations to enforce peace; that this league of nations is to provide, among other things, that no country or people shall go to war on any account until it has first submitted its contentions to arbitration or to a court——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Or offered to.

Mr. REED. Or offered to, and that the decision of that court when rendered must be obeyed, and if it is not obeyed then the force of the entire league will be used against the nation which fails to obey. Baldly stated, it is then proposed by the advocates of the league of nations that the United States shall agree to submit every controversy, however vital to the life of the Republic, to a court, and that it shall obey the mandate of that court upon peril of being conquered by an international army which it has helped to create and to which it has contributed men and money——

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me a minute, I said nothing about an international army.

Mr. REED. You plainly spoke of an international force.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Each country signing the treaty is to proceed to enforce its own agreement.

Mr. REED. Very well; in the aggregate that constitutes an international force or army.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would not have an international army with a supernation. I agree with you about that.

Mr. REED. An international force is then to be created which when gathered shall crush this Nation for failure to obey the court's decree—that is the proposition as now modified.

Mr. President, an international court, as I showed the other day, would necessarily be composed of the representatives of the different nations of the earth. In order to be international it would necessarily have upon it the representatives of all the European nations. The European nations, as Washington said, have many interests in common and those common interests may all unite or exist in common against us.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, I said nothing about an international court. I said "arbitration." Ordinarily when arbitrators are to be selected one of the parties in the controversy selects a part, the other another part, and the several select an umpire.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the term "court" was used not only by the Senator but it is in common use by the champions of the league. I am, however, willing to discuss both phases—decision by a court and decision by arbitration. Let me proceed with the court theory first. The court must be composed, as I have said, necessarily of representatives of European nations as well as our own. The European nations, as Washington warned us, I repeat, have interests peculiar to themselves, which may be common against us. Imagine, therefore, a controversy involving such a question. What would be our state if we were obliged to submit it to a court made up in the whole or in a substantial part from those having an interest against us?

Suppose, for instance, that a European nation should undertake the exploitation of a South American State, and the question should arise whether either the Monroe doctrine or the doctrine of the league of nations was being violated. Suppose we were obliged to submit that question to an international court. Is it not easy to see how the nations of Europe having representatives on this court might have a common interest against the United States? And we would be compelled to submit this doctrine, so vital to our sovereignty and interest, to a court packed against us.

But the Senator abandons the idea of a court and takes refuge in a board or tribunal of arbitration. Really there is a distinction without much difference. By whatever name the tribunal is called, if it has the power of final decision it performs the office of a court. If it be permanent it is a permanent court. If it be temporary it is a temporary court. Mr. President, any league that proposes a tribunal of arbitration and does not name the arbitrators in advance leaves the situation so that in case of emergency incalculable damage might happen before an arbitration court could be selected and convened. Hence it would seem that the arbitrators must be agreed upon in advance. Thus we have in fact a court called by the name of a board of arbitrators. Who, now, are to constitute these arbitrators? Manifestly we could not ask to control. Manifestly some of them would be selected by our enemy. Manifestly the enemy might prevail and by strength or fortune get a majority prejudiced by interest or ties of blood in his favor. In that event the United States is obliged, nevertheless, to go to decision upon a vital matter before a board of arbitration a majority of which is against us from the first. These are the things we are asked to submit to, and if we do not submit to the decision, though it is vital to us, though it involves our national life, we are to be then crushed by a concert of nations that have a force already created for their express purpose.

Mr. President, put that to the American people. Submit to the American voter whether he will ever turn over the vital interests of this Nation to a tribunal a majority of which may be composed of foreigners and even of our enemies. Ask him for his answer. You will receive it in no uncertain terms, for the American people have some common sense left, even if some other people have not.

The distinguished Senator said another thing that conclusively proves he does not believe the doctrine he so vehemently preaches. Let us see what is this doctrine. He would have universal peace. He would have it by virtue of a league of nations. Yet, sir, he says that England must never surrender her sovereignty of the seas unless she surrenders it to us. In other words, this scheme of universal peace demands first, last, and all the time an invincible navy that can command the waters of every sea, and this navy must be that of our friend, England, or it must be our own. So we are only to have a league of universal peace upon condition that the rest of the world agrees that England and the United States, one or both, shall be able to lick every other nation. That is the dream of universal peace and "parliament of man" we are scolded for not accepting.

Mr. President, a little common sense applied to that and I believe we can arrive at the conclusion that the Senator's premise of a great navy for England that will command the seas destroys the very thought of a league of nations. Why? Let us follow it. Suppose that every nation in the world was to be disarmed to-morrow, but that England was to retain her great fleet commanding the seas. England would then command the world and stand "astride it like a colossus," and all the other nations, like little things, could crawl in and out between England's great legs.

I do not say this out of unkindness to England. How can you talk about giving England the supremacy of the sea without at the same time conceding to her supremacy upon the land, provided you insist that the other nations shall disarm upon land? When you have conceded England's supremacy upon the seas and all the other nations of the world then remain helpless upon the land they will be in a condition where they can be at once overwhelmed, where England can bring her troops from every quarter of the globe and all her allies from every clime and hurl them upon a nation standing defenseless. Few of the nations will be so foolish as to agree to that.

I do not say this out of unkindness for England. I anticipate no trouble with Great Britain. Proud I am that my blood comes from the Scotch and Irish part of Great Britain. I am no twister of the British lion's tail, but I know when we assemble around the council table the statesmen of the world they will be as jealous of England as England will be of them. I know that you can not ask that England shall retain dominion of the seas and they shall all lay down their arms upon the land. If you do ask it you will be laughed at.

So the Senator does not believe in his own doctrine. I will tell you the kind of a league of nations he believes in. His league of nations is something that suits his own ideas. It is the union of the English-speaking folk wherein England and America will dominate and all the rest of the world will obey, and if they do not obey, then the treatment is—I quote the Senator—to "kill them like mad dogs, and kill, and kill, and kill, even in the name of the Prince of Peace." That will be a very sacriligious thing to do, to kill in the name of the Holy Christ. It is true, the Emperor William did that.

Now, the whole truth is that the controversies of nations have many of them been in the best of faith. Two nations each believing the other was wrong have gone to war. Such cases have made the great majority of controversies that have brought on modern wars. Each has thought the other wrong, each has thought itself right.

So when you form your league of nations the dominant nations will think they are right about certain things and that the other nations are wrong, and will insist that the other nations shall obey, and if they do not, then they are likely to adopt the doctrine of the distinguished Senator from Mississippi and "kill, and kill, and kill." So the Senator is back in the slaughterhouse of the ages, with his league of nations and all his talk of peace, as bloody as the Kaiser's Huns. You get nowhere by that sort of a tirade. You get nowhere by going around that circle, and you get nowhere by misrepresentation.

I said with great clearness, if I am capable of making a clear statement, that I believe the nations of the world could assemble around the council table and write a code of international law so clear that any nation that violated it would stand before the world as an outlaw, a moral outcast, a moral leper, just as Germany stood before the world when she invaded Belgium. That is a great force in this world, not in any manner to be discounted or to be sneered at. I believe it is possible to agree to a partial disarmament of nations. But I do not believe in a league of nations that proposes to enforce the views of the majority or the decisions of any court upon any other nation, for that is the old Holy Alliance over again. One of these days before this debate is ended I propose to compare the Holy Alliance and the time in which it was formed with some of the circumstances and facts of this day.

Mr. President, I am glad we have had this discussion. We have at last had one frank avowal on this floor that men propose to sumbit the vital interests of the American people to a tribunal a majority of which may be and undoubtedly will be foreigners and enemies of this country. That doctrine baldly stated to the American people will be repudiated in every hamlet and village of America.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 5, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill of the following title:

H. R. 13153. An act extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River, at the foot of Garrison Avenue, at Fort Smith, Ark.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FREAR. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FREAR. On the 23d day of September last I made a speech on the floor of the House in regard to the Security League of New York and briefly discussed the charges the league had made against the American Congress. Immediately afterwards Mr. Lydecker, of the Security League, sent a letter to the Speaker of the House, in which he charged me with "pacifism or worse." The last term would be indefinite were it not for the fact that the league had been charging Members of the House generally, myself included, with pacifism and with disloyalty.

On October 1 last the New York Tribune published an editorial, from which I take the following extract:

> It is true that the National Security League has been denounced in Congress. This was done by Representative FREAR, of Wisconsin, whom the league opposed for reelection because he had voted against the declaration of war and against the Kahn amendment, which was essential to the selective draft, and for the notorious McLemore and Cooper amendments, thereby failing to stand the "acid test" stipulated for by President Wilson. So much for FREAR.
> Hearst attacks the National Security League for a similar reason, namely, that it has denounced his disloyalty.

Mr. Hearst's criticism of the Security League, according to the Tribune, is because the league has attacked his "disloyalty," "a similar reason" advanced, according to this paper, for the league's attack upon myself.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of other communications that I have with me and that I will submit later to the proper committee, but I think that presented is sufficient to qualify under the rule of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may proceed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of great importance to the membership of the House, and I raise the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee and Mr. KITCHIN moved a call of the House.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Fairchild, G. W.	Kreider	Scully

The SPEAKER. On this vote 326 Members—a quorum—have answered to their names.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] is recognized.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I will not repeat the statement which I submitted to the Speaker and the House which raises the question of personal privilege. I will proceed directly to the subject in hand, and I trust that I shall not have interruptions, because it will take me nearly all the allotted time to say what I have in mind. I trust you will accord me the attention which I believe the subject deserves.

Mr. Speaker, during the stress of war in June, 1918, the National Security League, a New York corporation, in a bulletin published throughout the country said "it"—the league—"had taken upon itself * * * to prevent the election of incompetent or disloyal men to Congress. * * * Work for a Congress of able men. * * * Organize your district. * * * Write us what you have done. The entire membership of over 100,000 will be thrown into the campaign for the election of a loyal Congress." The bulletin contained further insinuations that the present American Congress is disloyal.

August 10, 1918, this corporation furnished to the press its chart of "acid test" votes in Congress and by direct inference purposely charged that over 300 Representatives and 47 States were disloyal, followed by the query, "What are you going to do about it?"

In a September bulletin this corporation furnished a widely published statement to the press saying "it"—the league—"is prosecuting an aggressive nonpartisan campaign in all parts of the country to insure the election to Congress of men of demonstrated loyalty and ability."

September 18 this same corporation sent an insolent questionnaire to all Representatives in Congress giving 10 days' time in which to answer, and threatening "country-wide publicity." Charges of individual disloyalty will be referred to hereafter.

During the 1918 primaries and election this corporation "aggressively" worked to defeat its blacklisted Members wherever opposition could be aroused. It claims to control a membership of over 100,000, "over 1,000 volunteer speakers cooperating with Government authorities in Washington," and admits an annual expense bill of over $1,000,000, with which to crush opposition.

Eighty per cent of the House has been branded disloyal and unpatriotic by this political blackhand corporation, while hundreds of thousands of voters, irrespective of election or defeat of individual Members, have accepted these false and dishonest statements as true. To repeat its own query, "What are you going to do about it?"

On September 23 I called attention of the House to the charges of disloyalty made by this New York corporation, which Gen. SHERWOOD appropriately terms the "National Obscurity League," against over 300 Members of this House, and similar charges made against 47 of the States, together with evidence of its efforts to defeat Representatives in 1918 in an assumed campaign to elect a "loyal Congress." A resolution of investigation was briefly discussed at that time. For reasons that will later appear efforts to press the resolution for immediate action were withheld, but I am addressing the House in support of the same general proposition and on a matter of the highest privilege. I fully appreciate my own comparative weakness in challenging public slanders issued by this powerful, arrogant corporation that boasts of its large membership, great wealth, and potent influence throughout the land whereby to destroy all those who meet with its disapproval.

On behalf of proscribed Representatives, I could wish that some older and abler Member might challenge charges that reflect upon the patriotism and loyalty of the House and of the country. In an abiding consciousness of my own rectitude of purpose to fulfill every pledge voiced by the oath of office, and in an equally confident belief that this House and this Congress has fully met every test of patriotism and every obligation imposed by the great world's war, I ask your indulgence while offering a brief statement in support of my request for an early investigation of the National Security League of New York.

Mr. Speaker, under existing law the country selects its Representatives by popular choice at both the primary and election. Responsive directly to the people, the high character of membership of this body may be measured by that fact. The House is representative of the people, and if the people are honest and strong, and they generally measure up to their critics, then the House is a fair index of those back home who are the real government.

Once all powerful and controlling in national affairs, the country has witnessed the coordinate hold on reins of government possessed by this legislative body gradually slip away, until the Senate, by usurpation of House functions, the judiciary, by setting aside legislation, often through a divided court, and the Executive, not infrequently by unmistakable command, one and all have subordinated the House to the position it now holds.

The powerful press and great business interests of the country with growing insistence demand that revenue and other important legislation be rewritten by the Senate, so that bills constitutionally originating in the House are practically nullified through limiting to amendment of conference reports and brief debates its influence on such legislation.

Not one constitutional power has been abrogated by the House, or the people whom it most closely represents, through frequent elections. Not one legislative function has been abridged by that people, but the House of Trumbull, of Madison, and of Adams has permitted a marked loss of jurisdiction constitutionally vested in it by them. This legislative body, once guided by the forceful statesmanship of Clay, Calhoun, Stephens of Georgia, and Stevens of Pennsylvania, is subordinated in its legislative prerogatives through easy custom. The forum made famous by Blaine, Garfield, McKinley, and Carlisle, the House of Randall, Reed, CANNON, and CLARK, with sole authority to impeach and in certain cases even to elect the President himself, is shorn of the power and prestige provided by our forefathers first of all when drafting the Constitution.

While Great Britain has watched powers granted under the scope of Magna Charta to its "Commons" grow beyond the dreams of a single century ago, the people of this country during that same period have watched their own popular branch of Government, through its surrender of legislative rights, become subordinated to all others.

Mr. Speaker, never has this House been more responsive to the will of the people than during the notable sixty-fifth session. From our distinguished Speaker down to the humblest Member, the honest historian will write that average patriotism, ability, and industry during these strenuous days of our greatest war have fully measured up to the highest standards of the past. Supporting to the utmost, practically unanimously for the first time in history, all the Executive's recommendations for cooperative aid, we have given millions of our best men and over fifty billions of our dollars toward the prosecution of the war. We have squarely met two great moral and governmental problems that confronted the people for a half century—prohibitory and equal suffrage legislation, both of which the House by a two-thirds vote has submitted to the country. No legislative body since the organization of governments has better deserved or more justly merited the confidence and trust of the people it represented.

It is not my purpose to offer reasons for loss of prestige and power once possessed by the House, for men will differ as to cause, however closely they agree as to results, but one cogent reason why the House is differently regarded by the country than in days of old is because of its easy acquiescence in the new order of things.

In times of peace or war reputable writers and irresponsible scribblers, big interests and innumerable little interests, find common cause in unrebuked criticism of the House. The intelligence and Justice Departments waste no words or time in handling slanderers of the Executive. The judiciary rarely finds need to punish for contempt, because the public refuses to permit the ermine to be dragged in the mire. The Senate reaches out with its probe and seizes interests that, cuttlefishlike, besmirch its membership, but the House is the target of ill-natured flings, from whatever source, until to-day and during the pendency of a great war, when its membership loyally joined in the support of every measure for carrying on the war, a New York corporation "league," headed by an ex-United States Senator and an ex-candidate for the Presidency, has publicly branded the House as disloyal and un-American, from its Speaker down to and including over 300 Members.

Why was the House singled out for attack by this New York corporation? Why were Mr. Root and Mr. Parker unwilling to arouse senatorial anger? Why were they silent over senatorial records that are precisely like those of House Members? Why does the House permit men, however noted, to libel its membership under a cloak of "patriotism"?

This practice of gross misrepresentation is common. Recently a local Washington paper berated Congress editorially day after day for enacting war-time prohibition. It openly charged that a majority of Representatives were stealthily smuggling liquors in back doors of their residences while legislating bone-dry conditions for the public at large in Washington and elsewhere. Such false criticism during times of war held Congress up as a parcel of hypocrites without principle or conscience. A short time ago the paper that uttered these constant and vicious attacks was disclosed to be financed by brewing interests. The motive for the attacks was then understood, but the public only remembers unrebuked charges of double-dealing by Congress and an impression that its motives are insincere.

Stock gambling by Members generally was the gist of Tom Lawson's charges, repeated with amplifications by sensational newspapers. Proof was submitted that every charge was baseless, and Lawson's slanders were shown utterly false, but the libel against Congress, collectively and individually, was published from one end of the country to the other, and belated truth received little attention from the press that carried the libel or the humbugged public that believed it. No man was punished, no man usually is punished, however false or serious the charge.

Just and unjust criticisms are regularly voiced against public officials, and during times of peace the country is inclined to await facts and suspend judgment; but these have been days of sacrifice, individual and national, days when honest, well-balanced men were no longer of judicial mind and when crazed individuals and hysterical temperaments were unable to weigh calumny or falsehood.

Mr. Speaker, when misrepresentations and hypocritical insinuations are used by a blackmailing New York league for questioning the loyalty and Americanism of 80 per cent of the American Congress during critical times of war, when foul libels are published from one end of the country to the other, and when, under a cloak of patriotism, these interests endeavor to defeat their blacklisted roll of Congressmen, the time has come for Congress to haul before the bar of the House those responsible for malicious slanders and to measure out adequate punishment. [Applause.] If charges are true, if we are disloyal, we have no right to sit in this House. [Applause.] Every Representative, whether proscribed or of the 47 perfect patriots accepted by these interests, should join in protecting the honor and dignity of the House.

I am proud to be a Member of this honorable body that knows no superior but the people. I am jealous of its reputation for loyalty. A scene of strong partisanship in times of peace, its membership has never failed the President since war was declared. Practically unanimous in support of every measure for the conduct of the war, voting fabulous appropriations without means of determining expenditures, giving ungrudgingly to the limit from the most valued part of the Nation's wealth and strength—its manhood—there never has been in past history of this or any other country a legislative body more united and unselfish in its patriotism than the Sixty-fifth Congress. [Applause.]

In my remarks of September 23 I set forth the character of charges made by this New York Security League against the membership of the House and its acceptance by hundreds of thousands as conclusive proof of disloyalty. The use of the charges in many different congressional districts was also briefly stated. Speeches by Representatives COOPER of Wisconsin, MCCULLOUGH, HAYDEN, and others have analyzed and disclosed these false and dishonest "acid tests." Briefly stated, the notorious New York corporation declared that the loyalty of the American Congress must be measured by eight votes cast in Congress, which were as follows:

No. 1, March 7, 1916, tabling of the McLemore resolution.

No. 2, April 18, 1916, Kahn amendment to Military Committee bill.

No. 3, April 18, 1916, Brandegee amendment to military bill.

No. 4, April 13, 1916, providing for a volunteer reserve under Federal control.

No. 5, June 2, 1916, to recommit naval bill.

No. 6, March 1, 1917, amendment as to American ships carrying arms or munitions. All those six amendments or votes were before the war.

No. 7, April 5, 1917, declaration of war.

No. 8, April 23, 1917, Kahn amendment to conscription bill.

Of these eight "acid-test" votes, six were prior to the declaration of war. Only one vote, on the Kahn amendment, was since the declaration. All the one hundred or more remaining measures since war was declared, for raising millions of men and billions of dollars, were ignored by this self-constituted bunch of "loyalty" critics. It has been pointed out repeatedly that prior to the declaration of war with Germany our Government was neutral and that violations of treaty provisions by different belligerents, however objectionable, were specifically challenged only by a declaration of war. Until then no act of the Executive or of Congress, however debatable, was "disloyal." Thereafter every vote admittedly was loyal, excepting the questioned "Kahn amendment."

The Kahn amendment did not give us conscription, but struck from the conscription bill a volunteer provision and took from the President the option therein provided of determining when to enforce conscription. The Security League dishonestly and maliciously misrepresented that vote. Again, the so-called Brandegee amendment and other comparatively insignificant measures prior to war did not reach in number or amount 5 per cent of the men or money unanimously voted by the Sixty-fifth Congress after war was declared.

Mr. Speaker, such "acid tests" were never selected to determine "loyalty." Why, then, did this New York corporation promise "to elect a loyal Congress"? What kind of a corporation determined test votes on loyalty, which, if applied to Washington, Lincoln, Douglas, Greeley, McClellan, Lloyd George, or President Wilson, would have barred these men from ever holding public office? Testing these "acid tests," the full absurdity appeared when within the past month President Wilson, his Cabinet, and all leading members of his party asked for the return and reelection of the Democratic Congress, notwithstanding only four Democratic Representatives passed these "acid tests." [Applause.] On the other hand, Roosevelt, Taft, Hughes, and practically all other leading Republicans urged the reelection of over 200 Republican candidates, 80 per cent of whom were blacklisted by Mr. Root's corporation. Not one word affecting eight "test" votes or of one "test" vote came from the leading men of the country. Not one suggestion of disloyalty or un-Americanism of hundreds of candidates publicly proscribed by the "security league." Unless President Wilson and his Cabinet and Roosevelt, Taft, and Hughes, all foremost Americans, were false to themselves and to their country, then the political propaganda against Congress of this "patriotic" league and other political leagues of like character is an infamous lie, knowingly uttered for political ends. Practically every leading American so determined when these "tests" and "leagues" were ignored.

In other words, only a fool or knave will contend that several comparatively unimportant votes before war rather than 100 votes after war determines loyalty. Logically, the eight tests were a stupid blind. What, then, was the motive of their selection by this arrogant bunch of "loyalists," compared with whom Kaiser Bill and his aids were mere novices?

These witnesses against Congress first determined what the law should be on "loyalty" and then selected eight "test votes"; but in addition to the dual rôle of witnesses and lawgivers for the trial of the American Congress, these same interests arrogated to themselves the additional rôles of prosecutor and of judge. Lawgiver, witness, prosecutor, and judge, all embraced in one, is this powerful but irresponsible Wall Street corporation, which demanded the defeat of the American Congress on the most heinous charge ever laid against public officials.

England did not want an election during the war for fear it would revive all the unscrupulous graveyard political ghouls of whom our "security league" and other camouflaged patriots are exhibits. She avoided these political harpies during the war by extending the legal life of the present House of Commons three years ago. America's Constitution compelled such elections here, and so it became the refuge of every hypocritical lip patriot who had a grudge to settle, an ambition to gratify, or a secret purpose to further. To these elements in every district this New York corporation appealed in carrying out threats to defeat its blacklisted Congressmen.

Mr. Speaker, in its libelous statements given to the press Representatives generally were pilloried, including Speaker CLARK, leaders KITCHIN, FERRIS, MANN, MOORE, LENROOT, FESS, and others, and were declared to be un-American, disloyal, or whatever vile insinuation could be carried to the voters' minds, supported by the promise that this corporation would rescue the country by a political campaign for a "loyal Congress." "Forty-seven" perfect patriots in the House, like Heinze's "57" varieties of pickles, were, however, acceptable to the league, of whom just a quartette of Democrats, out of 220 Members, or less than 2 per cent, were stamped "O. K."

Even the 47 experienced some recent political casualties; but my purpose now is to show the significance of omitted legitimate tests by these same interests. The first real fight after war was declared came over the first revenue bill, which carried the sinews of war, and was passed overwhelmingly on May 23, 1917. No sensible man claims opposition to that measure was disloyal, although the bill was of vital importance to the war. The first revenue bill demanded by the President to finance the war found 19 of the 47 perfect patriots approved by the league voting "nay," or 40 per cent voted against the first war-revenue bill. On the Lenroot amendment to the revenue bill to increase taxes on incomes of $20,000 and more also passed overwhelmingly, 30 per cent of the opposing vote came from the 47 perfect patriots approved by these interests.

I am not questioning any Member's vote, but am pointing out omitted tests. Based on its inquisition chamber "acid tests," the New York junker corporation next determined that 47 of the 48 States were disloyal and gave to the press of the country on August 10 the following percentages of disloyalty:

Alabama, 60; Arizona, 62.5; Arkansas, 55.35; California, 48.86; Colorado, 78.12; Connecticut, 5; Delaware, 12.5; Florida, 56.24; Georgia, 58.33; Idaho, 43.75; Illinois, 39.81; Indiana, 52.88; Iowa, 64.77; Kansas, 62.5; Kentucky, 60.23; Louisiana, 45.31; Maine, 25; Maryland, 34.61; Minnesota, 68.75; Mississippi, 60.94; Missouri, 60.15; Montana, 62.5; Nebraska, 75; Nevada, 50; New Hampshire, 6.25; New Jersey, 21.87; New Mexico, 12.5; New York, 15.11; North Carolina, 56.25; North Dakota, 79.16; Ohio, 55.67; Oklahoma, 54.69; Oregon, 20.83; Pennsylvania, 31.67; Tennessee, 51.25; Texas, 66.67; Utah, 31.25; Vermont, 12.5; Virginia, 47.5; Washington, 37.5; West Virginia, 31.25; Wisconsin, 70.45; Wyoming, 75.

Presumably 90 per cent of the House membership standing for reelection and opposed by the New York Security League weathered the storm on November 5, but a few strong public men in close districts were defeated by such poisonous misrepresentation as I have described and victorious Members are left under suspicion. The "tests" and methods have been shown to be hypocritical, and brief reference to patriots responsible for such wholesale slanders may be somewhat enlightening.

The New York Junker Security League Corporation is reputed to be a creature of Wall Street, supporting big-business dreams of national expansion, wherein our Government is to encompass the world in its commercial grasp backed by its own plan or scheme of universal compulsory military training, irrespective of peace terms. A great military and naval establishment of several hundred thousand men or more may be necessary to police other countries from Russia and China to Mexico, and from Patagonia to Panama and to the Philippines. Powerful interests are not adverse to this program, interests that oppose any league of nations or gradual international disarmament or open diplomacy. An investigation will disclose their relations, if any, to this New York corporation that charges the American Congress individually and collectively with crimes of treasonable proportions.

Mr. Speaker, the "Security League, Incorporated," was organized about 1914 and at once became the self-constituted guardian of our liberties and autocratic judge of our patriotism. As set forth in a speech of September 23, its leading sponsors are Elihu Root and Alton B. Parker, of New York City. At the last annual meeting, held May 8, 1918, a "Colonel" Lydecker presented a list of 60 people, including himself, for officers, directors, and "committeemen far and wide," which list was accepted without opposition. Elihu Root was named "honorary president," and Alton B. Parker "honorary vice president."

S. S. Menken, a "Democratic league organizer" of many years' experience, was named "president," a position he had held since 1914. In June, 1918, according to the press, the resignation of Menken was demanded by the league because of his public commendation of William R. Hearst, of New York. After Menken was kicked out by the anti-Hearst interests, Lydecker, a member of the executive committee, took Menken's job. It was Lydecker who insolently wrote Speaker CLARK regarding the proposed investigation. Taking up the officers of the Security League who have attacked the "loyalty" of Congress, we first have Mr. Elihu Root, honorary president. In a June, 1918, league bulletin published throughout the country is the statement, "The entire force of the league's 281 branches and its membership of over 100,000 patriotic Americans will be thrown into this campaign for the election of a 'loyal Congress.' Elihu Root, honorary president, is taking an active part in this campaign." In August Mr. Root's corporation sent broadcast the chart of "test" votes, therein condemning the American Congress and 47 of the 48 States as disloyal.

Immediately following the recent November election the press significantly announced Elihu Root would be chief counsel and legislative agent for all the railways of the country, with $17,000,000,000 at stake, in the most gigantic legal and business deal ever known—the return of railways to private ownership. A pliable or obdurate Sixty-sixth Congress will determine questions of disposition and of terms. Coincidentally, all leading officials of the Security League Corporation are noted corporation lawyers. Coincidentally, single members of the "league's" executive committee are on the directorates of a dozen or more large railway systems. Coincidentally, politically patriotic leagues in 1918 were largely officered and financed by big-business interests. Coincidentally, many candidates for Congress of such interests had notoriously ossified and reactionary records. With billions of dollars in issue, such Representatives might be of undoubted aid during the Sixty-sixth Congress in unscrambling railway interests, according to the views of those instrumental in such elections.

I will not discuss the inglorious failure of the Russian Commission or millions of dollars loaned by the United States to a paper Russian Government after Root's unpublished report was received. Matters of personal patriotic or unpatriotic records are also trivial. The country knows that after this Security League corporation headed by Mr. Root put forth its hypocritical acid tests and "aggressively" tried to defeat blacklisted Members, President Wilson, ex-Presidents Taft and Roosevelt, Mr. Hughes, and many other leading men ignored so-called loyalty tests and urged reelection of many proscribed Members. Why did Mr. Root and his associates lodge the infamous charge of disloyalty against scores of Representatives, a charge repudiated by the country?

Alton B. Parker is "vice president" of this New York corporation. His hold on public attention was first gained in 1904, when he was defeated by over two and one-half million votes because of alleged subserviency to Wall Street. Mr. Parker's patriotic efforts do not occupy any pages of past history. In this particular he emulates Mr. Root, but as a champion of preparedness Mr. Parker is brought out from obscurity when, standing on a platform for the Presidency in 1904, he publicly demanded "a reduction of the American Army and Army expenditures." In 1904 our total forces throughout the world numbered 64,264 officers and men, of whom only a handful were in this country fit for real military service. That small number Mr. Parker demanded should be reduced. This year he was trying to defeat a Congress that unanimously supported every measure for carrying on the war, reaching millions of men and over fifty billions of dollars in the aggregate, while the last famous utterance of Mr. Parker, a new apostle of preparedness and patriotism, was for a reduction of our Army and of Army expenditures, then reaching less than 2 per cent of those we provided. What, then, was Mr. Parker's real purpose in denouncing 300 Representatives of the American Congress as disloyal?

Next we reach Lydecker, of suggestive name, another president of the Security League, who was given Menken's job. In the only red book of blue blood treasured by the aristocracy of America, "Who's Who," Lydecker says of himself he is a lawyer engaged in "corporation work, will contests, administration of estates, reference, and counsel duties." Innate modesty prevents any further flamboyant free advertisements of his self-confessed qualifications, but Lydecker's corporation work harmonizes with recognized legal services of the honorary president and vice president, who jointly compose a small army of home-guard corporation counsel. In the list of American immortals found in "Who's Who," 1916–17, page 1531, is a eulogy of "Lydecker" written by Lydecker. He says he is "a Democrat," therefore a follower of Menken, but a hidden mystery is there revealed.

"Twenty-eight tons" of league literature and boiler plate carried free by the press of the country contain fulsome eulogies, pictures, and propaganda, with "Col." Lydecker, a fierce, military-looking man, generously occupying the center and all four corners of the boiler plate. So frequently has he been presented as a "kernel" that the close proximity of a nut was certain, but "Who's Who" says that Lydecker is no "colonel" at all. Years ago Lydecker was a major in the New York Militia, but during the Spanish-American War, apparently, he ducked war service and bravely hung close to dear old Broadway until war was over.

Answering Lydecker's malicious personal libel, incidentally I raised a company of ex-National Guardsmen for that same war and tendered it to the governor of Wisconsin for immediate oversea service. After many years' service in the Regular Army and State National Guard, when resigning as judge advocate of Wisconsin later in life, all military titles, including that of colonel, were surrendered. My father served three and a half years to save the Union. My son, still in France with the Thirty-second Division of "Les Terribles," fought at Chateau-Thierry, while Lydecker from his New York office was fixing loyalty tests for the American Congress. [Applause.]

The New York press of November 17, 1918, says "Col. Charles E. Lydecker and his league have seven broad principles which the league has mapped out for itself," the first being "to urge a just and careful peace treaty," and so forth. While framing the greatest treaty of all the ages, President Wilson, Lloyd-George Clemenceau, and all world peace delegates, together with the Senate that confirms treaties, one and all may depend upon Lydecker's aid in avoiding international carelessness for, according to Lydecker's bulletin, he also will "urge a just and careful peace treaty." Thank God for Lydecker—and Charlie Chaplin. [Laughter.]

Lydecker says in "Who's Who" he wrote a "Monograph on Militia," and so got into the "Navy League" before that league was foundered by Secretary Daniels. "Who's Who" also says modestly Lydecker was a "founder of the National Security League." Lydecker, once a "major of militsh," and now colonel of the obscurity league, declared 300 Representatives disloyal, including our colleague, Gen. SHERWOOD; yet SHERWOOD won his shoulder straps fighting his way to the top in 40 battles [applause], while Lydecker apparently ducked one real chance to fight and never had any military title or public office of moment in his life. [Applause.] Now, our imitation "major" crowds President Wilson a close second in space covered in "Who's Who." Like senators of 12 centuries ago, it well may be asked, "Upon what meat doth this our major feed that he has grown so great?" Sir Joseph Porter, of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Pinafore," comes to life in this "You-know-me-Mabel" militia rookie, who "polished up his buttons so care-ful-lie that now he's the ruler of the Nation's loyaltee."

Wearing a gobbler strut and borrowed peacock feathers, this rare bird wrote impertinently to Speaker CLARK he would fly to Washington when needed. By all means have Lydecker brought along together with his frayed militia feathers and frumpery, but any investigation that fails to include the real actors now behind the scenes will be the play of Hamlet with the Dane and ghost left out.

It is not my purpose to discuss different agents of the "league," some of whom are caustic writers; but two or three are noted whose pictures generally grace "28 tons of boiler plate" printed "in 1,400 papers" throughout the country. Among these Claude Van Tyne is a conspicuous member. A corporation cook of canned patriotism, Claude Van Tyne is the Dick Deadeye of this Pinafore crew.

Van Tyne, director of the Security League's "educational bureau," gave to the press a scurrilous attack on the Committee on Public Information, charging that its chairman heartily recommended a book about the war. Van Tyne's poisonous inquiry followed, "Is he a safe man to occupy the position he does so potent for the good or ill of our cause?" Creel's answer to Lydecker, of September 30, 1918, declares Van Tyne's attack is "dishonest and indecent." I hold no brief for Mr. Creel, but Congress is interested in Van Tyne, whose league protects "our cause" against a disloyal Congress and against other disloyal public officials.

An editorial from The Nation thus sizes him up:

> As for Prof. Van Tyne, what is to be thought of a scholar who not only aids and abets the cowardly attack but allows himself to garble and misquote printed statements upon which the attack is based?

Claude Van Tyne in a half column of "Who's Who" gives a thrilling account of several exciting bicycle and canoe trips he has survived, and also says he once wrote a book entitled "The Loyalists of the American Revolution." Therein he claims the Tories of the Revolution were real "loyalists," just as his associated Wall Street Tories now claim to be the real loyalists.

I quote briefly from his book:

> The banishment or death of these conservative and respectable Americans (Tories) is a tragedy but rarely paralleled in the history of the world; * * * driven into exile or deprived of the political and social influence because of an unremitting intolerance. * * *

Many Tories loved America with a sincerity not surpassed by the most high-minded Whigs. Though posterity has not awarded them the name, it may wisely concede to them the character of the "patriot." The "tragedy" of the Tories, "unremitting intolerance" of Washington, Adams, and other patriots against Van Tyne's Tory "patriots" of 1776 excites his criticism.

Claude Van Tyne writes of John Adams, one of the pillars of the Revolution:

> We see the folly of John Adams's theory of the creation of the Loyalist Party. Had Adams spoken * * * he would have shown a better grasp on the true state of affairs.

These are gems from Van Tyne. In Webster's wonderful eulogy on John Adams's influence on the Republic, America's leading statesman summed it up with Websterian power and force: "Adams spoke onward, right onward." Thomas Jefferson declared John Adams was our "Colossus both of thought and expression." Yet Van Tyne grasps where he says the giant Adams failed. Colossal egotism, thou art indeed Tyney. This modest Security League Solomon easily disposes of Gen. Charles Lee thus:

> Charles Lee, who at this time posed before the credulous colonists as a military genius and whose sententious piety glowed most brightly when his zeal was most hypocritical.

Mr. Speaker, great men with direct knowledge and pigmies without may differ in estimates, as shown by George Washington's letter of that period, which says regarding Lee:

> He is the first in military knowledge and experience we have in the whole Army. He is zealously attached to the cause. * * * I congratulate my countrymen on his appointment.

Claude's own book on Tory "loyalists" again says: "Every attempt to enforce an unpopular law or any real or rumored approach of the British forces was enough to make every secret Tory alert and eager to overthrow his Whig oppressors. The latter were only too well aware of the unstable nature of their tyrannical power." Many similar extracts evidence the trend of mind of this Security League's colossal egotist. The American people have not forgotten the sacrifice of our forefathers and do not accept Van Tyne's opinion regarding John Adams's "lack of grasp" or of "credulous colonists," including Washington, or the "sententious piety" and "hyprocritical zeal" of Gen. Charles Lee, whatever his shortcomings, or of the "tyrannical power" of Washington, Henry, and other "Whig oppressors" of that day. However, it remained for Van Tyne to discover Tories were the real "patriots," occupying positions "so potent" for good or ill of our "cause."

Another Security League "educational director" and corporation cook of canned patriotism is Buttercup R. McNutt McElroy, whose name parted in the middle and position as bumboat woman of this modern Pinafore crew will not be challenged. R. McNutt is a strange composite of Don Quixote and the windmill. On April 6, 1918, he was sent out as a missionary by this Security League corporation of New York to the wilderness of Wisconsin in a desperate effort to save the old Badger State from wandering Indian and German tribes.

McNutt talked in Madison to university students, and then he returned to New York City, where he immediately hunted up a newspaper reporter, true to league instincts, and gave his impressions of the wild West. He said, back in New York, that while orating in Madison he was received with inattention, and so he "deliberately insulted them and called them a bunch of damned traitors." This is McNutt's statement—in New York. Fortunately no one in Madison heard McNutt, whose name explains matters, otherwise he would have been ducked in the lake on April 6 by rain-soaked students, who are no respecters of persons when "deliberately insulted."

Mr. Speaker, the Wisconsin University, second to none in learning or patriotism in the country [applause], sent to France over 1,500 students, in addition to several thousand alumni, fighting for our flag. Wisconsin has had 115,000 men in military service and furnished three regiments of the Thirty-second Division that won the title of "Les Terribles" from the French for their bravery in battle. [Applause.] These are the people McNutt insulted when he reached a safe distance. According to his extravagant eulogy of himself, in "Who's Who," McNutt was once in a training camp at Plattsburg, but never got nearer than 3,000 miles of the French battle line. [Applause.] Like all other "league" patriots, he stayed by his "security" fireside. [Laughter.]

Returning to the Madison incident, the undisputed facts, supported by statements of many reputable men sitting on the same platform, show that on April 6, 1918, several hundred cold, rain-soaked students were kept for over an hour while patriot McNutt read a long, tedious, sophomoric effort.

His talk passed without incident. Not until he reached a New York reporter, over 1,000 miles away, did he "deliberately insult" his audience or call the students a "bunch of damned traitors" for their lack of appreciation. A statement was prepared on behalf of the university by Chief Justice Winslow, a jurist of high standing in the country; President Charles R. Van Hise, one of America's leading educators; and Dean Birge, all joining in a report, submitted with a large volume of testimony, setting forth substantially that Robert McNutt McElroy first committed an asinine act in saying to a New York reporter that he "deliberately insulted" an audience he was permitted to address; second, he deliberately falsified the facts according to hundreds of people present; and, third, he maliciously refused to correct his false statements which were later approved by the libellous New York "security" league. Nothing fixes dishonest and unpardonable methods more than a statement issued by its officers based on McNutt's unsupported word that they indorsed McNutt's report "without qualification" and as "absolutely exact."

Lieut. Litchfield West, executive secretary of the Pinafore crew outfit, is an old salt, according to "Whos Who," belonging to several Washington golf clubs before he struck a patriotic job in New York. [Laughter.] His military title was gained on the staff of a Washington paper and his record as a conspicuous Washington lobbyist merits special investigation when the small fry of this $1,200,000 annual expense crew is probed. I wish I could repeat what has been told me within the hour on this floor about this man. I can not state it here, but if it is true it ought to stamp him forever as a man of more than doubtful reputation. Lloyd Taylor, another "chairman," wrote every individual Member November 28, several days ago, demanding "views at the present time" on compulsory military training. Lloyd and Claude and McNutt and Orth and the major are keeping strict tab on the American Congress. Who foots their bills, and why?

Charles D. Orth, "chairman of the congressional committee," is a commission man and "importer," the nearest to a military commission he has come, and while a handler of cold-storage goods and director in oil corporations with foreign connections, Orth was selected to send insolent letters to Congressmen. Orth greased the way for a "loyal Congress," commanded the American Congress to report to him within 10 days as to its individual qualifications for Congress and its opinions and aspirations, under threatened penalty of league condemnations and of "widespread publicity." Members of Congress are curious to see this pompous oil peddler at close range. [Laughter.] Other patriots appear on the security league executive staff whose innumerable corporate connections are certain to be kept in mind when fixing standards of "loyalty."

From blue-sky land companies to Skyland Sox, incorporated; from alkali and apollinaris water corporations to sugar beets and copper and cotton oil that are listed among war profiteers; from rosin and oil to western chemical, western power, and waterproofing corporations; from directorships on a score of railways, United States steel, and insurance corporations to real and on-paper mining companies in this and other countries; all these will be fruitful subjects for a probe when the home guard of the security league, incorporated, answers roll call.

Brief illustrations noted indicate the league's bombast and cowardly innuendo when the false libellous "chart" on the American Congress was given to the press.

So, too, Van Tyne rushed to the newspapers with his false screed on Creel. Again, McElroy hotfooted to the newspapers with his false and wicked libel on the University of Wisconsin, and in like manner Lydecker first gave to the press his open letter addressed to Speaker CLARK. Childlike he petulently and maliciously said I was "a pacifist or worse." Anyone who resents the cowardly, underhanded attacks of these men, whether made on Congress or upon individuals, is a target for poisoned arrows and branded by this vicious group of irresponsibles as disloyal.

Mr. Speaker, my own record of military and patriotic service is not now important, and yet may not suffer by comparison with any of the blustering bunch of league egotists, but it is the "league" and not Congress that now requires the probe. Its operations and excuse for existence will be of interest to the public that for many weeks has been surfeited with "28 tons" of bombastic boiler-plate "literature." "Lectures, boiler plate, and loyalty" are its watchwords. Not one-tenth of 1 per cent of all our millions of soldiers in France or on the seas or in American camps, or of the citizenship of the country generally, ever heard of a security league corporation lecturer or waded through a paragraph of its 28 tons of boiler-plate literature "printed in 1,400 papers." While recognized influences have helped chrystallize public sentiment in the country, patriotism and sacrifice, individual and national, are inherent in our people, who courageously but silently serve, leaving extravagant flag waving and canned loyalty essays to such leagues. Of insignificant value, as a promoter of patriotism, no organization in the country has given more distinct aid and comfort to the enemy than this New York corporation, which has published to the world the infamous charge that the American Congress is disloyal. Prating of patriotism, the corporation furnished to the country a striking evidence of irresponsible abuse of public men and of disloyalty to a common Government in which all live and serve.

In a remarkable pamphlet from the pen of a remarkably frank man of nation-wide note, Congress is advised that in America we have "our military imperialists, our banking imperialists, our political imperialists, our munition-making imperialists, our nationalist imperialists, our security leagues and Navy leagues, just like Germany's; and all of them have this in common: From the war they desire results quite other than those sought by the people who did the fighting."

Congress is entitled to know what interests and what individuals stand behind these men, what real purpose is covered up by over $1,000,000 in annual expenditures and 28 tons of boiler-plate patriotic camouflage, and what punishment can be awarded public-character assassins, who more than all other agencies in the country combined have sought to foment distrust, discord, and division among our people and to excite the suspicion of the world against our public officials. The country asks for the facts and, so far as lies in its power, Congress should furnish them.

I quote from a letter dated New York, October 12, 1918, from a business man of that city, whose grasp of public questions and keen observations of men and conditions greatly impressed me upon our first meeting in New Orleans, and thereafter in this city and elsewhere. He travels every year throughout the country, from New York to San Francisco, and covers nearly every State in his travels. A letter from his business office on "Wall Street," within the shadow of the Subtreasury Building, of less than 30 days ago, reads: "Your last resolution has surely stirred up the country. * * * In my wide travels throughout the United States I have met men in the smokers, lobbies, and diners of the so-called 'Security League.' Without exception I have found them undemocratic, always fearing the 'masses,' and afraid of 'popular rule.' Whenever I met one of these gentlemen I was reminded of Russian 'chinoviks' and Prussian Junker. Without exception they were narrow-minded and, furthermore, they never impressed me with sincerity. This 'disloyalty' issue of theirs already has its reaction. The American plain people are wise to them. I spoke to farmers from your own State, as well as those from Utah, Nebraska, Dakotas, Iowa, Illinois, and New York. I spoke to workingmen all over the country. The general impression is gathered that this loyalty and patiotism issue is terribly abused for selfish reasons, and the suspicion falls heavier on the accuser than on the accused."

Even some business men on Wall Street are growing "wise" to these self-annointed patriots.

A letter received from a soldier at the front dated November 1 says:

> The National Security League and similar leagues are not receiving much attention from the boys that are lying up here a couple of miles in the shell holes hoping to God the next "one" isn't a direct hit. They want this war over, and they are watching the men that are supporting them and getting the food up to the line and getting their full allotment of cartridges. The superpatriots and grand-stand artists aren't heard of much.

Mr. Speaker, it can not fairly be charged I have personal grievance against this league, except in common with my colleagues, who would draw the fangs of a venomous snake that strikes without warning. Although its poison was spread through my district in advance and alienated some friends, I defeated the only "loyalist" candidate by nearly two to one in the primary, and in the recent election my majority of over 15,000 votes out of 19,000 votes cast was the highest ever given in that district. [Applause.] This verdict was rendered by a constituency whose patriotism and intelligence is unimpeachable, whose boys at Chateau-Thierry, after losing 60 per cent of their effectives in killed, wounded, or missing, won their battle against the defeated shock troops of the Kaiser. [Applause.] I am proud of the confidence of that people, and now that the purpose of investigation can not be charged to efforts to influence the election, now when the House can probe deliberately, let this "league" make good before the country.

What more need be offered in support of an investigation than facts I have presented to you, showing a small coterie of unscrupulous men, acting under a libel-proof corporate name, have challenged the patriotism of hundreds of Representatives and of 47 States. Giving dishonest, widespread publicity to "wrong votes" on war and against preparedness, their query sent into congressional districts of those marked for sacrifice was "what are you going to do about it?" This challenge of the patriotism of the people was expected to and did influence tens of thousands, who did not question false "acid tests" offered by a "security league," and when followed by flamboyant announcements that a campaign would be waged for a "loyal Congress" the disloyalty charge was widely accepted by many men. Capitalized by ambitious candidates, political opportunists, and personal enemies, these infamous charges resulted in bitter campaigns and defeats of high-minded, patriotic Representatives in close districts, who are branded for life as disloyal men.

Heretofore I offered a resolution proposing an investigation be held by the Judiciary Committee. Because of the liberty-loan campaign and following general election I was advised not to press the investigation. For that reason no hearings have been asked nor held and no steps taken other than data collected, which will be presented to the proper committee. On advice of different Members and without questioning the earnest efforts of a regular committee it has been urged that a small committee, composed of Members appointed by the Speaker selected for this special work, would be able to give time and investigation to charges submitted, not practicable with a large committee having other responsible and regular duties. Committee quorums and direct procedure might best be served by a small special committee, and for that reason I have offered a more comprehensive resolution of investigation to include the "Security League" and other so-called patriotic organizations that were active in the recent congressional campaign. To that end I have asked for a special committee of nine members, possessed with powers similar to those held by the committee that probed the St. Louis riots, to be appointed by the Speaker, to conduct this investigation. I trust the House will support the resolution.

Questions of power of the House to act and of precedents have been considered. It may be said that if no precedents are had whereby to investigate wholesale charges of disloyalty lodged against a majority of the Members of this House by an organization that has libeled prominent men and public officials from one end of the country to the other, a slandering corporation compared to which Lawson is a child in arms, then it is time that the House makes precedents or that we abdicate the positions we now hold.

Charges of disloyalty at any time can not be lightly made, and when made in trying times of war such charges must be investigated, and if proven untrue the libeler should be punished. Unless we vote to purge ourselves of the charge by bringing before us those who have laid the indictment we may well be subject to public distrust. Are we untrue to our oaths of office and to our country? A slanderous New York corporation has so charged. Are we cringing politicians, influenced solely by policy? These contemptible lip loyalists so advertise us to the country. Are we afraid to face political black hands who traduce us? Judged by unchallenged misrepresentation they must so believe. Are we prepared to meet our accusers and test out the testers? Our action here will be the answer.

Collateral questions regarding the composition of the "league," its purposes and activities, how financed, and whether, as alleged, it is a $1,200,000 annual bombastic self-exploitation organization are all unimportant matters compared with the one specific charge that a majority of Congress is disloyal. No precedent need be asked in compelling the presence of witnesses who have so declared. In asking for an investigation I make the following specific charges, which, I believe, can be substantiated by a thorough probe.

Mr. Speaker, I charge that the National Security League, a New York corporation, as organized, is used as a convenient cloak for lawless libelous attacks on public men without resulting financial responsibility or accountability, and that the name of "National Security" was selected in an effort to invite public confidence in the propaganda and activities of its organizers.

That such corporation alleges it is organized "with 38 State branches," a "membership of over 100,000, including 200 branches in cities and towns," a speakers' bureau "of 1,000 volunteer speakers cooperating with Government authorities in Washington," a weekly "editorial news and cartoon publicity service supplied to 1,400 newspapers," has supplied "nearly 30,000,000 pieces" of "war literature," and "has placed 250,000 war maps in schoolrooms throughout the country," that this league has supplied "over 28 tons of literature and boiler-plate matter," and has an admitted annual expense bill of $1,200,000 per annum, all of which is evidence of the unrestrained power and influence possessed by the corporation's officers and agents.

That said corporation selected eight votes or measures before Congress, only one since the declaration of war, and caused to be published broadcast throughout the country a false statement that such votes were a test of loyalty and Americanism.

That said corporation, while falsely representing the character and effect of votes, urged the people of the country to defeat approximately 300 Representatives in Congress, whom it has politically blacklisted as disloyal, and that pursuant to such recommendation its agents went into different districts during the 1918 campaign to aid in the defeat of proscribed Congressmen.

That said corporation further caused to be published throughout the country a list of 47 States, which were declared to be wrong, un-American, or disloyal, according to percentages based upon the votes in Congress cast by Representatives from such States.

That in its June, 1918, bulletin said corporation published a statement saying—

> The league is planning nonpartisan cooperation with the Democratic and Republican congressional campaign pledged to support the war. * * * The entire force of the league's 281 branches and its membership of over 100,000 patriotic American citizens will be thrown into this campaign for the election of a loyal Congress.

That said corporation, by the use of money, letters, telegrams, pamphlets, literature, its officers and agents, directly and through associated leagues, entered into the political campaigns of 1918 and actively attempted to defeat for renomination and election Representatives in Congress who had been publicly branded by it as disloyal and un-American.

That no statement of contributions or expenditures used in efforts to defeat Representatives has been filed with the Clerk of the House by said corporation, under the Federal corrupt-practices act, and no statement of activities of the league or of its contributions or expenditures for political purposes have been filed under laws of the several States.

That, according to "league literature," Elihu Root, Alton Parker, and Charles Lydecker, attorneys at law, are officers of said corporation and as such officers took active part in the congressional campaigns of 1918 for the election of a so-called "loyal Congress" and as such officers are directly responsible for the publication and circulation of charges made against the loyalty of Representatives in Congress and for efforts to secure the defeat of such Representatives.

That R. McNutt McElroy, an officer of said corporation, falsely and maliciously through the public press libeled the students of the University of Wisconsin, many of whom have died in France for their country, and in his unprecedented action, after a full presentation of the falsity of his charges, he was upheld and indorsed by the corporation's officers and agents.

That said corporation has published throughout the country that the league has secured and placed on file the names of 44 Senators and 174 Representatives in Congress who are pledged to vote for compulsory military training irrespective of treaty provisions hereafter to be signed by the belligerent nations, and that such pledges have been secured without regard to terms of peace in this war, possibility of a league of nations to enforce permanent peace, or international agreement to disarm.

That the said corporation has published many tons of propaganda demanding compulsory military training and during time of war inspired unwarranted criticism of the President, Secretary of War, and of Congress by such campaign and propaganda.

On information received from brother Representatives in Congress it is charged, on information and belief, that a thorough investigation of public and secret records of the National Security League, a New York corporation, will disclose large contributions for its support made by business interests known as war profiteers and intended for the publication of propaganda and political legislative business advancement of such interests.

That said league is a powerful irresponsible New York corporation, arrogant and un-American in its methods, a slanderous libel on the patriotism of our public officials and of our citizenship, inimical to the best interests of the country, and has done more to create public discord and unwarranted suspicions and a division among a patriotic people than any other single agency.

I submitted the resolution this morning and urged its early adoption by the House. [Prolonged applause.]

This is the resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of nine Members be appointed by the Speaker of the House to investigate and make report as to the officers, membership, financial support, expenditures, general character, activities, and purpose of the National Security League, a corporation of New York, and of any other political or patriotic organization, league, or association that purports to be organized or engaged in or has been directly or indirectly engaged in the nomination, election, or defeat of Representatives in Congress during the year 1918.

Said committee shall also inquire and ascertain whether charges affecting the loyalty of Representatives in Congress have been made by such leagues or associations, and if so by whom and upon what information, testimony, or record, and whether such charges are true; and shall ascertain whether such league, leagues, or other organizations that may be investigated have complied with the provisions of State and Federal laws in the filing of expense accounts; and shall inquire and ascertain such other matters concerning said league or leagues or other organizations which, in the judgment of such committee, may be found proper; and for the purposes aforesaid the agents, clerks, or employees of such committee shall have power to demand and receive for inspection and use of the committee all books, records, documents, and papers whatsoever belonging to such league or the individual members thereof concerning its activities, and the committee shall have power to send for papers, books, records, and documents and to enforce their appearance and administer oaths.

Said committee is also hereby authorized and empowered to require witnesses to answer all questions propounded by any member thereof touching the investigation ordered and require any witnesses called before it to testify fully as to any information in his possession, whether in the nature of hearsay testimony or otherwise, at such places as it may decide upon, as well as in the city of Washington, pursuant to the purpose of this resolution, and shall have the power to report at any time.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I will if I have time; certainly.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I wanted to ask the gentleman a question. There were eight so-called acid tests, I believe, applied by the Security League. In these tests, I think, if I correctly recall them—I read them at the time—one was on the Kahn amendment on the volunteer system. They put that test, but they failed to give the vote of those men who, while they voted for the volunteer system, afterwards voted for the selective-draft bill on its final passage.

Mr. FREAR. Yes. It was a dishonest and miserable misrepresentation of the record by the Security League, as the new Senator from Mississippi well implies. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. And again, as I recall, one of the acid tests was the Cooper amendment to the armed-neutrality bill, but they made no mention of the fact that those men who may have voted for the Cooper amendment to the armed-neutrality bill, but who finally, on the passage of the armed-neutrality bill, voted for it.

Mr. FREAR. That is equally true, and the gentleman has fastened it down completely. That was another deliberate falsification of the record by the Security League, as will be demonstrated on an investigation.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. And again, if I recall, there was an amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] which they made one of the acid tests——

Mr. FREAR. There was an amendment offered by Mr. KAHN in the House and by Mr. BRANDEGEE in the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. But Mr. BROWNING offered a motion to recommit the naval bill that had been formulated by the Naval Committee, and which carried an increased annual appropriation of upward of $100,000,000. They applied that as a test, while nothing was said at all as to the vote on the final passage of the naval bill.

Mr. FREAR. That is an illustration of the disreputable methods of this Security League. The gentleman is again correct about that vote.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. And again, I understand that there was another acid test applied, where an amendment was offered by Mr. KAHN to the military bill to increase the Regular Army, I believe, from 178,000 to 250,000. They applied that as the acid test, but said nothing about those who had supported an amendment in the same bill that brought into the Federal Army the National Guard, comprising approximately 425,000 men.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman is right about that. And beyond that fact it was stated upon the floor by members of the Military Committee that the passage of the Kahn amendment would hopelessly confuse at that time the military program which had the approval of the President, and also would promote sergeants, as I now remember, to pay beyond that received by commissioned officers.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly. I am glad to yield to our distinguished party leader.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will excuse me, because I want to get a little information about matters which I ordinarily would know about.

Mr. FREAR. I shall gladly give it if able to do so.

Mr. MANN. Owing to the advice of my physicians last summer I took no part in the campaign and did not keep track of what was going on during that time. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this league endeavored to influence the nomination of Members of Congress?

Mr. FREAR. It did; directly, in many cases.

Mr. MANN. And the election of Members of Congress in various States of the Union?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; it expressly so declares in its literature. Directly, in many cases. I have stated this before on the floor, and I have evidence of their efforts which will be offered to the committee that investigates.

Mr. MANN. I ask the gentleman for information.

Mr. FREAR. Yes; most assuredly this league did seek to influence in many cases.

Mr. MANN. In the different States?

Mr. FREAR. Oh, yes, indeed, in many States I could name.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that the Security League had not made any return of its expenses or receipts under the so-called publicity act.

Mr. FREAR. That is my understanding, unless it has made the return very recently.

Mr. MANN. I have always made the return myself in my own case, and I do not remember now that I ever had occasion to look up the penal section of that law, but I assume that there is some penalty.

Mr. CALDWELL. One thousand dollars fine and a year in jail.

Mr. FREAR. There certainly is a strong moral obligation to report, whether legally imposed or not.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman is correct in what he said, I should think that the Department of Justice might very well investigate not only the corporation but the officers of the corporation.

Mr. FREAR. There is a moral obligation, no matter what the exact legal obligation is, a matter of possible interpretation, when a league of this kind, with $1,200,000 in its hands, circulates these anonymous and dishonest statements, attacking the loyalty of this Congress.

Mr. MANN. Because if a political party having a regular organization selected in a public manner is required to make these returns, an anonymous body created by itself certainly ought to be compelled to live up to the law. [Applause.]

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. McCULLOCH. In the analysis that the gentleman expects to place in the RECORD with regard to the eight test votes, has the gentleman pointed out the fact that in referring to the votes cast the league in its propaganda and literature which it sent out absolutely misstated what was before the House?

Mr. FREAR. I stated that particularly, and called attention to the gentleman from Ohio's remarks made on the floor several weeks ago, which were very pertinent, when he analyzed and exposed the malicious misrepresentation of the record by this league.

Mr. McCULLOCH. For instance, I should like to ask him if he called attention to this particular thing: In referring to the Kahn amendment, which was an amendment to eliminate the volunteer feature of the conscription bill as reported——

Mr. FREAR. Yes; that was the effect.

Mr. McCULLOCH. This league in referring to the Kahn amendment said:

> This amendment provided for the raising by conscription of the necessary army to give effect to the declaration of war.

The amendment was nothing of the kind.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman is absolutely correct. The statement of the league, in my judgment, was willfully false.

Mr. McCULLOCH. It was an amendment to eliminate the volunteer feature.

Mr. FREAR. That was all. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Therefore the league has misstated the facts and has held up to public contempt the Members of this body upon a misstatement of the facts.

Mr. FREAR. Absolutely so; and I am asking for an investigation to find out who is responsible, and the purpose behind the league. Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested to me by several Members during this discussion that I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What is the resolution?

Mr. FREAR. I will ask to have it read.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let it be reported, and let us see what it is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, is it to be reported or read for information?

Mr. FREAR. First read for information.

The SPEAKER. Read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 464.

Resolved, That a committee of nine members be appointed by the Speaker of the House to investigate and make report as to the officers, membership, financial support, expenditures, general character, activities, and purpose of the National Security League, a corporation of New York, and of any other (political) or patriotic organization, league, or association that purports to be organized or engaged in or has been directly or indirectly engaged in the nomination, election, or defeat of Representatives in Congress during the year 1918.

Said committee shall also inquire and ascertain whether charges affecting the loyalty of Representatives in Congress have been made by such leagues or associations, and if so, by whom and upon what information, testimony, or record, and whether such charges are true; and shall ascertain whether such league, leagues, or other organizations that may be investigated have complied with the provisions of State and Federal laws in the filing of expense accounts; and shall inquire and ascertain such other matters concerning said league or leagues or other organizations which in the judgment of such committee may be found proper, and for the purposes aforesaid the agents, clerks, or employees of such committee shall have power to demand and receive for inspection and use of the committee all books, records, documents, and papers whatsoever belonging to such league or the individual members thereof concerning its activities; and the committee shall have power to send for papers, books, records, and documents, and to enforce their appearance and administer oaths.

Said committee is also hereby authorized and empowered to require witnesses to answer all questions propounded by any member thereof touching the investigation ordered and require any witness called before it to testify fully as to any information in his possession, whether in the nature of hearsay testimony or otherwise, relative to the inquiry ordered; and the committee may hold hearings at such places as it may decide upon, as well as in the city of Washington, pursuant to the purpose of this resolution, and shall have the power to report at any time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. KITCHIN. I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to withhold that and bring it up to-morrow.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let it go to the committee.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. There will be no objection to it.

Mr. FREAR. I am perfectly willing, Mr. Speaker, and I withdraw my request. It was offered, as stated, at the suggestion of several Members during the last few moments. I would prefer to have it regularly acted upon by a committee.

I append two brief statements, in which a personal request was first based.

Letter from the Security League of New York given to the press, as follows:

SEPTEMBER 23, 1918.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Representative FREAR, of Wisconsin, on the floor of the House has to-day asked for an investigation of the National Security League by the House Judiciary Committee. We welcome any investigation deemed proper by your honorable body and will gladly supply the fullest information.

As to the source of the demand for this investigation, it is only necessary at the present moment for me to call attention to the fact that Mr. FREAR voted against the declaration of war, against the Kahn amendment, which made possible the selective-draft system, and for the McLemore and Cooper amendments, which, it is now admitted, voiced the essence of pacificism, if nothing worse.

Yours, very truly,

CHARLES E. LYDECKER, President.

Also a brief editorial:

[Extract from New York Tribune of Oct. 1, 1918.]

It is true that the National Security League has been denounced in Congress. This was done by Representative FREAR, of Wisconsin, whom the league opposed for reelection because he had voted against the declaration of war and against the Kahn amendment, which was essential to the selective draft, and for the notorious McLemore and Cooper amendments, thereby failing to stand the "acid test" stipulated for by President Wilson. So much for FREAR.

Hearst attacks the National Security League for a similar reason, namely, that it has denounced his disloyalty.

I also append a brief analysis of the eight test votes submitted by the Security League, in which Representative MCCULLOCH on October 2 last gives a complete demonstration of the falsity and misrepresentations contained in the league's public chart. This chart was given to the press and used as a basis for the charge of disloyalty against Representatives, which I have discussed:

I shall analyze the eight propositions in the order in which they are mentioned in the circular.

"No. 1. The circular says: 'McLemore resolution, March 7, 1916. This resolution was to the effect that American citizens should forego their natural, legal, and constitutional rights to travel on the high seas.'"

The McLemore resolution came before the House of Representatives about one year and one month before the declaration of war. The circular marks me as voting "wrong" on the McLemore resolution. It does not say what is meant by voting "wrong," but attempts by the language used to leave the inference that I favored the McLemore resolution. The facts are, as I announced at the time, that I would not vote for the McLemore resolution under any circumstances, because I was opposed to its provisions. I did not vote for it, but I voted not to table it, in order that a full and complete discussion of the subject of warning American citizens of the dangers of traveling on armed vessels of belligerent countries should have been had, as the President requested. Had the McLemore resolution not been tabled, and had it come to a direct vote without amendment, I would have voted against it, and I so stated at the time, as the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will show, and I so stated in every speech I made during my last campaign.

"No. 2. The circular says: 'Kahn amendment to the Hay Army bill, March 23, 1916. This amendment sought to increase the Regular Army to 178,000 or more, nearly approaching the recommendation of the General Staff of the Army.'"

No such amendment was ever introduced by Mr. KAHN or anyone else. The circular marks me as voting "wrong" on such an amendment, which it says was considered over a year before the declaration of war. The Committee on Military Affairs reported the Hay Army bill unanimously from the committee, which provided for increasing the Regular Army to 140,000, as recommended by the Secretary of War. During the consideration of the bill Mr. KAHN, of California, a Republican, offered an amendment increasing the number to 220,000, which amendment was defeated by a vote of 82 to 155, by tellers, in the committee. Before voting on the bill, Mr. MANN, of Illinois, asked unanimous consent for a record vote on the Kahn amendment, which is no doubt the amendment the circular is trying to refer to, and the vote was taken on the amendment, and it was defeated by 213 to 191.

The circular evidently approves voting for this amendment. Such a vote was an antiadministration vote, as the administration approved the bill as reported and was opposed to the amendment, which, it was argued on the floor, would hopelessly complicate the Army bill. I voted against the amendment, as it was my policy to support the committee, which had investigated the requirements and which was backed by the War Department and its experts.

"No. 3. The circular says I voted 'wrong' on the 'Brandegee amendment to the Hay-Chamberlain Army bill, April 18, 1916. This amendment provided for an Army of 250,000 as against 140,000.'"

When the Hay Army bill was returned to the House from the Senate on May 8, 1916, almost a year before the declaration of war, objection was made to this increase because it was contrary to the recommendation of the War Department and the Committee on Military Affairs of the House. It was claimed that its language would provide for a large number of very high promotions for Army officers. The amendment was defeated by a vote of 222 to 141. I voted against the amendment. The circular approves voting for the amendment, which was voting against the administration and the recommendation of the War Department.

"No. 4. The circular says I voted 'wrong' on 'section 56,' providing for a volunteer reserve army wholly under Federal control, April 18, 1916."

This amendment was considered almost a year before the declaration of war, and was an amendment intended to destroy the National Guard and State Militia by substituting a volunteer army, composed of not to exceed 600 officers and men from each congressional district. I was appealed to by the National Guard of the State of Ohio to oppose this amendment. It was contended that our State had spent millions of dollars developing the National Guard in Ohio. A large proportion of the National Guard of the United States, including the Ohio National Guard, was on the Mexican border at the time this amendment was considered. It was claimed that if this amendment, known as section 56, were adopted, it would complicate the military situation. The President vigorously opposed this amendment, and it was known as an antiadministration amendment. I voted against the amendment, and the circular approves a vote for the amendment.

The amendment was defeated by a vote of 251 to 109 on May 8, 1916 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 7691). The National Guards of the various States have furnished close to 500,000 men in the present crisis, trained and experienced, and after the splendid record of the Rainbow Division, the soldiers of which represent almost every State in the Union and which is on the battle front at this very hour rendering conspicuous service, of which the whole Nation is proud, I do not believe that anyone need apologize for opposing the destruction of the National Guard.

"No. 5. The circular says I voted 'wrong' on a 'motion to recommit the naval appropriation bill June 2, 1916.' This motion was designed to instruct an increase in the Navy beyond what was provided in the original bill."

The naval appropriation bill of 1916 was taken up by the House on May 27, 1916, almost a year before the declaration of war (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 8783), providing for increased appropriations for the Navy. The bill was reported with the approval of the Navy Department after extended investigations by the Committee on Naval Affairs. This committee had spent weeks on the bill with the assistance of the Navy officers and experts. The House, in Committee of the Whole, had been considering the bill for days, and just as the House was ready to vote on its final passage Mr. BROWNING, of New Jersey, moved to recommit the bill with instructions to increase the amounts of the various items approximately $56,000,000, which meant asking the House to accept without consideration or explanation changes in the bill, the effect of which would have been to destroy the work of the committee and the Navy Department. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs vigorously opposed the motion. It was distinctly an antiadministration motion, and so understood by everybody, and it was defeated. I voted against it. The circular approves voting for it.

"No. 6. The circular says I voted 'wrong' on the 'Cooper amendment, March 1, 1917.' This amendment was designed to prohibit to American ships their legal right to carry arms or ammunition in their cargoes."

The statements in the circular as to the provisions of the Cooper amendment are entirely contrary to the facts. The Cooper amendment was as follows:

"Provided, That no ship of American registry, armed in the manner aforesaid, shall carry cargo consisting in whole or in part of arms or ammunition consigned to a belligerent country or to a citizen thereof."

This amendment was offered to the armed-neutrality bill, for which bill I voted. The armed-neutrality bill was intended, according to statements made by the President, as the last step toward keeping this country out of war. The Cooper amendment proposed that we should not arm ships to carry munitions of war to belligerent countries. He argued that to arm ships for such a purpose was an act of war. Mr. FLOOD, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, while the Cooper amendment was being considered, said:

"I do not believe that the President intends to convoy merchant vessels that carry munitions of war or to supply guns and ammunition to such vessels. Good international lawyers contend that to convoy a vessel loaded with arms and ammunition is an unlawful act; that it is an act of war."

Under the circumstances I voted for the amendment. The amendment was defeated, and I then voted for the armed-neutrality bill.

"No. 7. The circular says I voted 'right' on the declaration of war against Germany, April 5, 1917."

I voted for the declaration of war.

No. 8. The circular says I voted "wrong" on the "Kahn amendment to the conscription act, April 23, 1917. This provided for the raising by conscription of the necessary army to give effect to the declaration of war."

There never was a more false or misleading statement made than this statement, attempting to define the terms of the Kahn amendment. The Kahn amendment proposed to strike out the provisions of the conscription bill authorizing the President to call for volunteers. The conscription bill, reported by the Military Affairs Committee of the House, and which was being considered in Committee of the Whole, when the Kahn amendment was proposed, authorized the raising of an army both by conscription and by volunteers. Had the volunteer provisions not been struck out of the bill we still would have had conscription and the President would have had the additional authority to call for volunteers, which the War Department did in fact, under the law. There was no proposal to my knowledge at any time made to eliminate the conscription provisions of the bill. This vicious circular would have people believe that those who voted not to strike out the volunteer provisions of the bill were against the necessary army "to give effect to the declaration of war." In other words, everyone who had an idea contrary to that of the National Security League is disloyal.

I voted for conscription, and I also voted for the provision authorizing Roosevelt to organize and utilize the hundreds of thousands of volunteers he had already enrolled who were ready for active service. I believed that the President should have the power to call for volunteers if he saw fit to do so, and I therefore voted against the Kahn amendment, which took that power from him; but it is interesting to note that in spite of the hostility of the National Security League to volunteers that volunteers have been accepted by the War Department right along in all of the various branches of the service, and that there are now in the service thousands upon thousands of men who were volunteers and accepted as such.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I ask to what committee the resolution put by the gentleman from Wisconsin was referred?

The SPEAKER. The Chair directed the gentleman to put the resolution in the basket, and the Chair will refer it to the Committee on Rules.

PROPERTY OF UNITED STATES IN CHARGE OF THE DOORKEEPER (H. DOC. NO. 1532).

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter transmitting an inventory of all property belonging to the United States in charge of the Doorkeeper of the House, which was ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Accounts.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WINGO, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for the day, on account of illness.

SANATORIUM FOR DISCHARGED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12917.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 12917.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. FOSTER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last evening general debate had been concluded. The Clerk will now read the bill for amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I observe that this bill is not divided into sections. Will it be considered by paragraphs, or what will be the method in considering it?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I was going to ask unanimous consent that the bill be read and considered by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered by paragraphs and not by sections. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States is authorized to acquire by gift a tract of land suitable for the purpose, of not less than 1,000 acres, in or adjacent to the city of Dawson Springs, Hopkins County, Ky., or in Caldwell County, Ky., adjacent to the city of Dawson Springs, Ky., or in Christian County, Ky., adjacent to the city of Dawson Springs, Ky., for the purpose of erecting a sanatorium for the treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States and persons who are now or hereafter may be beneficiaries of the United States Public Health Service; such sanatorium to be of a capacity of not less than 500 beds. There is hereby appropriated the sum of $1,500,000, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of such sanatorium, including the necessary buildings with their appropriate mechanical equipment and approach work and roads leading thereto, for the accommodation of patients, officers, nurses, attendants, storage, laundries, and live stock, with all necessary furniture and equipment for the above; and an additional sum of $350,000 is hereby appropriated for operation and maintenance of the same for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The following committee amendments were read:

Amendment No. 1: In lines 4 and 5, on page 2, strike out the words "there is hereby appropriated."

Amendment No. 2: In line 4, on page 2, capitalize the letter "t" in the word "the."

Amendment No. 3: In the lines 5 and 6, on page 2, strike out the words "out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated" and insert in lieu thereof the words "is hereby authorized."

Amendment No. 4: In line 13, on page 2, strike out the word "appropriated" and insert the word "authorized."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I have an amendment to strike out the enacting clause of this bill. Does not that have precedence over any other amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. That is true. The Chair is under the impression that the rule is—though the Chair has not looked it up lately—where a bill is being considered by special rule under an order of the House a motion to strike out the enacting clause is not in order. The Chair would be glad to hear any argument or suggestion on the question.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I think it is in order at any time. However, I have not the precedents, but will look them up. My idea in proposing the matter at this time was that if such a motion was proper, and if carried, there would be no necessity in discussing further amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman would be correct about that.

Mr. MANN. The Chair will recollect that the rule does not provide for the consideration of this bill. The rule only provides that it shall be in order to move in the House to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill. Of course, that places the bill in the position that any bill would occupy where a motion was made at any time for its consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule provides for the consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, but the House must first decide to go into the Committee of the Whole by vote.

Mr. MANN. The rule as printed was amended, and I do not know whether the Chair has the rule as adopted. The rule printed was not the rule adopted by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule provides for the consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule for amendment. The Chair finds in volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, page 219, section 3215, this statement:

A special order providing that a bill should be open to amendments in Committee of the Whole was held to prevent a motion to strike out the enacting clause. On March 26, 1897, the House was in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union considering the bill (H. R. 379) to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States, under the terms of a special order, which provided:

That general debate shall continue on said bill during each day until 5 o'clock p. m., and at evening sessions, to which a recess shall be taken, to be held from 8 o'clock till 11 o'clock p. m., until and including Thursday, the 25th of March, unless sooner concluded; that from the conclusion of general debate until the 31st day of March there shall be debate upon the said bill by paragraphs, and during this time the bill shall be open to amendment as each paragraph is read, but committee amendments to any part of the bill shall be in order at any time.

Before the Clerk began the reading of the bill Mr. Samuel W. T. Lanham, of Texas, proposed to make the motion to strike out the enacting words of the bill, as provided in Rule XXIII, section 7:

After debate the Chairman held:

The Chair would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the reading of the special order under which we are operating. * * * The Chair will hold that under the provisions of the special rule under which the committee is now operating the motion of the gentleman is not now in order.

That was the ruling of the Chairman at that time under the special rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think that ruling was absolutely correct but that is not the situation before the committee now.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course——

Mr. MANN. There was a rule specifically providing for a certain length of time for amendments. Now, this rule we are operating under provided first that it should be in order to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. That motion has been carried, and we are in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The rule provides that at the conclusion of such general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. As a matter of fact, the motion referred to by the Chair under the ruling cited apparently was made before the bill was read for amendment. Now the bill is being read for amendment, and the motion to strike out the enacting clause is an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair ask the gentleman this question? This rule provides that this bill shall be considered under the five-minute rule for amendment. Now, if the motion which the gentleman from Illinois proposes to make, to strike out the enacting clause, should prevail, would that give an opportunity to consider the bill under the five-minute rule as completely as intended by the rule adopted by the House? The Chair would like to have the judgment of the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. It does not say anything about that. It is being considered for amendment, and if the committee should agree to that amendment of course that ends it so far as the committee is concerned at the time, unless the House should decide on its being reported back to the House that it would not agree to the amendment; but the bill is now being read for amendment under the rule, and the motion to strike out the enacting clause is an amendment like any other amendment, except it takes precedence over other amendments.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, with respect to the point of order that has been raised I would like to say a few words. It is perfectly competent for a special rule to provide for the abrogation or modification of any existing rule or rules with respect to consideration of a bill in the Committee of the Whole. Hence with respect to the consideration of any particular bill, if it is insisted that the rule abrogates any existing rule, we should look to the rule itself to ascertain whether any such provision of abrogation is found therein. The effect of the rule in this case is simply to expedite consideration by the Committee of the Whole of this particular bill. The rule merely operates to put this bill into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of consideration under the five-minute rule. The motion to strike out the enacting clause, so far as its parliamentary effect is concerned, is action. It is a preferential amendment. If this committee chooses to vote favorably upon the motion, then that is action on the part of the committee. It is for the committee to say whether it will take that action. The bill is before us. It has been expedited in its passage to the Committee of the Whole by the force of the rule, and yet the rule does not by its terms abrogate any existing rule for the consideration of this particular bill in the Committee of the Whole. It is still subject to the general rules provided for the consideration of a measure of this character in the Committee of the Whole. Hence it seems to me that the motion of the gentleman is in order whatever may be the action by the committee on the motion itself. The precedent cited by the Chair construed the rule affecting the consideration of that particular bill. That precedent does not establish any general rule. It merely holds that under the rule in that case the motion to strike out the enacting clause was not in order at the time it was sought to be made. The Chair distinctly declined to say that the motion would not be in order at a later stage of the consideration of the bill before the committee.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I was recognized for an amendment which I desired to have read. I had the floor and submitted an amendment to the Clerk, and he was just about to read the amendment before the question was raised. I ask to have that amendment read.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is wrong—the parliamentary inquiry is still pending.

Mr. DOWELL. But the gentleman can not take me off my feet to make that inquiry. I was in the act of presenting the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks really the gentleman offered a preferential amendment, and, of course, on a parliamentary inquiry he would be entitled to have the amendment considered first.

Mr. MANN. He would not be entitled unless he got recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The Chair thinks that he did recognize the gentleman from Iowa, and the gentleman from Illinois rose to a parliamentary inquiry, and the Chair submitted this statement as found in Hinds' Precedents, and the Chair thinks, in fairness to the gentleman——

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Illinois desire to offer his amendment?

Mr. MANN. I did not offer an amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, the motion to strike out the enacting clause, Mr. Chairman, is in order. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it in order while I have the floor to present an amendment?

Mr. MANN. It has not been presented.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then who threw the monkey wrench into the machinery?

Mr. MANN. That is the question.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the parliamentary inquiry has been answered, and I now offer a preferential amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman has not the floor yet.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I understood I had.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offered a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have my amendment read, and then I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DOWELL. Page 1, line 3, strike out all of lines 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and line 9 down to and including the word "Kentucky," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the United States is authorized to acquire by purchase or otherwise a tract of land to be selected by the Secretary of the Treasury in either of the States of Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, or Texas suitable."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. What is the point of order?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The bill provides they shall acquire by gift. The amendment provides the Government shall acquire by purchase.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is not good for the reason that the amendment provides that it may be acquired by purchase or otherwise. It may be by gift and it may be by purchase.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. And that is not the question that is to be determined here. It is a question here of establishing a sanatorium. That is the question. And the amendment merely relates to the location of a sanatorium. That is all that the amendment undertakes to change.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that the House is powerless to strike out in line 1 the word "gift" and insert the word "purchase"?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; I think so.

Mr. WALSH. I notice that the gentleman has difficulty in keeping his countenance straight in answering that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think any germane amendment is in order.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman think that purchase is not germane to the question involved in this paragraph?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think when the Government can acquire a thing by gift it ought to take it in that way.

Mr. DOWELL. It is not a question of order?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Now, I want to talk seriously for a moment to the gentleman. The only purpose that the Committee on Rules had in presenting this rule was to make this bill in order under the general rules of the House. The bill provides that the Government may acquire by gift. I do not think that a proposition to purchase or to authorize the Government to purchase is germane to a bill that provides for the acquirement by gift. Have I answered the gentleman or not?

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DOWELL. You have not answered the question, because this bill has for its purpose the securing of land for the purpose of establishing a sanatorium. That is the purpose of the bill. It has no other and different purpose. Now, the Government can establish whatever method it sees fit to secure the land wherever it may secure it and in a different place from that suggested in the bill if it so desires.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, surely; any place can be named.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman contend that because a proposition is presented that a tract of land may be secured by gift that the Congress would be powerless to amend the bill and provide for the purchase of a tract of land in another place for the purpose for which the bill was introduced?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. In addition to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], I would like to suggest that this amendment comes within a number of precedents to the effect that when there is a single distinct proposition before the House, that proposition may not be amended by the addition of other distinct propositions.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] stated that this was a proposition to acquire property by gift or purchase. I do not find that language in the bill. This is a proposition to acquire certain indicated property by gift.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman see that this does not add to but simply enlarges the field for selection?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But you can not enlarge the field for selection without making an addition to the bill. That is what I am objecting to.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman would think about it seriously, he would not make that contention.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have been thinking about it seriously. This is a proposition to which you can not add other distinct propositions. It is competent to amend this proposition, but not in the fashion proposed. When it is proposed to bring in additional States, you are providing for additional action to that proposed in the bill. You are not modifying the distinct proposition submitted. You are adding other and alternative propositions. It is the same thing as if it was proposed by amendment to acquire by gift another site in another State.

Mr. Chairman, this is a matter that has been ruled upon so often that I do not think it calls for elaborate discussion. I simply desire to call the attention of the Chair to a time when he was presiding, and when he announced precisely the proposition that one individual proposition may not be amended by another individual proposition even though the two belong to the same class.

Various other chairmen have announced the same principle on other occasions. It is not a question of the amendments that we would like to propose to this bill, but it is a question of what under the precedents we can do in a parliamentary way. The inquiry whether the rule precludes consideration of the proposed amendment is the only inquiry that we need pursue. We have established the boundaries on our power of action in the House, and in the Committee of the Whole by the rules, and the decisions expounding those rules. There are many precedents in point. It has been held that to a bill proposing to admit one Territory into the Union, an amendment admitting another Territory is not germane. To a bill for the relief of one individual, an amendment proposing similar relief for another is not in order. To a resolution providing a special order for one bill, an amendment to include another is not in order. To a provision for the extermination of the boll weevil, an amendment including the gypsy moth was excluded on a point of order. To a provision for a clerk for one committee, an amendment for a clerk to another committee was held out of order. To a bill prohibiting transportation of messages relating to dealing in cotton futures, an amendment adding wheat, corn, and so forth was held out of order. See as to above Manual of Rules, section 778. There are many other and more recent decisions all to the same effect, and grounded upon the principle that the amendments proposed are not germane. A specific subject may not be amended by a provision general in its nature, even when of the class of the specific subject. See section 778, (b).

This is a proposition to acquire for the Government "by gift a tract of land suitable for the purpose of not less than 1,000 acres in or adjacent to the city of Dawson Springs, Hopkins County, Ky., or in Caldwell County, Ky., adjacent to the city of Dawson Springs, Ky., or in Christian County, Ky., adjacent to the city of Dawson Springs, for the purpose of erecting a sanatorium." It is a distinct proposition to acquire by gift certain territory adjacent to Dawson Springs, in the State of Kentucky. Whenever you propose to bring in Virginia, or Iowa, or any other of the States, what is that but an effort to bring in a new, distinct proposition?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman from Virginia was a Member of the House at the time a ruling was made to the effect that a bill providing for an interoceanic canal by one route could be amended by providing a different route.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am familiar with that ruling, and I have used that precedent time and time again.

Mr. WALSH. Is not that the ruling here in point?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No. That was a case of stress in which a ruling was made for a particular situation, and contrary to the precedents. It has never been followed, so far as I am aware. I have cited that precedent on this floor time and time again, in the effort to liberalize the rule of the precedents on the matter of germaneness. In my contention that this rule should be enlarged and liberalized I have used the very precedent that the gentleman has cited, but the Chair has uniformly disregarded it. There is a great body of precedents confirming and supporting the position that I have taken. Some of these have been cited. I will refer to another, namely, the ruling as to germaneness made in connection with a bill relating to grains that was reported by the committee of which the gentleman from South Carolina is chairman. In that ruling the Chair cited a great body of precedents, and did not regard the precedent cited by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not want to discuss the parliamentary phases of the question, but I would like to ask the question: Suppose we passed this bill and the people of this territory adjacent to the city of Dawson Springs, Ky., failed to make the gift to the Government of the United States——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Failed to make the gift of the land necessary on which to construct the sanatorium. Then could the Government of the United States proceed with the building of this sanatorium?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Decidedly it could not.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it not a fact that the whole sum and substance of this bill is wrapped up in the one proposition of enacting legislation in order to enable the Government of the United States to accept a gift?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. To do that specific thing, as a condition precedent to building a sanatorium. If we can not secure that land by gift, then the whole effort to establish this particular enterprise fails. That is all there is to this proposition.

As I have said, this is purely a question of parliamentary law and of precedent, a question of keeping our precedents straight. The principle controlling the decision of the point of order raised against this amendment is supported by a great volume of uniform and accordant decisions.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, it may not be deemed desirable to call the Chair's attention to the proposition just discussed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], but if the Chair will refer to section 778 of the Manual he will find there a precedent on this proposition:

One individual proposition may not be amended by another individual proposition, even though the two belong to the same class."

It seems to me right there is probably a precedent clearly in point.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, of course the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is in error in contending that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa is attempting to substitute another individual proposition, and if he will read the amendment offered he will see that there is no such intention or purpose in the gentleman's amendment. This amendment does not add anything, but it simply provides that instead of taking one site at Dawson Springs, in Kentucky, this one sanatorium shall be established at one point in one of four different States.

Now, it seems to me that the decision in Hinds' Precedents, section 5900, is on all fours with the situation presented here. In that case, as the gentleman from Virginia admitted, it was held that to a bill to provide for a canal by one route an amendment could be offered to construct a canal at another place by another route. He states that that precedent has not been followed. He will find that it has been followed in several different instances, and in one instance in particular, where a bill was offered to amend a general law in specific instances, and an amendment proposing to repeal the whole law was held germane.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the gentleman think this is somewhat analogous to a situation that might arise if we had under consideration a public-building bill, and moved to amend the bill by providing for another public building in some other State?

Mr. WALSH. Oh, of course not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The same principle would apply.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no.

Mr. DOWELL. I can answer the gentleman's question. You can amend the bill by providing that the building shall be erected in another place than that designated in the bill. This is not for the establishment of another sanatorium, but it is for the establishment of the sanatorium provided for in this bill at a different place than that designated in the bill, and that is all there is to this amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. An entirely different location, in a different State?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. But that was the canal proposition. It was the same canal in a different location, and that was held to be germane. I imagine the same water would pass through it. I simply want to direct the attention of the House to the fact that that ruling has been followed several times; and knowing the disposition of the present occupant of the chair, I know that he will not be at all bewildered by an argument that the precedent has been established but has not been followed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] is almost always logical and accurate, but in this particular case it would seem to me that he is neither. He has talked about the precedents that he could produce. Unfortunately he has not produced any. I should be glad to have him furnish them, and I have the book of rules in my hand. If he cites any of them, I am quite confident I can show a clear and plain distinction, which will be recognized even by my friend. Having started out wrong, I hope he will not finish wrong. The logic of his argument would be that if it had been provided in the first place in this bill that the building was to be made of brick and somebody should offer an amendment that it should be made of wood instead, or that it should be made of brick and wood, the amendment would not be germane, and therefore would be inadmissible. That would be exactly where we would come out. I know of no such precedent. I looked over these precedents some time ago. I have not had an opportunity to look over them recently, but if there is anything that would exclude the amendment of my colleague I do not know what it is, and I do not think there is any such precedent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to state that this bill now before the committee provides for the building of a sanatorium at Dawson Springs, Ky., and the land can only be secured at Dawson Springs, Ky., by gift. There is no provision in the bill saying that this land can be purchased; so that if the people of Dawson Springs, Ky., should conclude after the bill has become a law that they would not give the Government this land, then, in the opinion of the Chair, it would not be possible to establish the sanatorium there without further legislation, because it says that it must be acquired by gift and that the land can only be secured in that way. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa says that this sanatorium may be established in either the State of Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, or Texas by purchase or otherwise. The Chair begs to state that so far as he has been able to ascertain from a brief time spent in looking up the precedents this is the only one where it was proposed to offer an amendment to give away public land, and the Chair at that time held that that was not in order. That decision is found in Volume V of Hinds' Precedents, paragraph 5877. The point of order was made on January 20, 1859, by Mr. Cobb, of Alabama, and the decision was rendered by Speaker Orr, of South Carolina.

The Chair believes that the citation made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] in reference to an amendment adding another territory to a bill providing for one territory was not in order applies only indirectly to this amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Chair permit an inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Would the Chair hold that because this provides for acquiring title by gift a motion to strike out the first paragraph would not be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would not hold that a motion to strike out the first paragraph would not be in order. The Chair begs to state that, however foolish it may seem, before a bill is completed it is not out of order to move to strike out anything in the bill. The Chair believes, in the view he takes of this amendment, that if this bill should pass with this amendment in it the Secretary of the Treasury might go to either one of these States and if he was unable to secure the land otherwise than by purchase the sanatorium would not be built, and then that would compel the purchase of ground upon which to place the sanatorium, so that it would change the entire scope of the bill as now proposed, which is specifically to provide for the establishment of the sanatorium by gift. Under these circumstances, the Chair thinks that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa would not be in order.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer another amendment.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. DOWELL. I move to strike out all after the word "acres," in line 5, on page 1, down to and including the word "Kentucky," in line 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DOWELL moves to amend by striking out, on page 1, line 5, all after the word "acres" down to and including the word "Kentucky," in line 9.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. As I understand it, the amendment which I have mentioned, and which has been discussed—to strike out the enacting clause—will be in order at any time while the bill is open to amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it is in order at any time up to the time the bill is completed.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, strike out all of lines 5, 6, 7, and 8 and the first three words of line 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "100,000 acres of the national forest bordering on Tuck Lake and Cass Lake and Lake Winnibegoshish, in Minnesota, or so much thereof as may be required, be set aside.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the substitute.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I want my amendment read as I desire to have it. I have put it in writing and I have sent it to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DOWELL——

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I object to changing the amendment after I have offered a substitute to it.

The Clerk continued the reading:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "acres," strike out all of the words following down to and including the word "Kentucky," line 9, and insert in lieu thereof the words "in either of the States of Colorado, New Mexico, Nevada, or Texas."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment.

Mr. STEENERSON. I make the point of order that he can not amend it after he has offered it and after I have offered a substitute. It is now a new proposition.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have the floor, and I make a point of order against that amendment which has just been ruled out by the Chair. It is substantially the same amendment. I made the point of order, the Chair heard arguments on it, and held that it was not in order.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. For a question.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman from Iowa is trying to amend his amendment to which I have offered a substitute.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, is there a point of order made against the substitute offered by the gentleman from Minnesota?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an additional amendment. The gentleman from Iowa offered his amendment verbally from the floor, and then the gentleman from Minnesota asked recognition and offered a substitute for that amendment. Then the gentleman from Iowa having reduced his amendment to writing sent it to the Clerk's desk, which modifies his former amendment. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Minnesota objected to the modification of the amendment, and the Chair holds that the amendment can not be modified except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. What right has the gentleman from Iowa to recall his amendment and change it?

The CHAIRMAN. He has not the right without unanimous consent.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota has already objected.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am raising the question now that the gentleman can not modify his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And I make the point of order further against the amendment as originally offered and also against the substitute.

Mr. STEENERSON. On the question of the substitute I desire to address the Chair.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I understand this to be the practice of the House: The gentleman from Iowa offered an amendment. A point of order, I believe, was made on that amendment and sustained. Then the Chair recognized the gentleman from Iowa to offer another amendment. The gentleman from Iowa was entitled to the floor. The gentleman from Minnesota comes in and offers a substitute for that amendment. It seems to me that the gentleman from Iowa is entitled to the floor until he addresses the committee on his substitute. I am not aware that he yielded the floor, and therefore the gentleman from Minnesota is not in order.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman from Iowa abandoned his first proposition and offered a new one.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but in offering the new proposition he is entitled to withdraw the first.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not without unanimous consent.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; he can withdraw it without unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to state, as he understands it, that the gentleman from Iowa was recognized to offer an amendment, which he did verbally. Then the gentleman from Minnesota gained the floor and offered a substitute. A point of order was made against both the amendment and the substitute. The gentleman from Iowa had taken his seat and then again sought recognition for the purpose of modifying his amendment, and sent a written amendment to the Clerk's desk, which was read, and the gentleman from Minnesota objected to the modification. So, under the rule, the gentleman from Iowa was not permitted to modify his amendment, as that can not be done except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CANNON. If the Chair will indulge me, the first amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, being subject to a point of order, disappeared.

Mr. STEENERSON. It was subject to a point of order and was struck out.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which the gentleman from Iowa offered in the first instance was not subject to a point of order, because it was a simple motion to strike out. The gentleman from Iowa then sought to modify this amendment, and to this action on his part, objection was made. Hence so far as the gentleman from Iowa is concerned, all that is before the House is his motion to strike out, which is in order, and upon which a vote can be taken in due course. The gentleman from Minnesota then obtained the floor and offered a substitute for the motion to strike out.

Mr. STEENERSON. And it includes the striking out and insertion of new matter.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. To this substitute of the gentleman from Minnesota the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] made a point of order. The matter immediately in hand, therefore, is the determination by the Chair of the point of order raised by the gentleman from Florida.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is correct about that.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to address the Chair on the subject of the point of order. The gentleman from Florida has made a point of order against the substitute. I do not believe he knows what the substitute is. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa simply struck out certain lines describing the location of this proposed hospital and my substitute strikes out the same lines and inserts in lieu of the matter stricken out another location in the State of Minnesota. Now, that is clearly a motion to strike out and insert, and the proposition already decided does not come in here at all, because the United States Government has 300,000 acres in this location that it owns in its own right and could put up any hospital there that it wants to and use as much land there as it wants to without gift or purchase. Now that, I contend, is a motion to strike out and insert and clearly in order upon this bill and I would like to discuss it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the motion was to strike out. You can not offer a motion to strike out and insert for a motion to strike out. You can vote on the motion to strike out, and then offer a motion to strike out and insert, but you can not substitute a motion to strike out and insert for a motion to strike out.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to move to strike out the last word and get five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. LAZARO. While the Chair is making up his mind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to make up his mind. The Chair begs to state that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota proposes to strike out all of lines 5, 6, 7, and 8 and the first three words of line 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "One hundred thousand acres of the national forest bordering on Tuck Lake and Cass Lake and Lake Winnibigoshish, in Minnesota, or so much thereof as may be required, be set aside." Now, the Chair thinks this bill provides for the location of a sanatorium at Dawson Springs. That is a particular point. The Chair thinks it would be in order to change the location of the same sanatorium and believes that this provides only for a change of location, not for the buying of any land but that it shall be established where the Government buys no land, and the Chair begs to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in the case of the canal decision, which has been quoted here many times, that it was in order to change the location of a canal, and therefore believes this amendment is in order and overrules the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, one thing, if the Chair will permit me. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this amendment proposes, if the Chair will read it carefully, to strike out all of lines 5, 6, 7, 8, and to and including the word "Kentucky," in line 9. Now, at the end of line 4 is the word "one." Then it proposes to insert "100,000 acres," which would make it read "one 100,000 acres," and which is a proposition to have the Government buy land already owned by the Government. It is an absolutely impossible amendment, and that was my idea in making the point of order.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is going to the merits of the proposition.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. This is an amendment which is utterly impossible, not only not germane, but impossible of performance, because there can not be——

Mr. STEENERSON. But the Chair has ruled upon the question.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. But the Chair permitted me to say a word. I would not have undertaken to do it without the Chair's consent. I asked the permission of the Chair, and I want to say that was the main purpose I had in making the point of order, that it was an amendment which was perfectly impossible. Why, it is an amendment, Mr. Chairman, that would be absolutely impossible of performance, because it provides that the Government of the United States, if it should be written into this act, should acquire by gift a tract of land suitable for the purpose of not less than one 100,000 acres of land, whatever that means, already belonging to the Government. Now, how can the Government acquire by gift property which it already owns? The thing would be nonsensical, would be utterly impossible to carry out. For that reason I had insisted, Mr. Chairman, and do insist that the amendment is absolutely out of order upon the ground, if for nothing else——

Mr. STEENERSON. But that goes to the merits of the proposition, the correctness of the language.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It does not.

Mr. STEENERSON. I desire to say in answer to the gentleman from Florida——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order and overrules the point of order.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, the report of this bill sets out that the main reason for its location in Kentucky at this place is that there is a mineral spring there and that that water is very similar to that water at Carlsbad, in Bohemia; that it is good for Bright's disease and disease of the kidneys, and that is the main reason. Here is what they said at the hearings:

Mr. CANTRILL. In further answer to the question asked by the chairman of the committee as to why this sanatorium is recommended to be located at Dawson Springs, as I understand it, it is not only because of the location of the land and the fact that it is suitable for buildings and all that sort of thing but because of the peculiar curative powers of the springs located there. That is one of the main reasons, is it not?

Dr. BANKS. That is one of them; yes, sir.

Mr. BURNETT. For diseases other than tuberculosis?

Dr. BANKS. Yes.

Mr. CANTRILL. Which would make this particular place appeal to your department above other locations?

Dr. BANKS. We have a great many of the organic diseases like Bright's disease coming out of the Army, and rheumatic affections, and the water there at Dawson Springs, Ky., is practically the same as the Carlsbad water in Bohemia, is very efficacious as a steady drink in cases of that kind.

* * * * * * *

Mr. CANTRILL. And the chemical composition of this water at Dawson Springs is identical with the Carlsbad Springs, as I understand it?

Dr. BANKS. Yes; practically so.

Mr. MANSFIELD. It is not warm water, is it?

Dr. BANKS. No; it is not specially warm. It is drinkable or potable water, and very pleasant, so far as the temperature goes.

Now, everybody knows the location of this place that is familiar with geography. It is only about 600 or 700 feet above sea level, not very far distant from the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, and it is subject to malaria and miasma. True, it is on a ridge, but swamps and sloughs are all around it. It is a wild country. Now, who in the world ever thought that soldiers acquire kidney trouble while in the service of the Government? Kidney trouble is a sickness that comes from sedentary habits. It might affect swivel-chair officers here in Washington, but it would not affect the men in the trenches. The soldiers who have been in active service and contracted tuberculosis are not troubled with kidney disease.

And the fact that Carlsbad is a place resorted to by the aristocracy of Europe when they drink too much or eat too much or take too little exercise affords no argument for our putting a sanatorium for tuberculosis at this point. The State of Minnesota has the most salubrious climate in the world. You can see in the Statistical Abstract that the death rate in Minnesota is lower, both in the rural population and urban population, than in any other place. The death rate in 1912 in Kentucky was 17 to the thousand, where it was only 9 or 10 in Minnesota.

The State of Minnesota, in cooperation with the university and the health service of the State, has located a tuberculosis hospital near Leech Lake, at Walker. It has been in operation for several years. It was selected and located there under the advice of the State board of health and the medical staff of the university, including Drs. Mayo, of Rochester. It was selected because it is the best place in the world for the treatment of that disease. There is a pine forest all around for miles and miles. The United States Government owns there 300,000 acres of national forest. It has not parted with the title. The tuberculosis sanatorium of the State of Minnesota is right near the Minnesota National Forest. This large tract of land, covered with virgin pine, is located right near Cass Lake, Lake Winnibigoshish, and Leech Lake. The patients, if they recover, will have an opportunity to work in that region. We propose to build roads there, and we have to use men there as forest rangers in the great pine forests of that region.

I believe you can not find a better place in the United States or on the American continent for a tuberculosis hospital than right there in that region where Minnesota has placed this one. They have 200 patients and in the neighborhood of 800 acres of land. If you provide for as many patients as proposed in this bill, in the neighborhood of 15,000 or 20,000 acres will be needed. You want land enough where they can enjoy the advantages of a park. The proposed location is right in the vicinity of the celebrated State park of Minnesota, at the headwaters of the Mississippi, including Lake Itasca. The Government has the land for the site, the location is the best, and we could not do better than adopt the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I am willing that there may be a little hilarity now and then, but I sincerely hope gentlemen will not vote for an amendment of this character. It will simply mean to destroy the bill. There is absolutely no evidence here that this place has ever been examined with a view to locating a hospital there of this character. There is abundant evidence here by the medical authorities of the Government that this place has been examined—Dawson Springs—and has been determined upon by them as the best location for the character of hospital which they propose to establish.

Now, if gentlemen desire to defeat the bill——

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. For a question only.

Mr. GILLETT. Can the gentleman cite us to any report of the medical board he speaks of that will say that this is the best place?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I can cite the gentleman to the testimony of Col. Banks. It is in the hearings. I cited it yesterday.

Mr. GILLETT. That it is the best place in the country?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The best place they have been able to find, and they have been looking for places all over the country. They visited a number of them, and this was the best they have been able to find for this kind of hospital. That is the testimony in the record, and the gentleman can read it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman point out where there is such testimony? I have not been able to find it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. There is such testimony.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will he point it out?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No. You can find it in the record. But I am not going to have my time taken up——

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I decline to yield.

Mr. MADDEN. It is a matter for information.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I absolutely decline to yield at this time.

Mr. MADDEN. All right.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Now, Mr. Chairman, the importance of this matter was set forth in the letter which I shall ask to have put in later; but I want to call attention to one or two extracts from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. When we called upon him to know something of the urgency of this matter, he said this:

> It is noted that you request information as to the necessity for the early passage of this bill, and you are advised that the facilities furnished by the various marine hospitals for the accommodation of beneficiaries of the Government entitled to treatment therein are very nearly exhausted and very few empty beds are now available for these patients.
> The number of men already discharged from the Army for tuberculosis alone is over 14,000, and the necessity for additional hospital accommodations is therefore evident.

Mr. CANNON. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. September 24, nearly two months and a half ago, and they have been increasing all the time.

Now, I want to appeal to gentlemen on the other side to drop this petty political play. The boys are suffering for lack of hospital accommodations, and I am appealing to you as Representatives upon the floor of the American Congress to play no politics in so sacred a matter as this. Let us pass the bill.

Another bill is coming. If you succeed in striking out Dawson Springs, and if a bill is passed appropriating a few million dollars to build hospitals, as is contemplated, I want to tell you that the department intends, if they get the power, to put this hospital at Dawson Springs; and you will accomplish nothing if you do succeed in striking it out of this particular bill, because if we carry out our policy to appropriate money to build hospitals over the country, as is intended to be done, one of these hospitals, if the medical authorities have anything to do with their location, will be at Dawson Springs, Ky. There is not any question about it; and I beg gentlemen to vote down this amendment and let this bill be passed as it has been reported by the committee.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LAZARO. I have the floor, I think, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this bill.

The purpose of this bill is to provide for the establishment of a sanatorium for the treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes.

Now that the war is over, it is nothing but right that we should bring these boys who have rendered such valuable service to our country back home as soon as possible and take the best care of them until they have had time to readjust themselves to their surroundings. It is certainly our duty to see that those who have contracted disease in the service shall receive the very best medical attention that the country can afford.

We know that the place in which tuberculosis cases can be taken care of in an intelligent way is in a sanatorium. A sanatorium would not only offer a chance of recovery to these victims, but would naturally furnish a place for the observation and study of this dreadful malady, and thereby save thousands of lives annually. It would also be an institution for the education of the people. The knowledge there obtained by the patients would not only be a benefit to themselves and their families, but to all the people.

It is unnecessary for me to take much of your time in picturing the fearful havoc wrought by tuberculosis. The story has been told often before, and to many of us has a personal bearing. It is a satisfaction to know that after many years of indifference the general public is awakening to the right conception of disease and of the great economic importance of intelligent and systematic measures to control it. It is only in the last few years that the methods of transmission have been well understood. Experience proves that upon popular education we must ultimately rely for the prevention and cure of tuberculosis in this country. Of course, the people can be educated to a certain extent by teachers, publications, and exhibitions; but here, as elsewhere, a pound of practice is worth a ton of theory, and it is in the sanatorium only that the theory is applied in practice.

We are confronted with the plain fact that consumption exists in every city and State in America, and in every country and clime, and that it is no respecter of persons, race, age, or class—that none can claim to be immune. It is a merciless destroyer and may invade any home.

When we recall the fact that millions of dollars are appropriated annually for the health of plants and cattle, and very little in proportion for the conservation of human life, we should pause and think. It is only by prevention that consumption can be controlled, and mainly by hygienic measures that it can be cured. We are spending money freely to bring strangers among us; let us spend a little to save our own people.

The private sanatoria now in operation are doing splendid work, but they are costly and the poor can not enter them. Therefore I hope the day will come when all of our poor consumptives will be offered a place where they can be treated intelligently and cured.

Climate is not an essential or even the most important factor in its treatment. Dr. Norman Bridge, an expert of wide experience and observation, once said that he would rather have a patient under proper conditions in a sanatorium in an eastern city than to send him to some better climate to shift for himself.

Fresh air, rest, and nourishing food in abundance are necessary, and the patient must be faithful and regular in all his habits. We all know that it is practically impossible for him to be so outside of a sanatorium. The fight to cure consumption is a long one in which the carelessness of one day may undo all the benefits of care of the preceding 30 days. When you tell a man to do a thing, you are just half done; the next thing is to see that he does it. We must have competent medical supervision, men of force and intelligence, selected not on account of pull, but strictly on merit.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I wish to repeat that I shall vote for this bill. I think it could be improved upon if we had the time. For instance, my idea is that the location of a sanatorium of this character could be left to a commission composed of experts on tuberculosis to study and report on the construction, cost, equipment, maintenance, and location of a sanatorium before the money is spent. I do not think it is exactly right to locate the sanatorium in the bill carrying the appropriation merely because some community in a Member's district offers to donate the ground. Our Government is not a pauper, and should establish a sanatorium of this kind on the very best ground that can be selected by experts, even if we have to buy this ground. Being that we are pressed for time and that something must be done for these tubercular patients right away, and being that this bill is a step in the right direction, I hope that it will be passed. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON and Mr. WALSH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I would like to find out if we can not get some agreement as to time. Of course, under the rule I understand there is one five minutes allotted to a side, but I do not want to be at all unfair. I want to see if we can not reach some agreement for debate on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman proposes a time agreement in the discussion of this substitute?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. On this amendment.

Mr. CANNON. This is the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON]?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. How much time would the gentleman like to be heard on it?

Mr. CANNON. I will be entirely frank with the gentleman. I would like to have 15 minutes, but not all upon this amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like to make some agreement by which we can dispose of the bill.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Florida yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. The suggestion I intended to make to the gentleman from Florida is that there is a prospective amendment to strike out the enacting clause of the bill. If liberal debate could be had on that amendment, it would probably shut off a good deal of debate on other amendments that would probably be offered. Would the gentleman agree to an hour to a side on the motion to strike out the enacting clause?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would with the understanding that no other amendments will be offered and the vote be taken finally on the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am going to invoke the rule as strongly as I can if we can not get an agreement.

Mr. MONDELL. I have an amendment that I want to offer, but which would be precluded if the amendment is made to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of an agreement, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion there is no necessity for this legislation. I called up the Surgeon General's Office a few minutes ago and was informed that there are to-day in this country 3,410 tubercular soldiers in Government hospitals. There are not to exceed 300 who are not receiving treatment in Government hospitals. The number of tubercular soldiers abroad is estimated at not above 5,000. The Surgeon General's Office proposes to take over Camp Pike, Ark., and turn that into a base hospital for the treatment of tubercular soldier patients. There is nothing to show that the Surgeon General's Office is in favor of this measure, and I desire to call attention to the fact that there are two tuberculosis sanatoriums within 250 miles of the place where it is proposed to locate this sanatorium, namely, Asheville, N. C.

It looks to me as though some one is trying to take home a piece of "pork." This is no time to squander the people's money. We ought to start retrenching at once. We expended, as has been said on the floor of this House, over $50,000,000,000, or, in other words, $50 for every minute since the time of Christ, in the war through which we have just passed, and it is now time that we should pare to the bone.

I contend that the location proposed is not a good one. The altitude is only 600 feet above sea level. It is admitted by the friends of the bill that the sunshine there throughout the entire year is only 70 per cent. Why not locate this sanatorium, if one is needed—and I will not concede that one is needed, because the Surgeon General's Office does not—at a point where the altitude is 5,000 or 6,000 feet, and where they have 90 or 100 per cent of sunshine, and where the afflicted soldiers may live in tents? At this place you must erect expensive barracks. At Fort Bayard, N. Mex., they are treating a good many tubercular soldiers at the present time, and many of them live in tents. Under the plan proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] it will cost $5,000 per bed——

A MEMBER. Three thousand dollars——

Mr. KNUTSON. To take care of tubercular soldiers. If you care for the soldiers in tents, you can do so for about $50 or $75 per bed. Now, we have no right to squander the public money in this way.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Where do you get that information about its costing $5,000 per bed?

Mr. CANNON. I understand it is $3,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is $3,000 per bed. Does the gentleman mean to tell this House that it is going to cost $3,000 per bed to take care of tubercular soldiers where they live in tents?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Are you opposed to spending the money, if necessary?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; but I am opposed to throwing it away. I am in favor of cutting out the "pork."

Mr. KINCHELOE. Then your opinion is not in harmony with the medical opinion of Gen. Blue and Dr. Banks.

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, I have reason to fear that some of these experts were probably appointed for their political affiliations and not on account of their knowledge or experience.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I will say to the gentleman that he is a good Republican.

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, he may be one of those "Progressive" Republicans who vote for Wilson every time he runs. [Laughter.]

Mr. KINCHELOE. The Progressive Republicans were greatly in the majority in 1912.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman contend that there is need for three tuberculosis sanatoriums within a distance of 250 miles?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is the gentleman asking that question of me?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; I am.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The hearings and the testimony show that there are no available hospitals in any part of that country for discharged soldiers of the Army or men of the Navy.

Mr. KNUTSON. Very well. If the gentleman will introduce a bill to amend the law so that we can take care of tubercular soldiers at Asheville, N. C., and in other Government sanatoriums, I will gladly support it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment by way of a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida makes the point of order that debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. WALSH. I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. There have been 20 minutes of debate on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has a right to move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes, Mr. Chairman; but I should like to have a ruling on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's point is correct, but amendments are in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I want to direct the attention of the committee to the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds [Mr. CLARK of Florida] a few moments ago to the effect that Dr. Banks said that this was the best location in the United States——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Massachusetts is not discussing his amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me to complete at least one sentence, he will perhaps see the connection between my motion to strike out the last two words and the pending amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will, if the gentleman will discuss his amendment.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want the Chair to rule on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts will proceed to discuss his amendment.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WALSH. I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts declines to yield, and he can not be taken off his feet.

Mr. WALSH. I call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] stated that Dr. Banks said this was the best location in the United States. What was actually said was as follows:

Dr. BANKS. I consider it a first-class proposition.

Mr. CANTRILL. You consider it a strictly first-class proposition, and the best one that has been presented to your department?

Dr. BANKS. Well, I will not say the best one, because I have only investigated two or three others. We have had other offers from California and northern New York and one from Minnesota.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts will suspend. The gentleman from Florida makes the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing his amendment.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit the Chair——

Mr. DOWELL. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not make a parliamentary inquiry now. The gentleman from Massachusetts has moved to strike out the last two words. Of course, under the rule he must speak to his amendment.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make an inquiry on that one question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not make a parliamentary inquiry now.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order when an amendment is pending to perfect the section.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment already pending.

Mr. WALSH. I offer a substitute to the amendment pending, to strike out the words "Dawson Springs" and insert in place thereof the words "Colorado Springs."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to state that there is a substitute pending.

Mr. CANNON. It is amendable in one degree.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask what the substitute is?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. WALSH. May I ask what that is a substitute to?

The CHAIRMAN. A substitute for the amendment offered to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WALSH. What is the substitute of the gentleman from Minnesota?

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute of the gentleman from Minnesota is to strike out "Dawson Springs" and to provide for the acquiring of land in Minnesota.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the Chair to advise me what are the last two words in the substitute of the gentleman from Minnesota?

The CHAIRMAN. The last two words are "set aside."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, if we are going to take land out in Minnesota I see no reason why it should be set aside. Neither do I think if we should set that aside, or if we should decide not to set it aside, that the land in Dawson Springs is the best site in the country for this particular purpose. I am wondering if the interest of the gentlemen in Dawson Springs who wish to have this sanatorium established there is at all dependent upon the fact that last summer a hotel in or near Dawson Springs, Ky., was burned and partially or completely destroyed. And I am wondering if the setting aside of this tract in Minnesota in place of this site in Dawson Springs, Ky., is at all connected up with the fact that it is rumored that a New York syndicate has been formed for the purpose of establishing at Dawson Springs, Ky., and setting aside and locating there a certain proportion of that land as a site for a hotel where their friends and stockholders and their neighbors and those whom they can induce may be persuaded to visit that hotel and spend some of their money, and if this site at Dawson Springs is set aside for a Government sanatorium they could advertise that fact to the country.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I know the gentleman does not want to make any misstatement.

Mr. WALSH. I certainly do not.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I will say to the gentleman that there has been no hotel at Dawson Springs burned. There is a corporation there that is undertaking to build a fine hotel, but it has nothing on earth to do with this proposition. No corporation has any option on this land to be devoted to Government purposes. Those who propose to give the land are not incorporated. They are doing it individually and separately, and those who own stock in this hotel have no more to do with it than the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. It will be noticed from the phraseology of the bill that Dawson Springs is "some springs." It wanders about the great Blue Grass State of Kentucky, and apparently is adjacent or appurtenant to three counties in that State, namely, Hopkins County, Caldwell County, and Christian County. I am advised that not in the immediate vicinity of Dawson Springs, perhaps, but somewhere in that neighborhood, a hotel was destroyed partly or completely by fire last summer, or within the past 18 months, and that a New York syndicate is to replace that hotel, or rebuild it, or to construct another one to take the place of the one that has been destroyed, within hailing distance of where this sanatorium is to be established. Therefore I think the words "set aside" ought to be taken out of the substitute and we ought to set aside the Dawson Springs site.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, Mr. Chairman; I am willing that my pro forma amendment shall be set aside. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "of," strike out the remaining portion of line 5, all of lines 6, 7, 8, and all of line 9 down to and including the word "Kentucky," and insert in lieu thereof the words "Amarillo, Potter County, Tex., or in Randall County, Tex."

[Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Oh, yes; you gentlemen are in favor of anything that will beat this bill. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment on the ground that there is an amendment as a substitute now pending and on the further ground that it is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the amendment is in order.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that two amendments are already pending—the Dowell amendment and the Steenerson substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to state to the gentleman from Kentucky that under the rules of the House there can be an amendment and a substitute with an amendment to the amendment and amendment to the substitute pending at one time. So the gentleman from Texas offers this amendment to the substitute.

Mr. POWERS. A further parliamentary inquiry. This amendment by way of substitute is merely an amendment, and you can not have more than two amendments pending at the same time.

The CHAIRMAN. The rules provide that you can have an amendment and a substitute to the amendment and then there can be an amendment to the original amendment and an amendment to the substitute all pending at one time. The gentleman from Texas will proceed.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, there has been so much eloquence wasted on the bill that I do not propose to make a long speech, but simply to state a few facts that ought to be considered. I have read thoroughly the report on the bill, and if I gather the import and purpose of the measure, it is to take care of those who have been injured in the military and naval service of the United States. The sole question should be the securing of the best possible location. [Applause.] The northwestern part of Texas is an elevated table-land 3,640 feet high. Here the amendment proposes to locate this institution. There are many tubercular patients and people afflicted with all manner of physical ailments who go to west Texas every year, regardless of hospital locations. The State of Texas has recently located a tuberculosis hospital in western Texas and in the same character and class of country where I am seeking to have this general sanatorium located. Here hundreds are treated every year. The climate is ideal. It is a land of almost cloudless skies, and is a natural climate for the treatment of injuries and diseases covered by this bill. Amarillo is within 200 miles of the geographical center of the United States. It has three trunk lines of railway and the finest water you can find anywhere in the world. Good health is catching instead of disease. In fact, Potter County, Tex., is the only county with 20,000 people in the United States that has no cemetery. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Do the inhabitants decline to be buried there or do they go away before they die [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES. But very few die, and we take those into an adjoining county.

Mr. BURNETT. Does anybody live there?

Mr. JONES. There are 20,000 people living there according to the census. It is a good town, centrally located. No finer climate can be found anywhere in the country from the standpoint of health. I think the Lord must have created the rest of the world and then created the Panhandle of Texas; and Amarillo is its metropolis.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Are the people of that locality willing to contribute the land for this institution?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I can assure the House that if you will locate the institution there we can secure a gift of anywhere from 1 to 3,000 acres.

Mr. KNUTSON. What is the altitude of that place?

Mr. JONES. From 3,000 to 4,000 feet. The particular place has an elevation of 3,600 feet.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is high enough. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES. It is table-land, with a magnificent canyon running right along through it. For some years there has been a bill pending to make a national park out of this canyon. I will assure Congress that I can secure by telegraphic communication before the sun goes down an offer of 1,000 acres or more as a gift to the United States for the location of this institution. [Applause.]

Therefore I submit to you, if you are going to locate a hospital for the treatment of the wounded soldiers and sailors of the United States it should be located at the best place for the treatment of these diseases that you intend to treat. The right of the soldier is a paramount issue and should be the paramount purpose. I submit that inasmuch as the State of Texas has seen fit to locate a great institution of this character in that section of the country, and inasmuch as at the particular place where we offer to locate the institution there are hundreds and hundreds of patients from all over the country who go even though there is no hospital, and some of them live in tents and sleep on cots, that it is a better place to locate this institution than the other places proposed, and that this institution should not be located or operated from the standpoint of anything except the interests of those who have been fighting the Nation's battles.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. What is the average temperature there in winter?

Mr. JONES. I do not know that I can give the gentleman that information, but the Weather Bureau can give it to you. It is not exceedingly cold; it is an elevated table-land and has sunshine nearly all winter. The temperature is perhaps colder than other sections of Texas.

Mr. REAVIS. Does it get so cold that the patients would not be able to sleep in tents?

Mr. JONES. No; if you were in Amarillo to-day, I could show you numbers of tents occupied by tubercular patients who sleep there all the winter on cots. It is an ideal location for the treatment of this kind of patients, and in the hospital which the State of Texas has located less than 200 miles from Amarillo, in the same character of country, there are many patients who sleep in screened porches or in tents during the winter. This is not a party question; it is a unanimous report of the committee, both Democratic and Republican. There should be a hospital, and it should be properly located. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman—— [Cries of "Vote!"] Just hold your horses and be patient; you may not vote before midnight. Mr. Chairman, no medical authority, so far as this House knows, has investigated this place in Texas. We have the statement of the gentleman who represents that district that it is a good place for a tuberculosis hospital. I am not advised that the gentleman is a physician or a surgeon and not advised that he is a specialist in tubercular matters, not advised that he knows any more about it than I do or any other average Member of this House.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; I will not yield now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, so far as this place in Kentucky is concerned, the Public Health Service, I want to state again, and the Medical Department of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance have examined places in Minnesota, in California, in the State of New York, and they have selected this as the place where this hospital ought to be located. Now, unless Congress can rely upon the testimony of men of that character in settling these questions, which are technical or professional in their nature, I can not understand what kind of testimony we would act upon. I have brought this in——

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman take the word of the State medical officer, of the State medical association, if I show him the letter?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman did not say anything about that, and I would rather take the testimony of the Public Health Service of the United States—yes; I will take that. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, I brought this bill in here in the utmost of good faith, backed by the unanimous committee, Republicans and Democrats, backed by the unanimous vote of that committee to get a rule to consider it, so urgent was it deemed by the committee, and when these boys are suffering for this treatment we are met by a jocular treatment of it. It almost reminds me of the time when they say "Nero fiddled while Rome burned." The soldiers of this country are suffering, and men upon the floor of the American Congress laugh when it is proposed in real seriousness to provide something in order that they may be taken care of. Mr. Chairman, I demand a vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered to the substitute.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, has debate been exhausted? I would like to debate it if debate has not been exhausted. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will take my time under the rule. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. CLARK of Florida and Mr. BURNETT) there were—ayes 75, noes 64.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided, and the tellers (Mr. CLARK of Florida and Mr. JONES) reported that there were—ayes 80, noes 71.

So the amendment to the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, is the amendment carried?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is carried.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. What about?

Mr. GILLETT. On what subject?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. On the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have my amendment submitted and read for the information of the committee and then I have no objection——

The CHAIRMAN. After this request is granted.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee upon what topic he wants to address the committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Upon the bill.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not object. The gentleman wants to talk on the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the substitute as amended.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 75, noes 78.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. STEENERSON and Mr. CLARK of Florida) reported there were—ayes 91, noes 84.

So the substitute as amended was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa as amended by the substitute.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, may we have that stated again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. ROBBINS. All right.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. DOWELL and Mr. CLARK of Florida) reported that there were—ayes 95, noes 91.

So the amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a motion to strike out all of this paragraph after the enacting clause. I do not desire to move to strike out the enacting clause, but all of the paragraph after the enacting clause.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Let the motion be stated from the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON moves to strike out, beginning on line 3, page 1, the remainder of the paragraph, down to and including line 15, on page 2.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield for the purpose of offering an amendment, for the information of the House, as a substitute to be considered after his amendment has been discussed? I desire to have it pending.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection, provided I do not lose the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a matter for unanimous consent.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to do so.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have not taken any of the time of the committee on this bill. I have had no opportunity, nor has there been opportunity, to address the committee upon the necessity for this legislation at this time, except as it has been presented by those who are friendly to the bill. And I will be glad, and I hope, although perhaps I am vain, that I may have 20 minutes of time now to talk about the necessity for this legislation, giving facts, which are official, and with no captious desire to take up time unnecessarily.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not want to object to the gentleman from Illinois, certainly, but, Mr. Chairman, everybody has seen how this bill has been managed, the fight that has been made upon it, and the time that has been killed upon it. Now, if we can reach some agreement and vote on striking out the enacting clause, or something that will test the House as to the bill itself, I am perfectly willing to agree, so far as I am concerned, to reasonable time on both sides to discuss it. But I do not think I would be justified, in view of everything here, in consenting to individual gentlemen spending the time—10, 15, or 20 minutes. We would never get through. Now, if we can reach some such agreement as that, I would be very glad to enter into it. I would be very glad if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] could have the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is quarter to 4 o'clock. The announcement last night was that the House might adjourn until Saturday. I apprehend that no one has made definite arrangements about to-morrow. It seems to me it might be more convenient to the membership of the House not to run too long to-night and to continue with the bill to-morrow. There is nothing else that is urging that I know of that would come up to-morrow.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the leader is not in, but my recollection is to-day that he told me that some gentlemen on both sides had gone under the impression that there would be no session to-morrow. I do not speak that authoritatively, but that is my recollection.

Mr. MANN. If they have gone, they are away now. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to vote on the bill or amendments or any of them at any time. I would be glad to have my colleague heard. Several gentlemen have been waiting to be heard, and my friend from Iowa knows that nearly always at the beginning of the session of Congress we waste a good deal of time on a bill like this with little parliamentary propositions.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will permit me, I want to say that I am just as anxious as he can be to give the distinguished gentleman from Illinois all the time he wants.

Mr. MANN. I understand, and I think that is the sentiment of every Member in the House.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. But I do not want to do it if this performance is to continue.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Florida that probably there will be a motion offered very soon, by way of amendment, to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Why could we not have that now and agree upon the time to debate it and close the matter up one way or the other?

Mr. BURNETT. May I ask if that is not the effect of the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. As I understand it, there would be nothing left if his motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. If other Members are agreeable, I am perfectly willing, if my colleague will yield for that purpose, to have my other colleague [Mr. GRAHAM] make the motion of which he gave notice, to strike out the enacting clause and agree to debate.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have a substantive proposition which will provide and care for the men that have been discharged from the military service of the United States in hospitals that we now have. And I desire before the debate closes to have an opportunity to present that amendment and to debate it, not to exceed five minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] yield?

Mr. CANNON. I do. I hope it is not to be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. This is all by unanimous consent.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have given notice of a motion to strike out the enacting clause, and it has been understood probably, between the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from Nebraska and myself, that some time would be allowed for debate on that matter. And I suggest, if my colleague from Illinois will yield, that I present my motion now to strike out the enacting clause, with the agreement that time be divided in some way between the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] and whoever controls it on this side, and let the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] have all the time they desire. I myself would like a little time on the motion.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am perfectly willing to do that if we can get rid of everything else and settle the question as to whether we are going to have the legislation or not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Why does not the gentleman offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to strike out the enacting clause?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; it is to——

Mr. MANN. That would not be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. This can be offered to the amendment that is pending.

Mr. CANNON. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like to make a unanimous-consent request, if it is agreeable to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely; by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It is that the colleague of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] be allowed to offer the amendment to strike out the enacting clause and that there be two hours of debate upon that proposition, one hour to be controlled on this side and one hour on that side, and then no other amendment be offered and a vote be taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] be permitted to offer his amendment to strike out the enacting clause and that there shall be two hours' debate on the proposition, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Florida and one hour by the gentleman in opposition, Mr SMITH of Michigan, if he is present——

Mr. CANNON. One hour on a side——

The CHAIRMAN. And at the expiration of that time the vote be taken. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest it be an hour and a quarter.

Mr. CANNON. Two hours is the proposition.

Mr. MADDEN. That would keep us here until 6 o'clock and after.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have in mind a statement made by the minority leader from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and I thought that possibly he and the majority leader [Mr. KITCHIN] could reach some conclusion about to-morrow.

Mr. MADDEN. Very well; if you are not going to dispose of this matter to-night, I object.

Mr. KITCHIN. Would there be objection to an hour to a side on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] to strike out the enacting clause?

Mr. CANNON. I would like 20 minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. After the gentleman from Illinois has completed, an hour to a side.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; I do not think so. I think the proposition of the gentleman from Florida is a proper one. There is a great demand for time over here.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, unless there is some understanding that this matter is not going to be disposed of to-night, I shall object to two hours' general debate on this motion.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Let me make this request, then, Mr. Chairman, that we have an hour and a half of general debate, 35 minutes of it to be controlled by myself and the balance to be controlled by some gentleman on the other side, and that we do not vote until to-morrow, and that this agreement means the withholding of any other amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida modifies his request by asking that 35 minutes be controlled by himself in the debate on the motion to strike out the enacting clause and 55 minutes, or the remainder of an hour and a half, to be controlled by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], if he is present, or some one opposed to the bill, and that the vote to strike out the enacting clause be taken to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. That is an hour and a half?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is this hour and a half to be taken from the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who has been recognized?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I understood the gentleman from Illinois would get his 20 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, Mr. Chairman, you can not make an agreement in the Committee of the Whole to take a vote to-morrow. That agreement can only be made in the House. I do not care to interpose any objection to it, but you can not agree in the Committee of the Whole to take a vote in the House.

Mr. GILLETT. But if the gentleman from Florida says he will not take it in the House——

Mr. MANN. A vote is to be taken in the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It was stated that a vote would be had before the vote on the motion to strike out the enacting clause would be taken.

Mr. MANN. No; a vote on the motion striking out the enacting clause.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, from the beginning of the debate I have been intending to offer a substantive amendment which would make provision for the men discharged from the military forces of the United States needing hospital care. I have not had an opportunity to present that amendment. I shall not agree to any unanimous-consent arrangement that will cut me off from the opportunity of offering that amendment. I shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming objects unless he can get opportunity to offer his amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I wish to couple with the request already made the further agreement that the gentleman from Wyoming be allowed to offer his amendment and that there shall be five minutes' debate on either side on it.

Mr. MANN. Then the request should be made that after the motion to strike out the enacting clause is made and pending a vote upon that, the gentleman from Wyoming be permitted to offer an amendment, and that his amendment be voted upon before the vote is taken to strike out the enacting clause. I do not think it is necessary to increase the time any.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman understand that the gentleman from Florida makes that modification?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. We would not know how we should vote on the motion to strike out the enacting clause unless the gentleman's amendment is voted on first.

Mr. MANN. It could be voted on first.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I think the time should be equally divided, and therefore I object unless the time is equally divided on either side. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma objects.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that the time is equally divided.

Mr. MANN. Just a moment, Mr. Chairman. Let us make the time an hour on each side, unless Members have other engagements for to-morrow, because even under this the vote would not be taken until to-morrow, and the few minutes used in debate to-morrow will not make any difference if we adjourn a little earlier to-night. I hope the gentleman will make his request, then, the same as it was, except that the time for debate be two hours, one hour on a side.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida now modifies his request by making it two hours' debate on the motion to strike out the enacting clause, to be made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, as that was stated, it seemed to omit the request of the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MANN. I understand the Chair has stated just one change, increasing the time for debate. The other provisions go as stated before.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the Chair's understanding.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And part of the request is that at the expiration of the two hours' debate on the motion to strike out the enacting clause, the gentleman from Wyoming is to be recognized to offer his amendment.

Mr. MANN. Pending the two hours' debate, and that debate on his motion be had before the vote to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Why pending?

Mr. MANN. So that, as Members suggest, they have a chance to vote on a substantive proposition before voting on the motion to strike out the enacting clause. It is perfectly apparent that if the enacting clause were stricken out the gentleman could not offer his amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is precisely what I stated, that after the debate was concluded on the motion to strike out, the gentleman from Wyoming should then be recognized to offer his amendment, after which there should be 10 minutes debate, 5 minutes on a side.

Mr. MANN. Or at any time within the two hours.

Mr. MONDELL. I desire that my amendment shall be before the House during the debate. If it is offered at the close of the debate, after Members have made up their minds, there will be no opportunity. All the time I want on my amendment is five minutes, but I desire to have it pending during the debate.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then the gentleman wants to have it stated as a part of the request that he shall have the right, pending the two hours' debate, to submit his amendment for information.

Mr. MONDELL. To be voted on at the close of the debate.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. To be voted on at the close of the two hours' debate, and the gentleman is to have five minutes additional——

Mr. MONDELL. I do not ask any additional time beyond the two hours.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman's five minutes will be taken out of the two hours.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I want to get the facts straight as to the agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state the request. It is that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] may offer his amendment to strike out the enacting clause. Upon that motion there shall be two hours of debate, to be equally divided between the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], and that before the debate begins the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] shall have an opportunity to offer an amendment, and that that amendment shall be voted on prior to voting on the motion to strike out the enacting clause. Is that correct?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is correct, and that no other amendments be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. No other amendments can be offered.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I notice that the time on our side is to be controlled by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], which is entirely satisfactory to me, as far as I am concerned; but I assume that if I offer my motion now, and then yield to my colleague, I can hereafter debate my motion.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will get time from the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. There will be no trouble about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no power over that. That will be in the control of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. POWERS. Reserving the right to object, I have been trying all day to get in my amendment for Middleboro or Harlan, Ky. Unless my amendment can come in under the same head as that of the gentleman from Wyoming, I shall be compelled to object.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman from Florida say to that?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I can not include all the amendments. I am trying to get rid of them.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. POWERS. I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, the agreement is as follows: That I withdraw my motion, and that my colleague [Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois] shall move to strike out the enacting clause, whereupon the committee will rise and there will be an hour on a side to-morrow, and then the gentleman from Wyoming——

Mr. MONDELL. I wish to have my amendment read to-night.

Mr. CANNON. That the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] be now read, and that then he shall have five minutes to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. The first thing is that my colleague [Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois] shall offer a motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. CANNON. Yes. Unanimous consent having been given to this, I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered. Now, let the Chair state further that the understanding is that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is to offer his amendment, and that it be pending.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair simply makes this suggestion.

Mr. MANN. The first thing is the motion to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but under the unanimous-consent agreement we must also have the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming pending. The Chair wonders if it would not be more proper for the gentleman from Wyoming to offer his amendment first.

Mr. MANN. It would not make any difference about the voting, except for the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: Page 1, lines 1 and 2, strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MONDELL: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to designate such general hospitals and hospitals at camps and cantonments, now under the jurisdiction of the War Department, for the treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States as in his opinion can advantageously be utilized for such purposes, and are not needed for those in the military and naval forces, and the said Secretary shall within 30 days after the passage of this act report to Congress as to the character, location, and capacity of the hospitals designated by him as available for the treatment of those discharged from the military and naval forces."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to reserve a point of order against that amendment on the ground that it is not germane.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] 20 minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CANNON. I will.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, with the consent of the gentleman from Illinois, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Florida for that purpose?

Mr. CANNON. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the committee determined to rise, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12917, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13153. An act extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River, at the foot of Garrison Avenue, at Fort Smith, Ark.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 5, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

THURSDAY, December 5, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee that by Thy grace and leadership we have come out of a great struggle with clean hands and pure hearts. And now as we gather the fruits of a great victory and seek to adjust the relationships of men, we pray that we may be guided by the Divine Spirit, that as in all our history of the past so to-day we may build upon the sure foundations of the gospel of Thy Son the Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. We pray to this end that Thou wilt guide us in our deliberations. Give us that unity of counsel which can only come out of the common origin and source of truth, Thy Word. May success attend our efforts to bring universal peace and brotherhood to the earth. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

FOREIGN POLICY OF SPAIN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, which will be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The communication is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 3, 1918.

Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
Vice President of the United States,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that a note has been received from the ambassador of Spain at this Capital, in which he states that when the new Spanish Government, presided over by Marquis de Alhucemas, presented itself before the Congress of Deputies the president of the council of ministers declared that the foreign policy of the Government over which it presided was steered in intimate understanding with the western powers of Europe and the United States. The ambassador also states that two incidental motions, differently worded but to the same effect, were introduced offering congratulations on the termination of hostilities and on the dawning of justice over force, the basis of liberty and fraternity among the peoples. The second of these two motions was passed with only two dissenting votes. In conclusion, the ambassador states that his Government desires the particularly unanimous sentiment of the Spanish Congress, which has given by its vote evidence of the earnest sympathy it cherishes toward the allied people and Governments, made known to the Congress of the United States.

A similar letter has been addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

ROBERT LANSING.

STATEMENT BY EX-PRESIDENT TAFT.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the statement by former President William Howard Taft, published in the Washington Post of December 5, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TAFT DEFENDS WILSON'S TRIP; SAYS ADVANTAGES ARE CLEAR; CONSTITUTION CONFERS THE RIGHT—BELIEVES PRESIDENT'S PRESENCE AT PEACE CONFERENCE WILL GIVE IT A DEMOCRATIC STAMP—PROPER FOR HIM TO ASPIRE TO BE HEAD OF LEAGUE OF NATIONS—IGNORING OF SENATE DOES NOT JUSTIFY RETALIATORY ACTION, FORMER PRESIDENT THINKS.

(By William Howard Taft.)

"If one can judge from the serious doubts of the wisdom of the President's going in person to the Paris conference expressed in friendly Democratic newspapers, it is not popular. What the political effect of his trip will be it is idle to discuss so far in advance of the next presidential election. Much is to happen in the domestic field in the next two years.

"The advantages of the President's going seem clear. His presence in the conference will stamp upon it a democratic character in the eyes of all but the wild bolsheviki. This will be a real aid in allaying the unrest among the peoples of the allies. The conference between Mr. Wilson, Lloyd George, M. Clemenceau, and Sr. Orlando must be useful to the world. What is of the utmost importance is that the four great allies shall work in harmony in the great task before them. In these four men we shall have the men of real power in the four great nations.

HIS POWER LIKE PREMIER.

"King George, President Poincare, and King Victor Emmanuel are not the actual wielders of power in their respective countries as Mr. Wilson is in this. His powers are more analogous to those of the three premiers, except that he adds to his the titular headship of the American Nation as well. The personal contact of the real leaders, the intimacies of their informal conversations, and the human touch of it all should rub off angles and corners and make for sympathetic aims and harmony. Those who have projected plans for the league of nations have always insisted that the members of its executive councils should be the premiers and actual executives, in order that the council should be truly representative and have power to act.

PROPER HEAD FOR NATION'S LEAGUE.

"It has been said that Mr. Wilson aspires to be president of the league of nations. If so, it is a proper aspiration. No one could fill that place better than the President of the United States, if such a league is formed. It should attach to the office and not to the person, of course, so that when Mr. Wilson retires he should give way to his successor. The disinterestedness of this country in respect to most questions arising for the decision and action of the league would make the American President a most fitting head.

"Again, it will help President Wilson to go to the conference. He will learn much of the European situation at first hand. He will have an unusual opportunity to study the possibilities of a league of nations, its practical difficulties and their solution. There is nothing like oral intimate discussion to winnow out real differences and to remove disagreements due to misunderstanding. Of course these views are predicated on all these national leaders having open minds, a willingness to consult, and a desire to agree. If any one of them holds himself aloof from the discussion and deliberation with fixed views on every topic, he would as well stay at home.

NO CONSTITUTIONAL OBJECTION.

"There is no constitutional inhibition, express or implied, to prevent the President's going abroad to discharge a function clearly given him by the Constitution. That instrument says that he shall make treaties by and with the consent of two-thirds of the Senate. It is a curious error to assume that the President himself may not attend a conference to which he can send a delegate.

"King George would hardly sit in the conference, because he has not the real power to make treaties or to appoint a delegate. Those powers are exercised by the premier, Mr. Lloyd George, who will be in person a member of the conference. It therefore comes down to the question whether the President may not in person perform a duty imposed upon him by law when it is to be performed out of the country. There is certainly no express restriction of this sort in the Constitution, and it is difficult to see why it should be implied.

"The President is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. If we had a military genius in the Presidency like Foch or Napoleon is it possible that the country could not avail itself of his services in a critical campaign, even though that took him out of the United States when Congress is not in session?

CAN PERFORM DUTIES IN PARIS.

"The President can by cable perform all his executive duties from Paris. If his duty abroad is more important than his duty here in connection with a session of Congress, Congress may well wait until his return, or, if the public exigency requires, may invite the Vice President to do these things as Acting President which the absence of the President on foreign duty prevents his doing.

"Our Constitution is great in its elastic character and in its adapting itself to the changing and varying needs of the unseen future. No other executive is forbidden to leave the country. Kings do it, premiers do it, why should we infer such a restriction when it is not expressed? Its expediency, of course, is a question for the President. Were he to abuse his discretion and leave the country the people would condemn it at the polls or it might even become a subject for impeachment. But when the duty which he is to perform is of such an importance as the present one his decision to perform it in person the Houses of Congress may well respect.

SENATE RESENTS BEING IGNORED.

"The President's persistence in ignoring the Senate by appointing no Senator to the commission and in ignoring Congress by giving no real exposition of his present view of the peace terms created a resentful feeling, which was unfortunately manifested in the reception of his message on Monday last. The disposition of some to nag the President, however, by urging the adoption of resolutions inviting the Vice President to act for the President meets with no popular favor.

"If the fact or the manner of the President's going is a mistake, and it is unpopular with the American people, that may be made a legitimate ground for criticism in a political campaign. But those who would now seek to create an embarrassment out of the present situation will not commend themselves as engaged in a patriotic purpose. If it be true that the President has acted without due consideration to the Senate or to Congress, the people will not justify the Senate or Congress in a retaliatory action. For the Republicans it is the poorest kind of politics. The President goes to represent the United States, and the setting up of a backfire here will not help the country or its success in the conference, and from a political standpoint it will react upon those who set it. Mr. MANN'S position in this respect is a wise one and all Republicans should approve it."

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I present resolutions of Local Union, No. 38-A-2, Shipyard Laborers, Riggers, and Fasteners, of Seattle, Wash., representing about 4,000 members, urging the establishment of another national holiday to be known as "Liberty Day," and to be the 11th of November. I move that it be referred to the proper committee. I will say to the Chair that I do not know to what committee it ought to go.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Several similar resolutions have gone to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That reference is satisfactory. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the National Academy of Sciences, praying for the establishment of a league of nations for the maintenance of peace, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NELSON presented a memorial of the Strong-Scott Manufacturing Co., of Minneapolis, Minn., remonstrating against the proposed tax of 80 per cent of the earnings in excess of 10 per cent of the invested capital in the pending revenue bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial from the Minneapolis Automobile Trade Association of Minnesota, remonstrating against the increased rate of taxation on automobiles in the pending revenue bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Marshall-Wells Co., of Duluth, Minn., remonstrating against the 10 per cent tax on ammunition and sporting goods in the pending revenue bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

MANUFACTURE OF MUNITIONS AND CONSTRUCTION OF SHIPS.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to move that the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 181) to authorize and empower the War Industries Board to aid in equipping and expanding power plants to carry on the manufacture of munitions and construction of ships during the war, advance moneys for that purpose to owners and operators of private plants, etc., be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE TO ATTEND PEACE CONFERENCE.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report back Senate resolution 358 to create a committee of eight Senators, which shall be charged with the duty of proceeding to Paris at the proper time to be present during the peace conference, and I submit a report (No. 616) to accompany the resolution, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Relations having considered Senate resolution 358, to create a committee of eight Senators which shall be charged with the duty of proceeding to Paris at the proper time in order to be present during the peace conference, unanimously report it back to the Senate adversely, with the recommendation that it be not passed.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted the following additional views:

I make this separate report by reason of the fact that I offered an amendment to the resolution on the floor of the Senate, proposing that the number of the committee be increased from 8 to 96, which would include the entire membership of the Senate. That my position may not be misunderstood, I desire that it be known that I at all times opposed the sending of any committee of Senators to Paris, and so voted as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, for the following reasons:

Section 2 of Article II of the Constitution of the United States empowers the President of the United States, and the President solely, "to make treaties." The Senate may advise with regard to a treaty, but it may not participate in nor interfere with the President in the initiation and negotiation of a treaty. It is true that the treaty does not become operative until concurred in by two-thirds of the Senate. This, however, is an act to be performed subsequent to the making of the treaty. The President has undertaken in person to perform this great constitutional duty. He has called to his assistance an efficient corps of statesmen, experts, and statisticians.

The proposed committee could perform no constitutional function imposed upon the Senate with relation to treaties. It would have no legal status in connection with the negotiation or making of the treaty. Its methods of obtaining information would, in the nature of the circumstances, be vagrant, uncertain, and unreliable. The report of such a committee to the Senate would be based chiefly upon hearsay and would constitute but the individual conclusions of the members of the committee and would have little force and effect with the Senate.

Such committee would neither have the information nor the power to advise on behalf of the Senate. This fact, unfortunately, might not be known to all of the foreign members of the peace council and expressions made by the members of such committee might be taken as an expression of the sentiment or a pronouncement of the position of the United States Senate with regard to questions under consideration before the peace council and in such way might embarrass and interfere with the President in the performance of his constitutional duties in the making of the treaty.

All facts bearing upon the negotiations must be presented to the peace council, and the President will undoubtedly report such facts fully to the Senate of the United States and to the country. He has already made this promise to Congress.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that the resolution go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. PITTMAN subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to file a separate report in connection with Senate resolution 358, and I ask to have it printed in the RECORD, together with the report of the committee, submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN NONCOMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I introduce the bill which I send to the desk and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I ask that the bill be printed in the RECORD, and in connection with it I ask that an explanation of its purport be printed to follow the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 5101) for the relief of certain noncommissioned officers of the United States Army who were recalled to active service during the recent war and commissioned as officers was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and, with the accompanying statement, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 5101) for the relief of certain noncommissioned officers of the United States Army who were recalled to active service during the recent war and commissioned as officers.

Be it enacted, etc., That retired enlisted men of the Regular Army who were called to active service by orders of the War Department during the war with Germany and commissioned in the armies of the United States, and who will again revert to a retired status when their services are no longer required, be allowed to retain the rank held by them when mustered out of or discharged from active service and given the pay of a first lieutenant on the retired list, provided that muster out or discharge was not due to incompetency or misconduct.

MEMORANDUM.

There have been called into active service and commissioned during the present war some one hundred and fifty enlisted men from the retired list. Practically all of these men were of the highest noncommissioned grade at date of retirement, having held those grades for a long time, in many cases from 20 to 25 years.

It will be observed that the men who attained the highest noncommissioned grades and thus retired were men who on account of the strenuous life of the period in which they served must necessarily have possessed physical, mental, and moral qualifications of the highest degree, having been so retired when the country deemed it necessary that these particularly qualified experts should be brought in for the service of the country they were looked over and selected, not by guesswork, but by their records, their qualifications, their reliability and efficiency, and on these accounts only were they sought for by the country and offered commissions. The fact was they were the only people that could "deliver the goods" along this line, the only people capable of performing these duties, in fact, the only living experts in existence.

The mere fact that patriotic, intelligent, expert officers of the United States Army turned their attention at once to this particular class of men, and having weighed them and judged them by records, qualifications, and past records, and on these offered them commissions as captains, majors and higher ranks, is sufficient guaranty of their high standard, rendering them deserving of consideration.

Their records during this war have justified the fact that their selection did not come by political or other outward influence; when they accepted the commissions they performed the duties assigned them as they did in the old Army, in all good faith, without asking for choice of stations or for any other consideration, simply giving up civic duties and abandoning business pursuits which they had established after retirement and which netted them a comfortable living, and which can not be rebuilt after the war is over; on this account they are entitled to any consideration you can give them.

Retired Army officers up to the grade of colonel recalled to active service have already been provided for, inasmuch as they will attain a higher grade upon again reverting to a retired status.

If this allowance is granted it affects but a small number of men, and as these men die the list will be lessened and in time entirely eliminated.

In justice to these men it is therefore proposed that a bill be introduced in Congress providing:

That retired enlisted men who have been returned to active service and commissioned in the armies of the United States during the present war and who again revert to a retired status be given the rank they then held, with the pay of a first lieutenant, provided they have not been returned to a retired status due to their own incompetency or misconduct.

THE PRESIDENTIAL OFFICE—PAPER BY HENRY E. DAVIS (S. DOC. 308).

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I offer the following Senate resolution and ask unanimous consent to have it considered at this time. It proposes to print as a Senate document a monograph by a distinguished member of the District bar, Mr. Henry E. Davis. It was written some thirty years ago, at the time of the wounding of President Garfield. It is entitled "Inability of the President—What Constitutes and Who Decides?" It will save the Senate, I think, and those who are interested in the question a large amount of investigation if this monograph can be printed as a Senate document.

The resolution (S. Res. 366) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Senate resolution 366.

Resolved, That the manuscript entitled "Inability of the President—What Constitutes and Who Decides?" a monograph by Henry E. Davis, be printed as a Senate document.

MONROE DOCTRINE.

Mr. BORAH. I offer a resolution, which I ask may be read and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 370) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Senate resolution 370.

Whereas in September, 1796, George Washington, then President of the United States, declared, "The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible * * *." And that "Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities"; and

Whereas in response to a letter addressed to him by James Monroe, then President of the United States, concerning the policy afterwards declared by President Monroe and since then known as the Monroe doctrine, Thomas Jefferson said in reply: "The question presented by the letters you have sent me is the most momentous which has ever been offered to my contemplation since that of independence. That made us a Nation. This sets our compass and points the course which we are to steer through the ocean of time opening on us. And never could we embark upon it under the circumstances more auspicious. Our first and fundamental maxim should be never to entangle ourselves in the broils of Europe; our second, never to suffer Europe to intermeddle with cis-Atlantic affairs. America, North and South, has a set of interests distinct from those of Europe and particularly her own. She should therefore have a system of her own separate and apart from that of Europe"; and

Whereas James Monroe, President of the United States, afterwards amplified this policy, incorporating it in a message to the Congress of the United States, declaring in effect that any attempt on the part of foreign Governments to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety, and setting forth in full the policy which was afterwards and ever since has been known as the Monroe doctrine; and

Whereas the policies thus early announced by Washington, Jefferson, and Monroe, and ever since adhered to by this country, regardless of political parties, have contributed greatly to the peace and happiness of the people of the United States; and

Whereas we believe any material departure from these policies would be fraught with danger to the peace and happiness of the people of the United States, involving us, in all probability, in the controversies of other nations: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States reaffirm its faith and confidence in the permanent worth and wisdom of these policies and shall seek in all matters coming before it touching the interests or affairs of foreign countries to conform its acts to these time-honored principles so long and so happily a part of our own policy.

ABROGATION OF TREATIES.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 367), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate the following information:

1. What countries, if any, have notified the United States of their intention to abrogate any treaties with the United States; and what treaties are to be abrogated and the reason therefor, if any are given.

2. The countries with which the United States has treaties which prevent us from giving preferences to Americans or American ships in the carrying of imports or exports, and what is necessary to be done to abrogate such treaties, and what, if any, steps our Government has taken to secure the abrogation of the same.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 368), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the United States Shipping Board be, and it is hereby, directed to report to the Senate as soon as practicable what legislation, in its judgment, should be enacted by Congress to promote, continue, and insure the maintenance, development, and operation of a merchant marine under the American flag.

INVESTIGATION OF SPRUCE PRODUCTION.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 369), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is hereby requested to inform the Senate what steps, if any, have been taken upon the recommendation of Hon. Charles E. Hughes for an investigation of the spruce production section of the Aeroplane Division of the Signal Corps of the United States Army.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. REED submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 371), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Fund of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds or any subcommittee thereof be directed to inquire into the costs, construction, operation, maintenance, and future disposition of the public buildings of the Government of every nature, kind, and location, and the program and contracts of the various departments of the Government with reference to future costs, construction, operation, maintenance, and disposition of the Government buildings of every nature, kind, and location, and report to the Senate thereon, together with their recommendation of any steps which they may deem advisable to take with a view to remedying conditions.

That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-fifth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate.

HOUSING OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 372), which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

Resolved, That every official and agency of the Government, having had in charge any work, operations, construction, or expenditures authorized by the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to provide housing for war needs," approved May 16, 1918, shall and is hereby required to make a full report and account of the same to the Senate; and be it further

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to make an investigation of all work, operations, and construction, and of all expenditures made under said act, and report its findings to the Senate.

UNIFORMS OF DISCHARGED SOLDIERS.

Mr. POMERENE. I send to the desk a joint resolution and ask that it may be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 191) providing that soldiers, sailors, and marines may retain uniforms and apparel worn by them in the military service of the United States as their personal property and permitting them to wear the same under regulations to be prescribed by the War Department, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That soldiers, sailors, and marines, whether in the service at home or abroad, be and they are hereby permitted to retain as their own property the uniforms, including overcoats and other articles of wearing apparel furnished them by the Government and severally worn by them at the time of their demobilization and discharge, and that they shall be permitted to wear the same under such reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the War Department as will distinguish the said soldiers, sailors, and marines so demobilized and discharged from the service and wearing the same from those who may be continued in the actual military, naval, or marine service of the country.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senate, I should like, in a word, to give a brief explanation of the joint resolution.

The War Department gave out a statement sometime ago, as I learned through the press, to the effect that the soldiers after their demobilization and discharge would be permitted to wear their uniforms for a period of 30 days. Since I prepared the joint resolution I have been advised that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] introduced the other day a similar resolution.

I think this is a matter of the very greatest importance to the soldiers, marines, and sailors themselves, because of the very high price of wearing apparel now. Many of these boys, I am told, not knowing how long they would be away from their homes, gave away or otherwise disposed of their clothing, and they would be put to very large expense to get new clothes if they were not permitted to wear their uniforms more than 30 days after demobilization. Certainly these uniforms and wearing apparel are of very much more value to them as individuals than they would be to the Government.

In addition to that, we are all admonished that there is a scarcity of wools and woolen, and I think common business prudence would suggest that the soldiers, sailors, and marines be permitted to wear their uniforms after they have severed their connection with the service.

I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. I have only heard the joint resolution as it was hastily read. Does it provide for any additional pay, or simply permit the soldiers to wear their uniforms?

Mr. POMERENE. It applies only to their uniforms and their clothing.

Mr. BORAH. Is the joint resolution which the Senator from Ohio introduced to go to a committee?

Mr. POMERENE. I asked that it go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BORAH. I only want to say, Mr. President, that I hope the joint resolution will be reported out in a reasonable time and favorably. It occurred to me that it is of such merit it could be disposed of without going to a committee.

Mr. POMERENE. I have no objection to the disposition of it now. I may say, I think with propriety, I spoke to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs yesterday, and I know he favors the general principle. I have not submitted to him the joint resolution as it has been drawn.

Mr. JONES of Washington and Mr. FLETCHER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Washington, who first rose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am heartily in favor of the joint resolution the Senator from Ohio has introduced, but I think it would also be well to add to it a provision that when the soldiers are discharged they shall be entitled to the same transportation pay to their homes that members of the Navy are entitled to receive. I noticed in the papers sometime ago that these men were not getting sufficient to cover their transportation expenses home. That ought to be provided for.

I remember when the reorganization bill was up I endeavored to get a provision in that bill that would put the soldiers of the Army on exactly the same basis as members of the Navy upon their discharge. Apparently we could not get that done. We did get some additional compensation provided. Something of that sort ought to be done, and it would be well to put in such a provision in connection with the measure of the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. I have rather assumed that something of that kind would be done; at least, I hope it shall be done, but my attention has been specially called to the question of the uniforms and clothing, and with that thought in mind I prepared the joint resolution.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know that, but I think the two can very well be covered together.

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was going to say that I think an arrangement has been made to carry out the suggestion of the Senator from Washington, and the matter raised by the Senator from Ohio has also been under consideration. I think it would be well to have the joint resolution go to the committee, as there are some technical questions involved, and a general policy may be outlined in the committee so that there can be no confusion. The committee meets to-morrow, and there will be no delay.

Mr. POMERENE. I may state that in the latter part of the joint resolution I have provided that the uniforms should be worn under some rule or regulation to be adopted by the War Department, so as to distinguish, perhaps, those who had been in the service but were discharged, from those who were actually in the service. I can understand how it might be possible to abuse the privilege of wearing the uniforms under certain circumstances. I think the Committee on Military Affairs would work that out so as to guard every interest.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the difficulty has already arisen. Some men are wearing uniforms and refusing to salute officers. It is a matter which ought to be considered by the committee so as to avoid any difficulty of that sort.

Mr. POMERENE. I have no doubt the committee will arrange proper safeguards.

Mr. JONES of Washington and Mr. CUMMINS addressed the Chair.

Mr. POMERENE. I yield first to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In reference to the suggestion of the Senator from Florida, that the matter of travel pay had been arranged for, I do not see how it can be done within the law unless we pass some legislation, because the reorganization act fixed the specific amount which should be paid for this purpose. I hope it has been possible to arrange it, but I think it will require legislation. I understand a bill has already been introduced covering the matter. I am glad that is true, and I hope if the joint resolution of the Senator from Ohio is to be acted upon such a provision may be put in it so as to get them through together.

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. For the information of the Senator from Ohio I wish to say that two or three weeks ago I introduced a bill to give soldiers and sailors the uniforms they are wearing at the time of their discharge. It was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I have the promise of the chairman of that committee and several members of the committee that the subject will be taken up on Friday morning at the regular meeting of the committee for the purpose of considering the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. I was not aware that the Senator from Iowa had introduced the bill. I wish to say that I have no pride of authorship, and I shall be glad to have any disposition of the subject which will meet the situation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, there are two or three matters affecting the allowances made to discharged soldiers which it seems to me might be taken up by the Committee on Military Affairs together, and in the consideration of the bill the Senator from Iowa has introduced there would be no objection to attaching as a part of that measure the matter of travel pay and the matter which has been recommended by the War Department, allowing one month's extra pay to discharged soldiers. Most of the soldiers are discharged without any money at all, and they are allowed 3½ cents a mile travel pay. That is not sufficient to pay for their expenses, for their meals en route and their railroad fare, to say nothing of sleeping apartments on the train. It seems to me there ought to be some provision made so that the reasonable actual expenses of these men should be allowed.

There is another matter that I hope the Committee on Military Affairs will consider in the same connection. Under the present law the men are allowed travel pay to the place of their enlistment. They ought to be allowed travel pay to their homes. There are many cases where men enlisted at some place very far removed from their homes. I have had my attention called to cases where men whose homes were on the Pacific coast enlisted in Chicago because they happened to be in Chicago at the time they were called for enlistment, and as a matter of saving time and of convenience they enlisted at that point. When they are discharged from the Army they want to return to their permanent homes. It seems to me, therefore, nothing but fair that they should be allowed travel pay to their actual bona fide permanent place of residence to which they want to return.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JONES of Washington subsequently said:

I introduce a bill for reference to the Military Affairs Committee. I will simply say that it relates to the matters I referred to this morning in connection with the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

The bill (S. 5108) to amend section 126 of an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before morning business is closed I want to make a suggestion in the way of seeking information of the able leader of the majority, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN].

A month ago the Senator announced that we were to begin retrenchment at once, and a few days thereafter a letter was read into the RECORD showing to what a remarkable extent retrenchment had already progressed. I read from yesterday morning's Post that "Government expenditures in November reached the new high record of $1,935,249,000"—the highest figures we have reached since the war began. This is the first month of retrenchment. If the Senator has any explanation as to the progress of retrenchment, I should be delighted to hear it.

Mr. President, as I said sometime ago in discussing this matter, there will be a thousand reasons given for maintaining every expenditure which has been made during the war and every avenue of expenditure which has been authorized. I call attention to this matter this morning that we may understand that unless legislation is had and emergency bureaus and organizations are abolished and disposed of, the expenditures will continue just the same as they have during the war time. The Appropriations Committee must recommend the conservation of funds. It is the only way we can really make progress.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, since the Senator has appealed to me for some explanation about these expenditures I feel sure that he realizes that none of us can accomplish much along that line until some appropriation bills are ready for consideration. I have appealed for retrenchment as strongly as I could; I have been to the War Department repeatedly; I have written letters, and have endeavored in every way I could to induce a more economical administration of Government affairs.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what, if anything, has been done toward stopping the building of and expenditures with reference to Army cantonments?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say that the Secretary of War wrote me a letter that most of those contracts had been canceled. The enlargement of cantonments which was in contemplation, and for which in some instances contracts had been let, has been discontinued, with perhaps one exception. I do not know that the Secretary has stopped the construction of the project at Columbus, Ga., although I made a special visit to the War Department and inquired about it, and appealed to him, because I could not think it possible that we needed additional accommodations in cantonments when a million and a half soldiers would soon vacate the cantonments that we now have.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield to me?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator has referred to the project at Columbus, Ga. The information that the people of that section of the country have had is that that is a permanent improvement and is intended for a war-instruction cantonment permanently for the instruction of officers of the Army. We are now informed down there that some $13,000,000 is to be expended on that project.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I hope the Senator's information is incorrect. The Secretary of War told me that he was going to cut most of that out. He would not promise me absolutely to cancel the whole matter, but he said it would involve a very small expense.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know myself——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hopes that the conversation is not a private one. The rest of us would like to hear it.

Mr. HARDWICK. I got permission of the Senator from Virginia, and I thought also of the Chair, to interrupt.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly; but it is impossible to hear the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. What I want to say to the Senator is that publication has been made in the papers down there that that project is to be carried forward to completion. I have no information of an official character as to whether it is true or not; but the people down there whose lands are about to be condemned or who have had notice that their lands are to be condemned have got to have some knowledge of a reliable character, so that they will know how to conduct their private affairs. Probably 4,000 acres of land, involving farming lands in two counties, are embraced in this project, and the papers down there are publishing the statement that the Columbus, Ga., project is to be carried out in its entirety, regardless of the fact that the war is over.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what amount is supposed to be expended upon that project?

Mr. HARDWICK. It was stated in a rough way that $13,000,000 would be expended upon it.

Mr. BORAH. That is the initial expenditure?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Then how much more will have to be expended upon it before we get through with it? And above all, what is the necessity of going ahead with any further expenditures?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think I can give some information in regard to this matter.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will be glad if anybody can.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The original project adopted by the War Department was to provide an Infantry training school, and it was intended to instruct 25,000 officers at a time. That was begun and worked out months ago. It was a consolidation and enlargement of training schools for Infantry, but when the armistice was declared at once steps were taken to reduce the scope of the project to a peace basis. It was contemplated from the first to provide space to train 2,500, I think, and this is a permanent part of the military system. The enlargement of the project to accommodate 25,000 was incident to the war. Immediately after the armistice was declared steps were taken to abandon the larger enterprise formed in connection with the war and to complete only the small enterprise which from the first was to be a permanent part of the Military Establishment. This was generally the plan.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him if he knows of any statute under which a permanent improvement of this character might be provided for?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There was a permanent school at Fort Sill, which was subsequently devoted to instruction exclusively in some other line, as I understand. I have not looked into the provision for the permanent school but think there has been such authority for some time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am quite sure that there is no special statute authorizing a permanent school of infantry and technical instruction.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator says there is such a statute?

Mr. McKELLAR. I say there is no special statute, but the work is being done under a statute which we enacted for war purposes. I understand there is no permanent statute authorizing the work, and while I am not sure I do not think that the plan can be carried out when peace is declared.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Virginia will allow me, I should like to ask him whether he has any information as to whether the War Department is going ahead with expenditures for permanent purposes under appropriations made for war purposes alone?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Does the Senator address the question to me?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no information on that subject. I will say that I have had several conversations with the Secretary of War on the subject of economizing on war expenditures, and he assured me that he was in full sympathy with that purpose and wrote me a letter, which I put in the RECORD, showing that he had cut off a billion and a third of dollars of contracts. He assured me further that he intended to pursue that policy and cut off expenditures as far as possible.

In addition to that, I will say, Mr. President, that I had a talk with him later on about the Columbus, Ga., expenditure, and he insisted that it would be necessary to expend some money there, but that he was going to curtail the project very greatly. I differed with him, and told him so, and I desire to express now my difference. I do not believe there ought to be one dollar expended there. If these expenditures for war purposes are to go on in time of peace, this country will be brought to bankruptcy. I protest against it as strongly as I can; and when the bills appropriating money come before the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, the Senate may rest assured that the pruning knife will be applied as rigidly as possible.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? In the last deficiency bill considered by the Congress there were two items asked for appropriations to buy target ranges—one, I think, in Florida, and the other in North Carolina. The committee, after a hearing, refused to make the appropriation.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I correct the Senator by saying that neither of those ranges was located in Florida? I think one was in West Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. One was in Kentucky and the other in North Carolina.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. I thank the Senator for giving the correction as to the location. I have since been informed that the War Department, notwithstanding the action of the committee, have purchased one of those sites, and I should like to know if that is so.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no information on the subject except a newspaper paragraph which stated that they had bought the site in North Carolina at a cost of $2,000,000. They asked for a million and a half, and the Committee on Appropriations struck it from the bill. The bill passed the House with that item in it. The Senate committee struck it out; the Senate sustained the committee, and the conference struck it out. So that if the War Department have expended $2,000,000 for the purchase of that site they must have gotten it out of some general appropriation, some lump-sum appropriation made by the Committee on Military Affairs, and with full knowledge of the fact that the Congress had protested against it by refusing to appropriate it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have a letter in regard to the purchase of this site in North Carolina. The only reason why I do not insert the letter in the RECORD is because it reflects so severely upon those who had to do with it that I would not want to insert it until I had made a thorough investigation; but it is written by a business man who lives near the place. Now, if they have purchased this site in defiance of the action of the Appropriations Committee, and at the same time have purchased it at the figures which are given in proportion to the value as stated by this gentleman, the matter ought to be investigated.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, if that is true, why not investigate the purchase of this old hotel property here in Washington, where exactly the same thing happened? The committee refused to authorize it; it was struck out of the bill, and the President bought it out of his war fund—a building in the city of Washington—within 48 hours after we acted adversely on it.

Mr. BORAH. I can imagine that good use could be made of the Arlington Hotel property. Of course, that perhaps would not excuse the purchase of it after the Appropriations Committee refused to appropriate for it; but there is a different story connected with this other purchase, and that is the price paid in comparison to the value of the property.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. With reference to the Arlington Hotel site, I will say that the committee did not act on it. When it was first presented to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House had it under advisement; and we did not feel that it was expedient or wise for us to take it up under the circumstances. We did not pass judgment on it at all, because another committee, which had jurisdiction of the subject, had under consideration a bill providing for its purchase.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator from Virginia will yield, while that is true in one way, yet from another standpoint it is not exactly a fair statement—and, of course, the Senator does not intend to be unfair—as to what happened.

The Secretary of the Treasury came before the committee and asked to have the item included. After some investigation of the proposition, on a vote of the committee we voted not to include it and not to give him this power and authority, and within 48 hours after that action was taken it was bought from the President's $100,000,000 war fund. That is the fact.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I do not think I am mistaken in saying that the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate did not consider it, for the reason that it was already under consideration by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is true.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We expressed no opinion whatever about it. Personally I believe that if it had come before the Senate committee, if the House committee had not had it under consideration, the Senate committee would have included it, as I believe it was a wise purchase. The President purchased it, paid for it out of his emergency fund, and I believe under the conditions as they then existed it was a wise purchase. He got it at a fair price, and it is a much-needed building; it is a very valuable fireproof building that will be of permanent use to the Government work in the city of Washington.

Getting back, however, to this North Carolina purchase that the newspapers refer to, I know nothing whatever about it. I do not know whether the site has been purchased or not; but it was intended as a training ground for artillery. They told me up at the War Department that they expected to have a brigade of artillery in training there. It was not purchased for a target range. They have other places for that purpose. They have been very generously expending the public money about matters of this kind, and it was not pretended that they needed this as a place for testing artillery or for target practice, but it was for training artillery soldiers.

I can not conceive of a reason now for putting $2,000,000 into the purchase of mountainous lands in North Carolina on which to train artillery for this Government. I hope the War Department has not done it. I most seriously protest against it; and if there is any way to stop it, if it has not gone so far that it can not be stopped, I will endeavor to stop it now.

Some members of the Military Affairs Committee told me that they would take up the matter at the War Department and get the facts. It was a matter that came more especially from them, for if the officials of the department have purchased it with any money they got the money from the Military Affairs Committee. They did not get it from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SMOOT. They may have gotten it out of a lump sum.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Not from the Appropriations Committee. That committee has made no lump-sum appropriations that could have been properly used for the purchase of that land in North Carolina. There was another similar tract of land that the War Department was talking about purchasing, and the department had in the bill a million and a half additional for the purchase of land in Kentucky for a similar purpose.

I think, Mr. President, that the time has come when these war expenditures must stop. We need all of our money and all of our energy and all of our resources to rehabilitate the industrial condition of this country, and we ought to cease expending money for war purposes. In all probability we will not have another war in 50 years. Certainly there is no occasion at this particular time to be expending millions and hundreds of millions in preparation for war.

Mr. BORAH, Mr. JONES of New Mexico, and Mr. KENYON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has lost track of who has the floor.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Virginia was answering a question which I propounded to him.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That fact had escaped my notice. I thought the Senator was through and had yielded the floor.

Mr. BORAH. I am very glad to have had the Senator occupy the time. I know the Senator is acting in the utmost good faith in seeking to cut down expenditures.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I thought the Senator had yielded the floor; otherwise I would not have consumed as much time as I have.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield in order that I may ask the Senator from Virginia a question?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia if it is not a feasible matter to call together the Committee on Appropriations, take up these different appropriation bills, find out what remains to be spent and what can be cut out of these bills, and get down to brass tacks, instead of simply talking about it all of the time?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, in answer to that question, I will say that I am in constant touch and communication with Mr. SHERLEY, the very able chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations; and he has under way now an investigation for that purpose and expects to repeal laws appropriating billions of dollars which have not been expended. He has called on all of the departments of the Government to make a statement as to what amounts that have been appropriated remain unexpended; and he expects to incorporate in the next bill that he brings in, which will be in a very few weeks, provisions repealing these appropriations that are no longer necessary, in view of the peace that has now been practically proclaimed.

For instance, there was over a billion dollars appropriated for heavy artillery, which it would take more than 12 months to manufacture. The House incorporated that in the last deficiency bill. I sent for the Secretary of War, and he appeared before the Senate committee. Peace was then being talked about, but nothing tangible had developed. He said, "If peace is attained, I will not spend that money," and I have no idea that he will. He assured the committee that he would not; but we did not feel that we could strike it out at that time, because the war was on, and we felt that it would put the country in a false position. We did not want it to go forth to our enemies that we were letting up in preparing to meet their attacks.

Mr. KENYON. Would it not be advantageous to bring in the heads of these bureaus and find out how many of this army of clerks can be spared, and spared now?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I appeal to the chairman of the committee to do that.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I shall certainly pursue that policy, but I did not think it was necessary to do it until we had an appropriation bill before us. We will certainly take it up at that time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Mexico? He has been standing for half an hour.

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I did not understand the inquiry made by the Senator from Idaho to invite discussion of particular transactions. I rather assumed that the Senator from Idaho was seeking some light upon the general subject of the reduction of expenses.

It may be enlightening to the Senator and to the Senate to know that this morning the Secretary of War and Gen. Ward appeared before the Finance Committee and made a statement upon that subject; and without going into matters of detail at all, the estimate was submitted to the Finance Commitee that after caring for all authorizations in excess of appropriations, and after paying all of the bills for the fiscal year, there would remain a saving out of the actual appropriation of about seven and a quarter billion dollars. I believe it is that information that the Senator from Idaho was seeking. That is an indication of what the War Department is doing. It was quite evident from the testimony of the Secretary this morning that every effort is being made to reduce these expenses; and as the sum total of the information which he gave to the committee, he estimated that all of the expenses would be paid for the fiscal year 1919, all of the authorizations and contracts made could be cared for, and result in a net saving out of the actual appropriations of something like seven and a quarter billion dollars.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, may I ask the Senator in that connection whether the Secretary of War has made any statement to the Military Affairs Committee, to the Finance Committee, or to any other committee of which the Senator has knowledge, as to how rapidly the soldiers in Europe are to be brought home?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Secretary stated to the committee this morning that arrangements are being made to have the soldiers brought home as rapidly as possible; that is, all that will not be needed, under the arrangement with our allies, to perform certain duties in Europe for some months to come.

Mr. BORAH. I saw the statement in the press that it is contemplated to keep a million and a quarter soldiers practically permanently in Europe. I should like to know if there is any such idea as that in the mind of anybody who has any connection with this Government. I shall take an interest in any program like that.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I can answer the Senator's question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Perhaps the President means until the signing of peace.

Mr. BORAH. The press did not so limit the statement.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I will answer the question of the Senator, if permitted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho has the floor.

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas. He is a member of the Military Affairs Committee, and I shall be glad to have him answer the question.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, the statement made to the Military Affairs Committee by the Secretary of War on yesterday or day before yesterday was that 1,250,000 men, practically 30 divisions, would remain in Europe; that the rest of them would be brought home and demobilized and mustered out as rapidly as transportation facilities could be obtained. As to how long these 30 divisions would remain in Europe, or what particular purpose was to be accomplished by their remaining there, any further than could be gathered generally by everybody, there was no statement made by the Secretary of War. That is the condition as far as it has been disclosed to the Military Affairs Committee. As I understand, we have not yet asked for any more specific information, but we expect to do so.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In view of this statement, I desire to call attention to the provision attached by unanimous consent to the appropriation bill of last year which limits the retention of the reserve army to four months after the proclamation of peace; and without additional legislation none of the reserve army can be kept in the Army longer than four months after the declaration of peace. That provision is clearly and emphatically carried in the appropriation bill in a provision passed subsequently to the original military bill, which used the term "the present emergency." Desiring to get away from that indefinite language, "the present emergency," we put in the express language "four months after the proclamation of peace" in legislation passed subsequently to the bill which carried "the present emergency," and that four-months limitation stands as the law to-day.

Mr. BORAH. When does the four-months limitation begin to run?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. From the proclamation of peace, the declaration of peace.

Mr. BORAH. I see.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But I only mentioned it to show that unless legislation is had there can be no million of men kept indefinitely in Europe by any kind of agreement.

Mr. BORAH. I can understand the necessity of retaining men in Europe, though not in large numbers, until the treaty of peace is signed; but these publications to the effect that they are to remain there indefinitely naturally lead to inquiry as to what "indefinitely" means.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] suggests that it is impossible to get them home. We got them over there at the rate of about 300,000 a month. When we get ready we can perhaps get them home with reasonable speed.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, if the Senator will excuse me, I simply want to add one word to what the Senator from Georgia stated. The law that limits their retention in the service to four months has also a provision, reading, in substance, "and such additional time as may be necessary to get transportation and bring them home."

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NEW. Referring to the point the Senator from Georgia has just made, I call attention to the fact that it is provided by the law that all of the conscriptions and all of the enlistments in the Regular Army made subsequently to the passage of that law expire within four months after the signing of the declaration of peace. The enlistments in the Regular Army that were made prior to that date were for a longer term, and I suppose those men will stay in the Army until the expiration of the period for which they enlisted.

In making the statement that 30 divisions were to be kept on the other side, the Chief of Staff said that they were to be Regular Army divisions; that there were to be replacements; that the divisions were to be so arranged that as finally constituted they would be composed of soldiers in the Regular Army; and that all others of the National Army, the National Guard, and all that, were to be returned home. As a matter of fact, it is my understanding that there are only about 40,000 men left in the Regular Army who were enlisted prior to the passage of the act limiting the period of their service to four months after the signing of the declaration of peace. Now, I am interested in knowing how we are to make up the difference between that forty or fifty thousand, possibly, who are left in and the 1,200,000 who are to be kept over there.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator did he inquire of the Chief of Staff in regard to that matter?

Mr. NEW. No; I did not; but that question presented itself, and it would be interesting to know if anyone has any information on the subject, so that this discrepancy may be provided for.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I believe I shall defer this matter for a season. But the subject shall not be permitted to die. I have no desire to criticize nor find fault, but I am going to do as I promised the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]—give him my persistent and vigilant support in pulling down these enormous expenditures.

DELBERT JAMES HAFF.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, upon yesterday a species of debate arose between the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and me concerning a phrase in a letter from a man by the name of Haff, as I understand it, addressed to the Senator from Missouri. This morning I received a letter from a friend of mine at the other wing of the Capitol, which is a personal letter, the conclusion of which is—

> Don't forget that this conspicuous Republican may not be entirely unprejudiced politically in his criticism. More strength to your right arm.

And with this he sends me a transcript from Who's Who, giving the history and the corporate and Mexican connections of Haff. I ask that the transcript from Who's Who be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Who's Who (1916–1917), p. 1027.]

STRUCTURES ON UNION STATION PLAZA.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to have some information from the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds as to why the temporary structures occupying the park between the Capitol and the Union Station, originally designed for housing war workers who came to the city in large numbers, are being continued, and continued at large expense, and for any purpose other than that for which they were originally designed to be used.

Mr. SWANSON. I will say to the Senator that I was absent from the city until about 10 days ago, and as soon as I came back I took up the matter. I was informed by those in charge of the housing proposition, not only in Washington but elsewhere, that only those buildings which have gone beyond the process of commencement and which could be utilized were being constructed, as it would cost less to complete those buildings in a reasonable time than to stop the construction now. I understand that it is the purpose of the Housing Commission not to start any new buildings, and that the program outlined is to complete only those in process of construction where the cost would be less to complete them than if left uncompleted. I am not the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and have not been for nearly three months. Consequently I am not acquainted with all the details of the various propositions which were included in the housing act.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SWANSON. I will.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator understand that one or two of the buildings now in the course of construction on the Capitol Plaza are to be used for picture shows? The one with the gilded dome is to be devoted to that patriotic purpose. The Government has gone to enormous expense to build these houses, which presumably will be torn down in a few months. There was no necessity for the picture-show houses even if the war had gone on for years. There were plenty of places of amusement for these patriotic war workers. It is horrible to think that this expense should have been incurred by the Government for the purpose of giving somebody profits on the construction.

Mr. SWANSON. I am not familiar with that. All the buildings were needed for war workers at the time when they were commenced. I see no occasion for completing any of the buildings, except where the loss would be greater not to complete them than it would be to discontinue work upon them.

Mr. WALSH. The question I desire to ask the Senator is how there could be any loss in stopping that would be greater than the loss of completion.

Mr. SWANSON. If we had a building half completed and made arrangements to rent it, and it could be completed in three or four weeks, under those circumstances I think it would be cheaper to complete it.

Mr. WALSH. I agree with the Senator about that, but that is not the question. To what use is it proposed now to put these buildings that were constructed for the purpose of housing war workers?

Mr. SWANSON. The departments, I understand, will be overcrowded for some time. I understand it is the purpose to rent these buildings by authority of the Government and to collect the rent.

Mr. KIRBY. May I ask the Senator a question on the rent proposition?

Mr. SWANSON. That is my understanding. I will say I do not know definitely, because I was away from the city for two months on account of illness in my family. I am not acquainted with the facts, and I have not been chairman of the committee for over three months. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. KIRBY. It is my information that the Housing Commission have put a price on its accommodations furnished in the houses built by the Government that is as high as that charged by the people of Washington, and that was done, I suppose, to keep up the price to something like what the real estate men in Washington thought would furnish them a reasonable compensation. I understand the buildings were to be erected for the accommodation of war workers and to reduce the exorbitant price that had been charged on the outside. I have stated what has been my information as to the price fixed for people who have made arrangements to take possession of the buildings. Does the Senator know anything about it?

Mr. SWANSON. I understood the buildings were to be rented at a rate by which the Government would get about 5 or 6 per cent on the money invested. I feel that that is justified as a rental from any class of citizens. It was impossible to get buildings constructed here to take care of the war workers from various sections of the country, and the Government contemplated putting up these buildings and renting them, getting about 5 or 6 per cent return for the money invested. As to whether that has been executed or not, I am not prepared to say, nor as to what the charges are to be.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I am glad the Senator from Montana has brought up this question. These buildings very largely are being erected on public parks in Washington. They are being erected for a specific purpose. That purpose will disappear as soon as the urgency of the war pressure is removed and there will immediately be a pressure to pull the buildings down. If one will take a paper and pencil and figure up a moment or two, even based on the explanation which the Senator from Virginia has made, he will be able to determine that there will not be any reasonable return on the money, because the buildings have cost excessive amounts, and, in my judgment, work on those buildings should be stopped at once; it does not make any difference if they are seven-eighths completed.

Mr. SWANSON. The idea was that the Government could recoup itself for some of its expenditures. Of course the removal is finally to be determined by Congress. If Congress wants to remove them next week or a year or two years hence, Congress will determine as to whether the buildings put on these parks shall be removed or whether the Government shall obtain rent enough to get a reasonable compensation for the expenditure made or not.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield that I may put this proposition to him? It is obvious that after the completion of the buildings hundreds of thousands of dollars—at any rate, a very large sum—will be necessary to furnish them.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is being done now. They are putting the furniture in now.

Mr. SWANSON. I see that the chairman of the committee, Mr. REED, is present. I am satisfied that it is his purpose to make a thorough investigation of the entire expenditures in connection with housing all over the United States. I am not acquainted with it either here or elsewhere, but the amount of money spent elsewhere exceeds that in Washington. Of course the condition all over the country should be investigated and a policy outlined.

Mr. KING. I believe every dollar spent on those buildings now will be wasted, and it is a crime to continue any work on the buildings.

Mr. SWANSON. I am not prepared to say as to what would be the wiser course to pursue.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word. I do not understand that the primary purpose of constructing the buildings was to bring down the price of the rent of apartments in Washington, but the primary purpose, as I understand it, was to provide accommodations for war workers who could not find accommodations in the city, and the Government very properly undertook to provide accommodations. Up to the time that the armistice was declared the war workers were housed somewhere, and as a matter of course the number would be immediately diminished thereafter rather than increased. So it occurs to me that there never will be any occasion whatever for the use of these buildings for the purpose for which they were erected—to take care of war workers who could not find accommodations anywhere else. It occurs to me, therefore, that that is one of the things that should have been stopped the day after the armistice was declared, taking whatever loss was occasioned by reason of the construction already made. But I have observed day by day that the work goes on. I observe that the buildings are being fitted out with furniture, curtains are put at the windows, the grounds are being very nicely graded, and I presume probably lawns will be cultivated and all the attractions of the home will be attendant upon them.

They are very costly buildings that are in process of construction upon the Plaza; they are quite artistic in the style of architecture. I do not know to what purpose they could be devoted, but that ground was acquired for park purposes, and consequently the buildings there erected are going to be razed in the course of a very short time. As suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], I can not conceive how the Government can ever get back the money that it is even now expending in the construction of the buildings.

Mr. SWANSON. I could not express a definite opinion on the subject unless I knew what is the program outlined after the completion of the buildings and the rent expected and what would be saved out of the appropriation. I understand the policy is to complete the buildings, except where it is better for the Government to abandon them. Of course, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which the Senator from Missouri is the chairman, will think over this matter and ascertain the expenditures. We can rely upon the energy of the Senator from Missouri to pursue the matter to the fullest extent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will yield, I want to ask him who is managing the construction of the buildings and furnishing them down on the Plaza? It does seem to me we ought to get hold of whoever is doing it and choke them off from buying furniture and putting it into those buildings now. It is simply an inexcusable waste of public money, and the person responsible ought to be named and pilloried for it.

Mr. SWANSON. When the housing bill was before the Senate authority was given to the President to control the expenditure of the money. A Housing Commission was provided for under the bill as originally passed by the House. It was amended in the Senate by putting the President in control of it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is legislation that I am glad I voted against. I insisted that we ought to name some responsible person to do work of this kind, an officer of the United States Government on whom we could put our hands and have some influence over.

NEWS CABLE SERVICE IN PARIS.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, we have heard very much of late about the mode of communication between Paris and this country of the peace conference proceedings, and we have been told that there would be no restriction upon the news which would come to us respecting those proceedings. I am very glad indeed that we have thus been told, and I take it that that will be the fact. But in order that the Senate may be informed, for perhaps some have not read the particular dispatch, I wish to read a dispatch appearing this morning in the Washington Post from Paris upon this subject:

NEEDS OF 500 WRITERS EXCEED CABLE CAPACITY; 28,000 WORDS IS LIMIT.

PARIS, December 4.

With the arrival to-day from England of Edgar Sisson, accompanied by 5 assistants and 30 clerks, the advance guard of the Creel committee established itself here in anticipation of President Wilson's visit to Paris. They are quartered in a handsome 20-room house at 58 Avenue Montaigne, in the vicinity of the Champs Elysees. A housekeeper and a corps of servants had been provided in advance for the party.

It was explained to-night by a member of the party that every American official communication to the press must pass Mr. Creel.

Mr. Sisson in a talk with American correspondents here defined the objects of the committee during the peace negotiations.

The mission's function, said Mr. Sisson, would be solely to issue authentic statements on behalf of the American negotiators, designed to prevent mistakes that might creep into the American and foreign press if such a centralized system of authentic outgivings were not devised.

With the approach of President Wilson's arrival and the coming of the various peace delegates a unique situation in the history of telegraphic communication is expected to present itself. The cables between England and America are capable of transmitting 28,000 news words daily—positively no more, officials state. When it was reported the Orizaba would bring 500 writers, those here familiar with the capacity of the telegraph and cable connections expressed pessimism as to the possibility of giving every member of the huge army of correspondents a fair chance. There are only three cables supplying England, America, and Canada.

Already a plan has been set afoot for "rationing" wire space among the various news associations and individual reporters.

Mr. President, I am not concerned with the legal aspects of the President's trip. He determined to take it and we make the best of his determination. I am concerned with what may come to America of the proceedings of the peace conference, and I am concerned with whether the news that comes to us shall be "rationed" or whether it shall be censored.

I wanted to call the attention of my colleagues to this news item sent by cable from Paris so that they might, with me, if their views be similar to mine, protest against Mr. Creel "rationing" news from Paris or exercising censorship over that which shall come to us from the peace conference.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I had intended myself to read the article which has just been read by the distinguished Senator from California. I am very glad that he has called the attention of the Senate and of the country to this particular censorship. The article that he has read and the information it gives is in striking contrast with the language used by the President in the address that he delivered to Congress the other day, in which he said:

I shall be in close touch with you and with affairs on this side the water, and you will know all that I do. At my request, the French and English Governments have absolutely removed the censorship of cable news which until within a fortnight they had maintained and there is now no censorship whatever exercised at this end except upon attempted trade communications with enemy countries. It has been necessary to keep an open wire constantly available between Paris and the Department of State and another between France and the Department of War. In order that this might be done with the least possible interference with the other uses of the cables, I have temporarily taken over the control of both cables in order that they may be used as a single system. I did so at the advice of the most experienced cable officials, and I hope that the results will justify my hope that the news of the next few months may pass with the utmost freedom and with the least possible delay from each side of the sea to the other.

And is also strikingly inconsistent with a statement issued by the Postmaster General, as published in the Official Bulletin of the 3d of December, in which he says:

An understanding has been had with those who have the immediate direction of the trans-Atlantic cable service that every facility commensurate with its importance will be given the news associations and representatives of individual newspapers for handling press matter during the period of the peace conference. It is hoped that these agencies may be given the fullest opportunities for handling the development of the peace deliberation. No discrimination will be permitted; and press matter at press rates will, where possible to do so, not be shunted aside but handled promptly so as not to impair its value as news.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I know the Senator from Indiana has given very careful consideration to the subject of the cables, and I ask him to advise the Senate what is the daily capacity of the cables?

Mr. WATSON. I think that this article correctly states the capacity allotted to the press. I have not much doubt about that. I am not complaining about that.

Mr. WALSH. Then let me inquire of the Senator if some system of rationing will not be absolutely necessary?

Mr. WATSON. I want to say to the Senator from Montana that I am not complaining so much about the system of rationing as I am about the man who is to do the rationing; in other words, here is the proposition:

It was explained to-night by a member of the party that every American official communication to the press must pass Mr. Creel.

Who is to determine what is an "official communication"?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President; I did not intend to interrupt any animadversion that the Senator from Indiana might care to make with respect to that feature of it, but I merely desired to get the information myself as to whether, if the cables are limited in their capacity—and, of course, they are—some system of rationing will not be necessary.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, will my colleague permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. NEW. I think, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Montana, that it is fair to say that the total capacity of the cables between this country and Europe is much in excess of 28,000 words a day, but those 28,000 words referred to are already that portion of the capacity of the cables which has been rationed to the American press for their purposes.

Mr. WATSON. That is what I understand this article to mean.

Mr. NEW. It has been rationed to the American press for news purposes, and those 28,000 words are in turn to be parceled out by Mr. Creel in the capacity in which he is to act over there, as I understand.

Mr. WALSH. That is the information which I was desirous of getting. I should assume that, as a matter of course, some portion of the total capacity of the cables will necessarily be assigned by some one for the transmission of commercial and other general news.

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. So that if the demands upon the cables are greater than their ability to meet them some system of rationing must be put in force by some one in order to meet the situation.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana has concluded, I desire to say that my contention was at the time I made the remarks I made upon this floor when the cables were taken over that George Creel was to be taken to France in order that he might censor all the news that came to this country regarding the deliberations at the peace council. That is exactly what I believed then, and it is precisely what I believe now. This article simply confirms me in that opinion. I am not disturbed about the rationing; I am not disturbed about the capacity of the cables; but I am disturbed about the fact that the man who is to have absolute charge of every word that comes to this country respecting the deliberations of the peace council is George Creel and that George Creel was taken there for the express purpose of censoring it all and having charge of it all. That is what I complain of; and I again want to warn the American people that if George Creel is to send the words here and is to transmit the news here and if nothing is to be put on the wire except the things which he approves they should make very great allowance for their truthfulness and for their authenticity. It is for that purpose that I rose, and that only.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] I think have performed a needed public service in calling attention to the press reports referred to, as well as to a paragraph in the recent message just before the departure of the Executive in relation to the same subject.

I am not at all surprised at the exercise of the power, now that it has been assumed by Mr. Creel, having first been delegated and made possible by affirmative action in Congress. Congress has very largely been derelict in permitting such power to be delegated. I expected it to be unwisely exercised, and I fear I shall not be disappointed. I would be very glad to know otherwise, but the press report cabled from Paris under the date line read by the Senator from California and referred to by the Senator from Indiana only confirms what every Senator in this body believes, what every well-informed man in the press gallery knows, and what the general public who have given attention to the matter believe and know to be the purpose of the power so delegated. It was to muzzle the press, and for no other purpose, and I again call the public's attention to the fact that it will be exercised in that way.

I saw evidence of the purpose for which this power was to be used when the resolution was introduced which made possible the taking of the cables. After the belated action, the armistice having been signed, the cables were taken over. It was only cumulative evidence of the intent with which power was originally sought and was finally obtained. It is now being used in the way that every person here who gave the matter thought expected it to be used.

The very great array of clerical and other help taken by the head of the Committee on Public Information would betoken some expense to be paid out of the $1,250,000 heretofore appropriated by Congress for the support of this agency. I have no doubt there will be additional appropriations sought at the hands of Congress before it shall have completed its purposes. The conditions under which they render this service and the particular accommodations required—all of which are heralded in the very liberal arrangements made—would warrant the belief that other appropriations will be needed. The article here speaks of the "20-room house." Of course, the commissary must go along with that. Such needed help as would support in befitting state a representative of a public department of this Government would naturally occasion considerable expense. I have heretofore called attention to the very liberal arrangements that were made for the entertainment and support of this party abroad, of which Mr. Creel is only a portion. Such luxuries come high, but the administration must have them, and the people must foot the bills.

The expense of the cable service to the fathers and the mothers of the soldiers in the service has not been reduced since the Government acquired the cables.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. NEW. Before the Senator leaves that subject, I have heard it reported that among the other accessories provided and which were taken over on the George Washington were 12 new automobiles, just recently purchased. Does the Senator include them in the articles for which appropriations will probably be asked?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt, Mr. President, that appropriations will be necessary. Of course, what is necessary to support a mission of this kind is discretionary and depends upon the liberal ideas of those in authority and their desire to entertain and to give such eclât to the thing as might be considered essential, and a large number of automobiles might be thought necessary to that end. I am glad to have the Senator from Indiana call attention to this particular item of expenditure, which no doubt in due season will be before this body. It will furnish at least the foundation for appropriate comments in the absence of a majority vote against appropriations of that kind, if a seasonable statement is had, as the Senator from Indiana has already made it. It comes fitly, indeed, at a time when we have been for months admonished to save and diet and give. Advice in abundance but no example by those in authority.

Before leaving this matter, I was about to refer to the fact that when the cables were in private hands a special 6-cent rate per word was made possible by the private management of the cables to the parents of soldiers who desired to communicate with the capitals of the belligerent nations with which we are associated for the purpose of finding the latest news of their boys in the service. Since the Government has taken over the cables the old rate of 28 cents a word is now applicable to every father and mother who desires to cable to Europe to find out where their boys are. That is the old general rate. The 6-cent rate was a special rate made by the alleged "grasping private concerns" that owned the cables before the Government took them over. So much for promoting publicity and reasonable charges when they affect the sons of families, many of whom have not been heard from for months.

I have a neighbor in my home city who has three boys and one son-in-law in the service. All of them are enlisted men; they did not wait for the draft. One of the boys has not been heard of for more than three months, and the department is now cabling across trying to locate the whereabouts of this absent member. Some of the boys have been heard from, but as to this one about whom there is anxiety more than three months have elapsed without a word. It costs 28 cents a word to cable to London or to any other quarter reached by cable line under the beneficent management of the lines by Mr. Burleson, Postmaster General. I wish to add that to the benefits accruing from the cable seizure along with those Mr. Creel has already furnished.

I alluded, Mr. President, the other day to the fact that a good deal of expense would be incurred. I have here six Hoover menus prepared for Thanksgiving Day, which have just about as much to do with real benefit to the public as Mr. Creel's direction of the publicity service. They tell us what to eat; the Government reached those details long ago. These menus have been published since the armistice has been signed, and they provide six bills of fare for six days in the week, directing us how to subsist, running all the way from roast turkey and sweet potatoes down to roast goose and apple sauce—I am quoting literally from the bill of fare. So long as we are engaged in directing the individual what to do I should like to add that to the information the Senator from California has given on the sort of mental pabulum that should go along with physical nourishment. I ask that the menus referred to may be incorporated in the RECORD without reading as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SIX HOOVER MENUS ISSUED—"HOME-GROWN" THANKSGIVING DINNER URGED BY FOOD BOARD.

WASHINGTON, November 26, 1918.

Thanksgiving dinners of "extreme simplicity" are advocated by the Food Administration, which calls to mind that more than 300,000,000 people in the Eastern Hemisphere need food. The Food Administration says that a "home-grown" dinner is recommended, with simple menu, no waste, no imported food, and economy in the use of fats. "Feasting" during the holiday season is discouraged.

"Even with the armistice in effect the need for food saving with a view to world relief is greater than ever," says an announcement to-day.

The Food Administration suggests any one of these six simple menus as "appropriate and patriotic":

1. Roast turkey, potato stuffing, glazed sweet potatoes, string beans, pickles, turnips, onions, pumpkin pie.

2. Roast chicken, potato and celery stuffing, cranberry jelly, steamed squash, oyster plant, nuts, celery and apple salad (use locally grown nuts), plum pudding.

3. Roast pork, baked apples, cranberry jelly, squash, turnips, tomato salad (home canned tomatoes), marshmallow pudding.

4. Roast rabbit, creole stuffing, glazed sweet potatoes, cranberry sauce, head lettuce salad with mayonaise, celery, locally grown nuts, Indian pudding with raisins.

5. Roast goose, potato and walnut stuffing, apply sauce, giblet gravy, fried carrots, canned peas, fruit salad, sweet-potato pie.

6. Roast wild duck stuffed with apples, Belgian baked potatoes, stuffed olives, fried tomatoes, escalloped egg plant, cabbage salad, cranberry and apple pudding with cranberry pudding sauce.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, in addition to that, to show the latest activities of Mr. Creel before he left our shores, I wish to read from the Official Bulletin under date of November 22, 1918.

> Full many a gem of purest ray serene
> The dark, unfathom'd caves of ocean bear;
> Full many a flower is born to blush unseen
> And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

And, Mr. President, here is one of them. An imperative sense of public duty prompts me to rescue from the oblivion of the Official Bulletin of November 22, 1918, this Kohinoor of food conservation:

MORE THAN THREE MEALS WASTEFUL, FOOD ADMINISTRATION SAYS.

The real work—

This refers to farm life. The gentleman who will censor all of the news that may come to the public from Paris, having reached there with his vanguard of custodians of public information, prints this for the edification of the public—

The real work of farm life leaves little time or appetite for afternoon teas and late suppers. Nevertheless the request of the Food Administration that the fourth meal be discontinued until food conditions are less serious suggests to all people simple hospitality. Company for dinner or supper should mean to the earnest woman a real chance to teach conservation in an agreeable form. The church supper or community dinner, too, presents an opportunity to demonstrate how good is a dinner of simple home products and when well cooked should be a substitute for one of the three regular meals.

The extra meal and lavishness in food ought to be considered an offense against humanity and good taste so long as war-torn Europe needs to be comforted and fed.

The genius who discovered this priceless gem, Mr. President, ought not to be suffered to languish in obscurity. Here is something real satisfying to the farmer. Many of us from the western section of the country have constituents in the farming communities, and I know that they will welcome with hilarious delight the information furnished them in the Official Bulletin of November 22, 1918. The farmer is solemnly warned to abstain from pink teas and after-the-theater late suppers. I have not known any among my rural constituency who have recently been giving any teas of a winter or summer afternoon. I lately visited my home and many other of the Western States, and I know none of them who are engaged in that practice. Most of them have all of the members of their families out from dawn until dark trying to keep the food resources of this country from going to waste, in order that the starving ones of the world may be fed. I have seen children eight years of age kept out of school to take the places of the boys who are in the Army. They are not wasting food, and they need no advice from these self-constituted custodians of conservation, who do not know the first principles of production and whose entire lives, Mr. President, have been those of ultimate consumers, usually without any production on their part to be credited at any time to any of their activities.

I know of nothing that Mr. Creel ever produced in his life. He never even rolled a cigar that he smokes. He never produced a pound of cereals. He never milled any of them. He never raised a pound of meat of any kind. He does not know where the sources of production are in this country; and yet he not only censors our news from abroad but he undertakes to tell us how to live, how to produce, to eat, and even how to furnish our tables. For one, I am weary, and I shall seasonably protest here at all times and take the necessary course in the Senate to call the attention of the public generally to the expenditure of money to support a public officer for such superfluous service.

Ah, but this is a seasonable and thrice-blessed admonition, Mr. President, indeed! If it were not for this, the farmer by this time would be shucking corn in a silk tile and dress suit, with a caddie to attend him, to carry his husking gloves and swear at the mules; the Government must intervene to make him abstain from such luxuries by giving him this admonition in the Official Bulletin. His wife would be out with an 8 or 10 foot train, Mr. President, milking the cows, sitting on a mahogany stool with ebony legs, unless the Official Bulletin had thrown itself into the deadly breach.

The basement church supper is referred to here—a very necessary institution, and one with which we are all entirely familiar, both in the city and in the country towns. It is to be utilized as a substitute for one of the three regular meals. The other meal can be saved for the Hun, who may otherwise starve, since he has quit robbing others for his daily bread. This suggestion of Mr. Creel's possesses both novelty and utility. My information from "dry" headquarters is that the country will soon be in that condition. Free-lunch belts are rapidly fading from metropolitan centers. The church meal will furnish the nourishment without the alcoholic excitement. The degenerate rural gourmand, who yearns for caviare and nine kinds of liquor while he shovels potatoes into the root house, must be rebuked. "Simple home products" are the thing. Yes, indeed! He refers to them in the Official Bulletin. Well, let us begin at home. That is a good place, like charity. Let it begin there, but let it not remain there forever, of course. Let the presidential party that has now sailed fill its commissary with turnips, corn meal, and cabbages. Practice what you preach. Besides, it is popularly supposed that a simple diet of that kind and of such well-known articles will ward off seasickness. It will set a salutary example in high official life for the gourmandizing farmer who is now working 18 hours a day and helping feed the world. Lavish consumption of food at sea is often not assimilated or kept in the digestive tract for any great length of time; and if simplicity in diet were followed on the articles mentioned a great saving would result not only in comfort but to feed war-torn Europe, as well as recommending the simple life as a great public example.

I shall await further information on this subject with consuming impatience from the majority side of this Chamber, and from the press report from time to time by wireless, as it flashes on its way across the sea the news of this cavalcade to the peace council.

Rear Admiral Dr. Grayson and Creel both are of this retinue, as I have been informed. The admiral is a little late, wherever he is, to lend his presence to the imposing pageant of the German Navy's surrender. He ought to have been present. The world knows how much he contributed to breaking down Germany's sea power. Creel is the editor of the Official Bulletin, advising the farmer how to eat. With two such eminent authorities at the command of the country, the medical aspect of the balanced ration and a news report of the distinguished party in the act of taking nourishment are anxiously awaited.

I wish to say something, Mr. President, somewhat connected with this subject, addressed to the claim that every time some criticism is made it is an embarrassment or a heckling of the Executive or of the administration. We would have said the same things if he had stayed here; and why, in the language of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], is it to be taken as heaping things upon his defenseless head when he is gone? If a Senator, knowing that another one is to make some remarks about him, absents himself from his seat, the Senator remaining and still making the remarks is at liberty to say what he will in the Senator's absence. He can be present or not, as he likes.

At the other end of the Capitol, and among those who are impatient to mount the seat of power, there are interviews now anticipating the time when he shall rule. Edicts are issued from time to time, one in yesterday morning's press, saying that nothing should be said to interfere with the President's mission abroad. He must be immune in Congress and Creel must save him from a free press by censored cables. The gentleman seems to be impatient. He delivers his pronunciamento with the air of finality and the authority of a sultan; his ukase is made and published before he has even ascended the throne of power. He is much more powerful in Washington than he is at home. Upon two several occasions he has been seized with an unappeasable desire to have the delegates from his own State in a national convention. He never even nosed in under the starter's wire and got a delegate in his life. I shall be indifferent to instructions from this self-constituted dictator of the Republican Party hailing from Illinois, even if he does presume to have absorbed the Republican Party and be intent upon delivering orders to his future subjects. I am mentioning no names, as it would be a breach of the parliamentary rules to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The occupants of the galleries must preserve order.

Mr. SHERMAN. But I have not accepted his leadership, except when I was reconciled to defeat and expected the party to go into the ditch, and I never have been disappointed. He possesses no elements of leadership in the West, and none in his own State, outside of Hyde Park in South Chicago.

This is all I care to say at the present time; but I give due and timely warning that even if he be Speaker of the House his premature decrees do not bind the junior Senator from that State, nor will be he heeded in Illinois. I have had my difficulties with him in days past, and few there have ever paid any attention to him, because ordinarily it is not required; but because of his putative speakership he seems to be impatiently anticipating the day when he can deliver orders. If he wishes to lead, he will have to find some constituents outside his own State. He has never led his own State, and is unlikely to do so, and I respectfully suggest to him to represent something before he begins to publish proclamations and bestride the Republican Party in anticipation of his reign. Nobody will address him as the Muskingum County, Ohio, Democrats spoke of President Wilson. He will be "His Majesty" to nobody, not even to his own constituents. It is only by forbearance that he ever gets to Congress. It speaks well for the pursuits of private life in his district that nobody wants the place. Everybody would rather stay in Hyde Park than contest his seat. He can be spared for exile in Washington, and so they bid him Godspeed.

At one time he affably referred to the Senator now having the floor as a "two spot." I replied that such limited familiarity as I had possessed of the game in which that was an element had taught me that it was something you could not lose, and we contested to see who had the highest card in the pack. He started his campaign, he had his headquarters, he issued his literature, and after a casual observation of the political landscape he retired, and his name was not heard of thereafter. I hope he will not give me an occasion for further remarks; but if he does I shall be very happy at all times to promote harmony of the kind indicated.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I desire to ask if he is withdrawing the candidate for the speakership at this time? I want to know whether Champ Clark is to have an open field?

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, he is welcome to it as far as the Senator from Illinois is concerned. [Laughter.] I am cheerfully impartial, Mr. President. As between the two, I would not say even that I was "from Missouri." I would just as lief the honor would go to one as the other, personally. I suppose, politically, I ought to be loyal. We worked for the majority in the House; I contributed my drop in the bucket with the others; but I wish to warn the Republicans of the House and the Republicans of the United States, if they wish to dissipate their majority, let them choose such leaders and go into the ditch again. He belongs to that band of distinguished Tories who never learned anything and who never forgot anything, because they had not anything to forget.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms and his assistants at different doors must warn the occupants of the galleries about the rules of the Senate. The Chair is tired of calling attention to the rules. The doorkeepers are put there to know something. Let them tell the occupants of the galleries what the rules are.

Mr. SHERMAN. So, if there is to be a leadership, it ought to garner the result of a campaign usefully; but this alleged leader has never led. His proclamations are received with tumultuous laughter and his efforts to manage the party are accepted as notice to prepare for its obsequies. He is suffering from an obsession that a parliamentary rule is of more consequence than a constitutional limitation or delegated power in that instrument. He has dwelt in the atmosphere of parliamentary ruts so long that he has never learned to distinguish between the one and the other; and I think it my duty to warn Republicans that if they are to learn by lessons beginning in 1912 and extending to the 5th of November, 1918, they might as well consider maturely, with him in the saddle, where they are headed for and what kind of a leader they are following.

Probably I ought to be a Member of the other body. I could have gone there 20 years ago from the Rock Island district if I had wished. I would enjoy life better there, no doubt. I have this to say of the House, however: They had better cast about to get a leader that has a constituency at home and his own State behind him; and this that putative candidate never had, and he never will.

The rest of it I will say upon due provocation at some other time, if it comes. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any further morning business? [A pause.] Is any Senator desirous of discussing anything? [Laughter.] If not, the morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. J. Res. 356, joint resolution authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1918, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 4637.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, on yesterday I was about to present an amendment in the nature of a substitute, of which I gave notice some days ago. I now move to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert as a substitute therefor the amendment which I send to the desk. I ask that it may be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the proposed substitute and read to the end of section 1.

Mr. GRONNA. Does the Senator from Ohio wish to have the entire amendment read now? Would he rather not have the reading interrupted before it has been concluded?

Mr. POMERENE. I do want to have the entire amendment read, for the information of the Senate. I realize that many Senators have been engaged on very important committee work and I should like to have it in the RECORD, so that they may know what it is.

Mr. GRONNA. I was going to call attention to a certain provision in the first section, but if the Senator would rather have the amendment read through, I will defer it.

Mr. POMERENE. I would rather have it read through. Then I shall be glad to respond to any question I can.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of Mr. POMERENE's amendment, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That beginning with the 1st day of July next following the passage of this act there shall be deducted and withheld from the monthly salary, pay, or compensation of every officer or employee of the United States to whom this act applies an amount computed to the nearest tenth of a dollar that will be sufficient, with interest thereon at 4 per cent per annum, compounded annually, to purchase from the United States an annuity, payable quarterly throughout life, for every such employee on arrival at the age of retirement, as herein provided. The deductions herein provided for shall, in the case of employees who are in the service of the Government at the time this act goes into effect, not to exceed 8 per cent of the said salary, pay, or compensation; and shall be based on such annuity tables as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct, and interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, compounded annually, and shall be varied to correspond to any change in the rate of salary, pay, or compensation of the employee: Provided, however, That the deductions made from the salary, pay, or compensation of persons hereafter entering the service shall not exceed 8 per cent thereof, and such persons shall be entitled to such annuities only as said deductions with accumulations of interest thereon will purchase.

SEC. 2. That the amounts so deducted and withheld shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and credited, with interest thereon, to an individual account of the officer or employee from whose salary, pay, or compensation the deduction is made, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to invest and reinvest such funds or any portion of such funds in any of the following securities, namely: Bonds of the United States, bonds issued under the provisions of the Federal farm-loan act, bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of any State of the United States, or any county or municipal bonds which may be approved by the board of investments hereinafter provided for.

The moneys deducted from salaries and the income derived therefrom shall be held and invested, as above described, by the Secretary of the Treasury until paid, as is hereafter provided. Any deficiency in the fund hereby created to carry out the provisions of this act shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

For the purpose of aiding the Secretary of the Treasury in investing the funds and enforcing the provisions of this act, a board of investment is hereby created, composed of the Treasurer of the United States, one person to be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury from his department, and one person to be designated by the President from among the employees of the classified civil service. The members of the board of investment shall be sworn and shall hold office until others are appointed and qualified in their stead.

SEC. 3. That all those engaged in the classified civil service shall be retired at 70 years of age and shall be entitled to the annuities and benefits herein defined: Provided, however, That if within 30 days before an officer or employee reaches the retirement age, the head of the department or independent office in which he is employed certifies to the Secretary of the Treasury that by reason of his efficiency and willingness to remain in the service the further continuance of such officer or employee would be advantageous to the public service, he may be retained for a further period not exceeding two years, and at the end of two years, by similar certification, he may be continued for another period not exceeding two years. Upon the failure of the head of the department or independent office to make the above-described certificates, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to place such employee upon the retired list.

SEC. 4. That upon absolute separation from the classified civil service prior to the age of 60 years, and only upon such separation, the officer or employee may withdraw his savings then credited to his account, with the accumulations thereon, in one sum. In case of the death of an officer or employee while in the service the amount of his savings and accumulations thereon, shall be paid to his legal representatives.

SEC. 5. That upon separation from the classified civil service at any time within 10 years prior to the age of retirement the officer or employee shall receive such life annuity as his accumulated earnings, including the interest credited thereon, may purchase: Provided, however, That if said employee shall die before receiving in annuities a sum equal to his accumulated savings, including the interest credited thereon, together with the compound interest thereon as herein provided, then the balance remaining to his credit over and above the annuities received by him shall be paid to his legal representatives.

SEC. 6. That in case of reinstatement in the classified civil service of any person who at the time of his separation therefrom received a refund under section 4 of this act, he shall be deemed to be a new entrant to the service, and the monthly deductions from his salary shall be computed from his age at the date of such reinstatement unless he shall within 90 days after reinstatement pay to the Treasurer of the United States the amount refunded to him, which shall be applied toward the purchase of the annuity herein provided for and the deductions from his salary thereafter shall be only for such sums as may be necessary to pay for the balance of said annuity.

SEC. 7. That beginning with the 1st day of July next following the passage of this act every officer or employee then or thereafter in the classified civil service who at that time or thereafter shall have reached the retirement age shall be retired, and if in the service of the United States for 20 years or more shall receive from the United States during the remainder of his life an annuity, payable quarterly, equal to one-half of the average annual salary, pay, or compensation received during his entire period of service after July 1, 1912, such annuity not to exceed a maximum of $600, and to cease at his death. Those who have served less than 20 years shall be entitled to one-twentieth of such annuity for each year of said service: Provided, however, That if such officer or employee at his death shall not have received annuities equal to the amount of the savings and deductions from his salary, pay, or compensation, with compound interest, as hereinbefore provided, the United States shall pay to his legal representatives the balance remaining to his credit.

SEC. 8. Upon the retirement of officers and employees as herein provided during any fiscal year, the funds appropriated for their salaries which remain unexpended shall be applied as follows:

First. To the payment of their annuities;

Second. Ten per cent thereof shall be covered back into the Treasury; and Third. The balance shall be available in the department or independent office from which said employees are retired, for the appointment of other officers or employees in the lower grades. Except as herein provided, all annuities shall be paid out of appropriations specially made for that purpose.

SEC. 9. That every officer and employee in the classified civil service after this act takes effect shall be deemed to consent and agree to the deductions made and provided for herein and shall receipt in full for the salary, pay, or compensation which may be paid monthly or at any other time, and such payment shall be a full and complete discharge and acquittance of all claims and demands whatsoever for all services rendered by such person during the period covered by such payment, except his claim for the benefits to which he may be entitled under the provisions of this act, notwithstanding the provisions of sections 167, 168, and 169 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and of any other law, rule, or regulation affecting the salary, pay, or compensation of any person or persons employed in the classified civil service to whom this act applies.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall prepare and keep all needful tables, records, and accounts required for carrying out the provisions of this act, including data showing the mortality experience of the officers and employees in the service and the rate of withdrawal from such service, and any other information that may serve as a guide for future valuations and adjustments of the plan for the retirement of officers and employees. The Secretary of the Treasury shall make a detailed comparative report annually to Congress showing all receipts and disbursements, together with the total number of persons receiving annuities and the amounts paid them.

SEC. 11. That this act shall apply only to persons in the competitive classified civil service of the United States, including the District of Columbia, the Canal Zone, and the island possessions, whose salaries, pay, or compensation is paid from moneys of the United States and shall not apply to postmasters or to persons serving in positions excepted from examination, as defined in the civil-service rules. Whenever any person shall become separated from the classified civil service by reason of appointment in the unclassified service, such separation shall operate to take him out of the provisions of this act, except as to payment of any amount that may be due him. The President shall have power, in his discretion, to exclude from the operation of this act any group of employees whose tenure of office is intermittent or of uncertain duration.

SEC. 12. That none of the moneys mentioned by this act shall be assignable either in law or equity, or be subject to execution or levy by attachment, garnishment, or other legal process or to the payment of taxes, local, State, or Federal; nor shall any money paid to any employee or to the legal representatives of a deceased employee be subject to the payment of the debts of such employee.

SEC. 13. That for the clerical and other service and all other expenses necessary for carrying out the provisions of this act during the fiscal year 1917, including salaries and rent in the District of Columbia, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $20,000 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. No officer or employee receiving a regular salary or compensation from the Government shall receive any additional salary or compensation for any service rendered in connection with the system of retiring employees provided for by this act.

SEC. 14. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to perform or cause to be performed any or all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect; and his decision as to the amount to be deducted, the amount of interest to be credited, the amount of an annuity or refund to be paid, in any case, shall be final and conclusive and shall not be subject to review by any officer or authority.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that this amendment, if it is adopted, will destroy the bill that has been reported out by the committee. I think the committee's bill is the measure that should be adopted by the Senate.

I wish to state, further, that the proposed substitute would provide for the possible deduction of 8 per cent of the employee's salary, which in my judgment would be too unjust and unfair. I hope the Senate will vote down the amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am in favor of legislation that will give some aid to the employees of the Federal Government after they shall be too old to care for themselves. For many years I have advocated the passage of such a law. I must confess, however, Mr. President, that after reading both the bill reported by the Senator from Tennessee and also the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from Ohio I am not enthused over either measure. I do not believe that either one of them is scientifically drawn.

I confess, Mr. President, I have not had time to give it the study that a measure of this importance should be given. I know, however, that in the first section of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, which provides for an assessment up to 8 per cent of the salary of an employee receiving perhaps $900 or $1,000 a year, it would be a great burden to employees and it would be difficult to pay it. No such power should be given either to a department or to a board, because no employee could afford to pay 8 per cent of his salary when receiving only such a small amount as I have mentioned. If the Government of the United States is to be of any material help to the poor individuals who have been unable during their long service with the Federal Government to accumulate or lay aside any money we ought to be honest with them and enact legislation that will be of some substantial benefit to them.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio is in some respects better than the bill reported by the committee. For instance, in the matter of the investment of the funds I much prefer the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. It is more carefully drawn. It provides how the funds shall be invested. But I can not vote for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio making it possible for a superior officer or for a board which is to have this matter under control to levy an assessment of 8 per cent upon the people who are receiving such small wages.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. The Senator appreciates, of course, that if any annuity is to be paid to these civil employees it must be purchased either by the employee or by the Government or by both the employee and the Government. Three systems, I understand, have been adopted in various countries; that is to say, some countries have adopted the contributory system, where the Government pays it all; in others the employees pay it; and in other countries there is a division of the amount which will be paid for the purchase of the annuity.

I am not sure whether I understand the Senator's position. At this time, not knowing the commitment of the future, with the period of reconstruction before us, with the uncertainties attending the taking over of the railroads, the telegraphs, the telephones, with the uncertainties of the number of employees who will be under the civil service in the future, is the Senator in favor of a proposition that the Government shall now, without further investigation, without having suggested, using the Senator's words, "a scientific system," embark the Government upon a plan by which it shall pay any portion of the amount?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I always have a great deal of respect for the judgment of the able Senator from Utah. I will say to him very frankly that it would perhaps be better to have this matter deferred, but the bill is before us now. These two measures are before us, and while I fully realize that they only provide for a few of the employees who are in the civil service, and we have reason to believe it will be enlarged upon so as to include more, as the Senator from Utah says, I am, however, in favor of a law under which the Government of the United States will pay a certain portion of the annuity. I believe that after an employee has worked for the Federal Government until he becomes 68 or 70 years old and is then unable to perform any work he should not be thrown upon the charity of the cold world, because the Government can well afford to take care of him. I also believe that it would be in the interest of economy to do so. I dislike even to use the words "superannuated clerks," but I know that there are a great many people holding positions now to whom it is a hardship, and also it is a loss to the Federal Government; it is impossible for them to perform their full day's work.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator allow an interruption?

Mr. GRONNA. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator understands that there are 4,000, as shown by the proofs, now in the service of the Government who are absolutely incapacitated for doing any work, and their average rate is about $1,500 a year, amounting to about a $6,000,000 tax on the Government now.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I have read the report quite carefully, and I understand there are a great number who are unable to perform a real day's work. Of course I will not admit that all the amount which is being paid to those people would be a saving, because we must select people to take their places, but it is reasonable to suppose that younger men and younger women could be had who would be able to do two times and perhaps three times as much work as those old people are now performing. So in that way there will be a great deal of saving to the Government, and for that reason the Government of the United States can well afford to pay a portion of this cost. We should not only consider it from an economic standpoint, but I think it is the moral duty of the Government of the United States to take care of these people if it is found that they are unable to take care of themselves.

Mr. President, I was about to ask the Senator from Ohio, if he will kindly give me his attention, whether he will be willing to reduce the percentage to be assessed against the employees from 8 per cent to 4 per cent?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not think that that could be done under this system. I fear from what the Senator has said that he does not quite understand the plan embraced in the amendment, may I say, in view of a criticism which the Senator made, and I am not finding fault with that at all.

Mr. GRONNA. I understand.

Mr. POMERENE. The general framework of this bill is the same as that contained in the bill which was prepared by the efficiency commission appointed by President Taft. They had worked upon the matter for a year or longer—I can not state exactly the time—and had various extensive hearings, and there is a masterly report upon the subject. Later on the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] was the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and as he stated the other day in the Senate he prepared and the committee reported a bill to the Senate which is in substance the same as that which I have presented. When I became chairman of the committee I took up the matter and the committee with me. We had various hearings and heard a number of the experts who took part in the hearings of the efficiency commission appointed by President Taft. The bill in its present form is the result of the counsel and collaboration of the committee and of these various experts.

If I may say a word further with respect to the amount of the assessment, bear in mind 8 per cent is the maximum only, and that money, whatever is taken, is not taken by the Government for its own purposes, but the 8 per cent or any sum which may be assessed against the salaries is kept in an account by the Treasury with each individual employee, and it is invested at 4 per cent compound interest, compounded annually. These assessments are made in the first place based upon the salaries then paid, so that the amount derivable therefrom at the time the annuitants reach the retirement age will be sufficient to purchase an annuity of $600 or in no event not to exceed 50 per cent of the salary.

The 8 per cent can only apply to those who are in the advanced stages of life, and it may be said that they only have to pay it for a very much less length of time than do the other employees. The estimate which was given by Dr. Brown, who is now the chief of the Bureau of Efficiency, and I think one of the ablest students of this subject with whom I have come in contact, was that to those who were 20 years of age it would only cost 3 per cent. That is based upon what was believed to be an average salary of $1,138. I may say that I telephoned for these figures a little while ago, and the memorandum I have has been sent to me in a roundabout way, but I believe it to be practically correct.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course, the Senator from Ohio means by that that it would be only 3 per cent the first year. Undoubtedly, it would be more than 3 per cent later on, as the employees grow older.

Mr. POMERENE. No; if the salary remained the same, the assessment would be the same; if the salary was advanced, the assessment would be proportionately advanced; that is to say, assuming now, for the sake of argument, that it would take a 3 per cent assessment on a $1,200 salary, that would make the annual cost to the annuitant $36; but if he received a higher salary it would still be $36; so the per cent would be that much less.

The vice of the other system, as I conceive it, is this: In the bill as reported by the committee, which is known as the McKellar bill, there is made an assessment of 2½ per cent upon the salaries of all employees. I may say that the testimony shows that the cost of this system would not be 5 per cent, as the report indicates, but that it would be within a few tenths of 6 per cent, one-half of which would have to be paid by the Government and one-half, it is said, by the employee. But the difficulty is that that means, under the system that is adopted in the so-called McKellar plan, the maximum annuity which any employee can get being $600, that he must pay 2½ per cent for that annuity, whether he is old or young, whether he receives a salary of $1,000 or a salary of $5,000. So he is paying not only the cost of his own pension, but in part the cost of the pension of his fellow employee. In other words, if a man starts out with a salary of $1,200 his assessment is 2½ per cent, or $30 a year; but if, by reason of his attention to business, his talent, his development, he gets a position which pays him $5,000 a year—it may be in a few years—then he is required to pay 2½ per cent of his $5,000 salary, or $125 a year: and that will continue until he reaches the retirement age of 68 years; or, in the language of Dr. Maddrill, who was the expert actuary who appeared before the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, with this limitation of 2½ per cent many of the employees will have to pay twice the cost of their insurance or annuity that they would have to pay if they went to a private insurance company and bought the same annuity.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if I understand the McKellar bill, it provides that whatever is paid by an annuitant will be set aside to his personal credit.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. Both bills provide for that. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from North Dakota is correct as to that; but bear in mind, please, that when they are figuring the cost of the entire system, they say that to pay one-half the cost of the entire system will require 2½ per cent of all salaries, so that while this money will be actually returned later, yet the Government is having the use of the 2½ per cent; and if the 2½ per cent exceeds the cost of the annuity of a given employee, the other employees get the benefit of that. That is the difficulty of it. In other words—and I say this with all due respect to those who stand sponsors for this bill—when it is said that it is based upon the half-and-half plan, it is a deception, for some employees will be paying on the half-and-half plan, while certain other employees will be paying twice what should be the cost of the annuity.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota allow me to ask the Senator from Ohio a question there?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I was wondering if the Senator from Ohio understood the statement made by the Senator from North Dakota. I may have misunderstood the Senator from Ohio, but I merely intend to ask the question to clear the matter up.

Mr. POMERENE. I shall be very glad, if I have misstated anything, to correct it.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Ohio stated that the Senator from North Dakota was right when he asked whether or not every employee, no matter what he paid, when he got his annuity would get back everything that he had paid. Is that true?

Mr. POMERENE. I am speaking now with reference to the substitute bill. Let me speak of that first.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from North Dakota was asking the question with reference to the other bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Well, there is such a provision. Can the Senator from Tennessee refer to that section?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly. Of course, it is so arranged on the books of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau of the Government that each employee of the Government is entitled at all times to have the entire amount that he pays in refunded to him if he quits the service, with interest at 4 per cent.

Mr. NORRIS. If that be true, then I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio why he says that the employee, under the committee bill, would in some cases have to pay more money than he should; in other words, that he would have to pay for the benefit of some other employee, if he is getting back everything which he has paid in?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly. Perhaps, to speak more accurately, if the Senator from North Dakota will permit me, I should say that such employee is furnishing more money than is necessary.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. POMERENE. Just allow me to answer the question, if I can.

Note that under the substitute the total cost of this insurance for an employee 20 years of age is 3 per cent. That was the estimate. If you had a system based upon the half-and-half plan, then this employee would only have to contribute to the Government one-half of 3 per cent, or 1½ per cent. That would be the actual cost of one-half of the annuity which he is to get when he reaches the retirement age. But under the system proposed by the so-called McKellar bill they jump at the conclusion that half of the cost is to be 2½ per cent. Now, as a matter of fact, if the data which were furnished to our committee when I had the honor to preside over it are correct, then this 2½ per cent comes within one-half of 1 per cent of paying the entire cost of the annuity. Do I make myself clear?

Mr. GRONNA. I think I understand the Senator from Ohio. I think there is no substantial difference between the Senator from Ohio and myself. The only difference is that he can explain himself so much better than I can.

Mr. POMERENE. I am sure the Senator from North Dakota has no trouble in making himself understood.

Mr. GRONNA. I think I can make it clear, at least to some, that the employee who receives a higher salary and is assessed 2½ per cent makes a larger investment; but he also receives a larger return; in other words, he receives more interest for a larger annuity. That would be the way I should figure it from a banker's standpoint.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the difficulty is—and I will see if I can not make it a little clearer, perhaps—that if the 2½ per cent on the lower salaries, let us say of $1,200, amounts to $30 per year—and that is what it does amount to—under the so-called substitute plan, the cost of that insurance would be 3 per cent, or $36, while under the McKellar plan the 2½ per cent would amount to $30.

Now, let us go further. If the employee arrives at a point where he gets a salary of $5,000 a year, then he must pay 2½ per cent of that salary, or $125.

Mr. GRONNA. Why should he not pay more? He can afford to do so.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator allow me to be personal?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I will allow the Senator to be personal.

Mr. POMERENE. I know, and I am very glad of it, that my good friend the Senator from North Dakota has been more prosperous in gathering together this world's goods than I have been, but is that any reason why he should get a less salary than I?

Mr. GRONNA. It is no reason why I should get a less salary, but it is a reason why I should pay more taxes. If I have more goods than has the Senator from Ohio, there is no reason in the world why I should not pay more taxes.

Mr. POMERENE. I think that is all true, so far as the public expense is concerned, but when it comes to the purchase of an annuity to make provision for some one else's family or to make provision for his maintenance in his later years——

Mr. GRONNA. Well, now——

Mr. POMERENE. Just one moment—does it appeal to the Senator's sense of fairness that a given employee should help to support another employee's family?

Mr. GRONNA. No; but——

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me just a moment. In my judgment, if we are going to adopt a system of that kind, then I should prefer that this extra expense should be paid entirely out of the Public Treasury rather than to make one employee pay the expense of another.

Mr. GRONNA. I can agree with the Senator from Ohio, but I ask the Senator this question: Is the amount assessed for the employee credited to his account upon the books of the Government?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, yes.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Ohio answers "yes." Now, how could the employee paying a larger assessment be said to be discriminated against in favor of the employee who is receiving a smaller salary when every penny is credited to his account?

Mr. POMERENE. For this reason: If each employee was only paying one-half of the cost of his annuity, then it would be perfectly fair to have the system where one employee would be paying $30 a year and another employee paying $125 a year, and then out of the sum total of these payments that one one-half of the entire cost of the system is to be paid.

Mr. GRONNA. So that the Senator and I may not misunderstand each other, I understand that we agree upon the proposition that whatever the assessment may be against any employee it is credited to his personal account?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, yes.

Mr. GRONNA. We agree upon that?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, yes.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not also true that the employee who is assessed a larger percentage, or I will say a larger amount, also receives a larger annuity than the one who is assessed a less amount?

Mr. POMERENE. No; the annuity is the same. Please let me state that accurately now, if I can. The highest annuity that any employee can get is $600.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course that is based upon the time the employee has served.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Dakota will yield to me, I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. GRONNA. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is there any reason why any man in the civil service to-day can not buy an annuity without the amendment of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. POMERENE. Anybody can do it either under the system proposed in the substitute or under the system proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not take legislation to enable an employee to buy an annuity. The Senator's plan will simply compel each employee in the classified civil service to buy an annuity for his old age to which the Government contributes just a small proportion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me just a moment. Let us not confuse the idea. Both plans are compulsory.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know that.

Mr. POMERENE. Then, why does the Senator insist upon calling one system a compulsory plan and, by inference at least, saying that the other is not?

Mr. McKELLAR. One is compulsory——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment, if the Senator will permit me to answer the question. In one case the Government contributes half at the same time that the employee contributes half—and anyone can understand how the employee would be perfectly willing to have a system of that sort—while the other system merely makes it compulsory that he shall buy his own annuity. That is all there is to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Shall buy what?

Mr. McKELLAR. Shall buy his own annuity.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. Now, Mr. President, I should like to ask both Senators a question and have the Senator on his feet respond to it. The Senator from Tennessee has just given an outburst to the effect that we are going to compel the employee to buy his own annuity.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is under the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, if the Senator from Mississippi will pardon me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Under the Pomerene amendment we are going to compel him to buy his own annuity.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not want that; I am opposed to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My question is this: Does not the average country blacksmith, the average State school-teacher, the average Methodist or Baptist preacher in the backwoods have to buy his own annuity if he gets it at all? And what particular reason is there to set apart as a favored clan the people who hold office from the Government by their own choice and in nine cases out of ten because they can not earn as much in any other walk of life? And now, Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that I am not opposed to that plan. I believe it would be a help to those people to set aside a certain amount, but not a percentage which they could not afford to pay.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the Senator from Tennessee has indulged in an outburst of eloquence because this particular class is forced to provide for itself. Other classes of men have to provide for themselves, or else in their old age they go naked and hungry.

Mr. President, I am willing to vote for an old-age pension on the model of the British law; I am willing to vote for any sort of a scheme that permits anybody, whether a blacksmith, a Government employee, a preacher, or a teacher to provide for himself or herself by his or her own contributions; but I am not willing to set aside this cohort of men who have special influence with Senators and Representatives as a special and favored bureaucracy, in order that they may be permitted to have, either under the half-and-half plan or any other plan, without material expense to themselves, provision for their old age, when the country blacksmith, the school-teacher, the preacher, and the ordinary one-mule farmer have not got it. After 25 years of this sort of thing you will have a worse bureaucracy than they have in Prussia, and after 25 years of this sort of thing none of you will dare disobey an order that you get from the Letter Carriers' Association or from any other organization of employees; and very few of you dare do it now.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio has the floor. Does the Senator yield the floor?

Mr. POMERENE. I think the floor belongs to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. It does not make any difference, Mr. President, but I think I have the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, the Senator will have to get permission of the Senator who has the floor.

Mr. POMERENE. The floor belongs to the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. GRONNA. What is the necessity, may I ask the Senator from Mississippi, of having the Federal Government go into the insurance business if it is going to be a purely economic compulsory insurance system?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I would reply almost in the words of the marine-insurance act that we passed not long ago, if the Senator addresses me upon the economic side of the proposition, that we could do it cheaper and we could do it better and we could do it more satisfactorily to everybody; but I am not arguing that any man has any right at the expense of the other people of the United States to be taken care of in his old age. I am arguing that, if we are going to start a system of having people take care of themselves in their old age by compulsory contributions, it ought not to be confined merely to Government employees.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course all these employees have the privilege and the opportunity now of investing in life insurance without this proposed legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Absolutely; and where they are worth a continental cent they will take care of themselves and they have got enough to do it; they have more than the average school-teacher in Mississippi has. I do not know what the average school-teacher is paid in North Dakota; but the average school-teacher in Mississippi, who is charged with the responsibility of enlightening the next generation, while these employees are charged with nothing in particular, receives from $40 to $100 a month during the school term.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I heard the Senator from Mississippi just a few days ago say some very complimentary things about the English Government. Does the Senator know that the English Government established in 1834 and has maintained ever since, not on the half-and-half plan, as is proposed by this bill, but entirely at its own expense, a retirement system for its classified civil-service employees? I do not believe that the prediction of the Senator from Mississippi that the Government of the United States is going to the "demnition bow-wows" will come true if we pass this bill in the light of English history on the subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I never said that it would go to the "demnition bow-wows." I said you would become the mere obedient servants of the civil service——

Mr. McKELLAR. They have not become so in England.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And most of you are already.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator is mistaken in talking in that way.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am quite sure that he is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I remember the history of a distinguished Representative from the State of California who served with me in the other House, and I remember when the letter carriers declared war on him, as the Senator from North Dakota does—for the Senator was then a Member of the other House—they said his name was "Dennis"; that they were going to defeat him; and they found a Democrat mean enough to help do it. Why? Because he wanted to provide for the carriage of the mail at the cheapest rate for the Government that he could, instead of receiving his instructions from the letter carriers.

Now, Mr. President, in connection with the Senator's question, the English Government did, beginning about the time he says—I do not remember the date——

Mr. McKELLAR. It was 1834.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I presume the Senator is right about that. In 1834, or whenever it was, the English Government did inaugurate this sort of a system; but the English Government had the wisdom later on to see that if that sort of a system applied to Government employees it ought to apply to all the people in Great Britain who might reach old age naked and hungry;. and so they passed a universal old-age pension law, which is in existence now. That is what we ought to do.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I shall yield the floor in just a moment or two. I simply wanted to ask a question or two of the Senator from Ohio, and he has very kindly given me the information for which I asked.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And I very obtrusively intruded; and I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. GRONNA. I am not complaining at all, and I will presently take my seat.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I merely wished to bring to the attention of the Senator from North Dakota, the Senator from Ohio, and the Senator from Tennessee—all three—that while they were taking care of a particular class they were not paying much attention to protecting from the perils of old age a much more deserving part of the community.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not disagree with the Senator altogether; but I simply want to say, Mr. President, that I can see no earthly use of compulsory legislation requiring that every one of the Government's employees shall take a part of his salary and invest it in insurance; they are permitted to do so now.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from North Dakota has misunderstood the answer given by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to an inquiry of his. I bring it up because, if I do not properly understand it, I want to be informed. As I remember, the Senator from North Dakota understands that the Senator from Ohio said, affirmed by the Senator from Tennessee, that the employee got back all that he paid in, with 4 per cent interest.

Mr. GRONNA. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is not true, as I understand it.

Mr. McKELLAR. If he disconnects himself from the service before the limitation provided when the pension shall begin, then he gets it all back. Thereafter he gets the pension itself. It is perfectly plain.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is one of the peculiarities of the bill—and I do not know what explanation the Senator from Tennessee has to offer for it—that there would be hundreds of instances in which if the employee could separate himself from the service before he attains the age of 68, he would get a great deal more than if he remained in the service until he was 68 and was retired under the provisions of the bill. Why that is I do not know.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure the Senator is mistaken; that is not correct. Those are not the terms of the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I confess that before I asked the Senator from Ohio for the information he has already given I had not had the opportunity of giving this bill the study that I ought to have given to it. I realize that it is a measure of very great importance, but I know enough about financial affairs, Mr. President, and I know enough about how to figure percentages to know that if you are going to assess the employees 8 per cent of their salaries you do not have to ask for legislation here in order to give them an annuity in their old age. For 8 per cent paid to a private insurance company they can be taken care of fully as well as by what you are going to give them under the provisions of this bill. I make that statement without having given it very much study.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. The Senator awhile ago asked what reason is there for compelling Government employees to contribute to a fund from which they are to draw pensions if they pay into that fund all they take out. That was, in substance, the Senator's question. I think I can answer it. Understand, I am not by this committing myself to a support of this bill.

The ordinary man who gets a position in this life holds it just as long as his employer wants him to hold the position. The Government employee, under a law which we foolishly passed years ago, has a permanent position given to him, and he can not be gotten rid of except for cause, so that the Government has fastened upon itself a permanent employee. That system has developed this state of affairs, that as these employees become superannuated and incapable of performing their work, while the Government might discharge them upon the ground of incompetency, it nevertheless seems to be a cruel thing to do under those circumstances. Therefore the Government is in that sense compelled to carry these superannuated and sometimes useless employees upon its rolls. Under those circumstances the Government has a perfect right to say to these people who come here and seek permanent places under this law: "You shall contribute to a fund which will take care of you, so that when you do become superannuated we can let you go, and you will not stand here before us in the attitude of a person we are about to turn out to starve."

That is the reason why the Government has a perfect right to require these employees to pay for a pension. I think the Senator will see that there is a distinction.

Mr. GRONNA. I agree, Mr. President, that there is a distinction; but may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. We will say that there are two persons, one of whom goes into the employ of the Federal Government while the other one stays in the country. He works in the field or on the farm or in the factory. Now, the one who remains at home is not taxed by the community, is he? That person is not taxed by that community, is he?

Mr. REED. The one who remains at home?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. REED. Why, certainly he is taxed.

Mr. GRONNA. How is he taxed if he has nothing to pay taxes on?

Mr. REED. Oh, I can demonstrate to the Senator's satisfaction that there is not a man living who produces more than he absolutely eats up who is not taxed, and even then he pays it as he goes along and as he is eating. I shall try to make that clear, if the Senator will pardon me for a moment.

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly; I shall be glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. REED. Let me assume that I have not a dollar in the world, that I work for $9 a week, and that I rent a furnished room. When I rent that furnished room the landlord takes into account, first, the investment that he has in that property, or its value; second, the expense of keeping up that property, which includes the taxation. All of those expenses, in the aggregate, are taken out of the tenant; and I, as the $9-a-week laborer, occupying one of those rooms, pay my proportion of the taxes upon that property. Again, if the shoe manufacturer has to pay taxes—income, corporate taxes, or direct taxes upon his factory—that cost of taxation is carried into the hobnailed shoes that I buy at the store. Again, the profits that the wholesaler and the retailer were obliged to charge me included, as a part of their costs, the taxes and burdens that they pay.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course, that would apply to both.

Mr. REED. So that this applies now throughout. There is no person in the United States who is a consumer who does not pay taxes. There is no person in the United States who has a house to live in or a room to abide in who does not pay taxes. Therefore, when you propose to pay, out of the fund gathered from all of the taxpayers of this country, an annuity to a particular class of people in this country you are taxing one part of the people of this country for the benefit of that class or portion of the community. There is no escape from the logic of that situation.

If the Senator votes for this bill, or if I vote for it, we must do it with our eyes open to the fact that we are voting to tax the hired man on the farms of our States in order to create a fund to pension ladies and gentlemen in the city of Washington who hold better jobs than he can ever hope to hold in his life.

Mr. GRONNA. Let me say to the Senator from Missouri that the laboring man in my State received as high as $7 a day and board last summer and last fall, so I believe that he can afford to pay a little tax.

Mr. McKELLAR. And if the Senator will excuse me a minute, only a very small portion of the civil-service employees are in Washington. The greater proportion, by far, is outside.

Mr. REED. Well, now, let us see. You never get anywhere by getting a special instance that is outside of the ordinary rule. The Senator knows that the ordinary hired hand in his State before these war conditions arose received on an average of from $18 to $25 a month and his board, and at the same time that he was receiving that the salaried employees in the city of Washington were receiving on the average approximately $100 to $125 a month, some of them much more, and the day laborers in the city of Washington—I do not mean the unskilled labor, but the ones who work in these departments—were receiving a wage of—I must use my recollection on this—approximately, I think, $4 to $5 a day.

So if we pass this bill we do it with our eyes open. Let it be understood that there is no old-age pension provided for the hired men on the farms of our States, the miners in the mines of our States, or, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] said, the school-teachers of our States, the clerks working in stores in our States, the underpaid girls who work in the department stores and other places in our States; that there is no old-age pension for the factory employee who has labored in the sweatshops under unhealthful conditions; and that it is proposed to tax these people, and from their taxation, wrung from them, to create a fund to take care of people in the city of Washington who hold jobs so desirable that there is a constant struggle to obtain them from every part of the United States.

Now, that is the proposition. That is the cold, unvarnished, naked truth of this matter. The men who vote for this bill vote to tax these people for the benefit of other people who hold jobs so much better than the other people have that they fight to maintain them and insist upon every right that they have under the civil-service law.

The Senator from North Dakota—who usually gets right when he gets to thinking about these things, and generally starts out right, too—might as well face that. It does not answer it to say, "Oh, labor has been getting $6 or $7 a day in my State this year." That is abnormal—just as abnormal as the war. It is simply a part of the war.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator knows that the employees who were working for the Federal Government have been receiving very little more. That is true; is it not?

Mr. REED. The fact is, and it is always true, that salaries—especially the salaries fixed by law, and indeed some other salaries, but especially those fixed by law—do not go up or go down with the rapid fluctuations of values. For instance, there was a time a few years ago when money was at a very great value, when its purchasing power was very great, when wages all over the country were very low, when the salary of a Congressman was most lucrative. Then he was in clover. Then there came the period of high valuations and high wages that we are going through now. The Congressman to-day does not receive as much as many a head clerk does. He does not receive very much more than some people who are only skilled laborers. But when values get readjusted the salaried man gets back to a position of equity; and if he does not, if that does not come in a short time, then comes the cry to raise his wages, a cry that always is heard in the end.

Now, I appeal to the Senator's judgment on this matter. There is no use arguing questions for the simple sake of arguing. You would not need any civil-service law in order to keep people in their positions down here if it were not that the positions are desirable. They are desirable to-day. I have not any doubt that there are 30,000 clerks to-day in the city of Washington, brought in here by these war conditions, over half of whom would be glad to stay here and take these permanent positions. When I use the expression "thirty thousand," that is a guess. There are so many of them that I have no idea what the number is.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GRONNA. I do.

Mr. KING. Apropos of the statement just made by the Senator from Missouri, I have had more than 100 clerks who have come to Washington for war work appeal to me to try to get them under the civil service and keep them here in these Government positions, rather than go home, they are so enamored of the situations.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon an interruption, I wish to say that I have been called upon to-day by quite a number of clerks engaged in the service in Washington who have urged me to bring every possible influence to bear upon the heads of the departments in which they are now engaged to retain them permanently in the service. In the Government service they are receiving larger salaries than they enjoyed as school-teachers, farmers, clerks, and, in some instances, members of the bar. They really desire the work; all of which goes to show the esteem in which the average American citizen holds Government employment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, it is evident that my simple question has provoked a great deal of discussion. I want to get through. I have not yet said what I intended to say. I simply want to state my own position. I shall only take a minute or two of the Senate's time to say what I want to say upon this whole subject.

I realize that what all of the Senators have said is true. It is undoubtedly true that these employees are receiving, take it one year with the other, larger salaries than they receive in the country or in other employments. But, Mr. President, we must take the conditions as they are. There are different environments here. When I go into these departments and see these very old men and old women—and I know some of them—they have not been able to lay up a dollar for the future. They should have provided for their old age, of course; but that is a theory and not a condition. The actual condition is that we have here more than 4,000 of these old people, superannuated, too old to perform a day's work, and unable to take care of themselves. What are you going to do? Are you going to throw them out upon the cold world?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, how will this bill help them?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. GRONNA. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to ask my friend, the able Senator from North Dakota, if he does not find the same poverty, squalor, and want among the people who have devoted their lives to service in the factories, the houses of merchandise, the fields, and in the workshops—in other words, in all the vocations of life? Does he not find quite as much—really more—poverty, indigence, and suffering among the people of other vocations than he does among the employees here or elsewhere in the Government service?

Mr. GRONNA. No, Mr. President; I will say frankly to my good friend from Mississippi that we do not find it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Do you not find quite as much?

Mr. GRONNA. I come from a State where there are no rich people. We are a new State; nobody is rich, but there is not a single poorhouse in my State—not one.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Then you must be rich, all of you. Your condition is Utopian, and I congratulate you upon it.

Mr. GRONNA. But if they were so poor, our counties, our municipalities, or our State would provide for those institutions.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But you do not want them to do that. You are fortunate that the condition of your people is such that your State is not called upon to provide for the improvident aged poor in institutions of charity. I agree with my good friend, the able Senator, that it is a wise economy; it is an act of great wisdom and of social providence on the part of the Commonwealth—it may be a little bit socialistic in principle—to induce the citizen, even in the form of a tax put upon his property in the days of his prosperity, to lay aside something for a "rainy day," to take care of the old and helpless in the evening of life. That is all right and I most heartily commend the end sought to be attained. I am not opposed to the main principle upon which this proposed legislation is based, but I am unalterably opposed to the principle of partiality. I can not give my consent to any measure that has for its purpose the selection of a certain class of laborers or employees to whom special favors are vouchsafed by law and all other branches of business and vocations are taxed for their especial benefit. I do not think it is fair; it is not just. In fact, I regard it as the most pernicious principle in legislation. It is violative of the very genius of American institutions. No man or class of men would ask for such legislation if they did not feel that they had behind it a coercive influence. So far as I am personally concerned I am going to be just, and when I can be just and at the same time be generous in the performance of the functions of my place it will afford me great pleasure to do so.

Mr. GRONNA. Now, Mr. President, I want to ask my good friend from Mississippi a question.

Mr. VARDAMAN. All right; I will answer it if I can.

Mr. GRONNA. In the State of Mississippi, and in the State which I have the honor in part to represent, our people are not compelled to employ any person when he becomes old and inefficient. Is not that true?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes; it is true.

Mr. GRONNA. Conditions are different here in the city of Washington.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Certainly you are not compelled to employ anybody in your private business. The Government is not compelled to employ any certain individual, nor can any certain individual compel the Government to employ him or her. The Government does not contract or undertake to support an employee until he or she dies. The Government hires a man or woman for the service they are expected to render the Government, and not for the primary purpose of giving the individual employment; and when that person ceases to render acceptable or efficient service to the Government the Government is under no obligations to retain him any more than the Senator is under moral obligations to retain one of his field hands after he has performed the service for which he was first employed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. I will let the chairman of the committee answer that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I be indulged to ask a question of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I shall be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. VARDAMAN. And I shall be glad to answer the Senator's question, if I can.

Mr. McKELLAR. There are 4,000 old people in the employ of the Government whose employers, under a system that has existed for generations, have permitted them to remain in the Government employ without doing any work, because they are so old they can not do any work, and none is required of them. Do I understand the Senator from Mississippi to say that if he had the power he would turn out these 4,000 old people to graze at this time?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I have great sympathy with the men and women who have spent their lives and reached the evening thereof who have never been able to lay up something for a rainy day. It is a misfortune which confronts many of us both in public and private life, and always to be regretted. I think it is the duty of the State to enact laws protecting each man and woman in the enjoyment of the products of their toil, and, as far as human ingenuity can do so, to see that justice is done to all alike. Now, I would make some provision for the poor, helpless people described by the able Senator from Tennessee; but I would not solve that problem by the adoption of a pernicious measure of the character of the one under consideration. I would rather make a donation outright, or pass a bill pensioning these 4,000 employees, and then notify the balance of the employees of the Government that they must provide for their own support and maintenance, just as people in other walks of life are expected to take care of themselves; or I would provide for the contingency of misfortune, accident, and improvidence which comes to fruition in old age by an old-age pension law, and I would make it apply to all the people of all vocations alike, playing no favorites.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the Senator ever introduced such a bill?

Mr. VARDAMAN. No; I have not; but if I had introduced this bill or had anything to do with its preparation I would have made its benefactions apply equally to all classes of people.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am afraid the Senator from Mississippi does not understand this bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator's judgment of me in this instance is the quintessence of charity, for which I am profoundly grateful.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I said at the outset when I rose and made my inquiry of the able Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and he gave me the information I asked for, that neither of these measures is drawn on a scientific basis.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. GRONNA. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure the Senator does not want to be put in exactly that attitude. The bill which has been recommended by the committee is a bill that has been in the hands of the Bureau of Efficiency for about two years, and it is reported out by a Government expert.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not doubt that at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. And that Government expert said that it is a proper bill and effects this purpose.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the name of that expert?

Mr. McKELLAR. Dr. Maddrill.

Mr. REED. What is he a doctor of?

Mr. McKELLAR. He is a doctor of letters.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I find that Mr. Maddrill disapproves of the bill which the Senator from Tennessee has reported from the committee and favors a bill which imposes upon the employee the duty to make the contribution for his own annuity.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, quite the contrary. The Senator has not read what Dr. Maddrill—not at all.

Mr. KING. The Senator is wrong.

Mr. GRONNA. Well, Mr. President, I shall not find any fault with any of the gentlemen who have had this bill under consideration. Perhaps they are right and I am wrong; but I made the statement, and I am going to stick to it, that it is my opinion that neither of the bills is drawn upon a scientific basis. However, I am not going to discuss that now.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I think the Senator from North Dakota and I both have been very indulgent to one another, and I appreciate very much the Senator's courtesy in yielding; but in view of the statement made by the Senator from Tennessee, I want to read from the hearings before his committee, on page 26. Let me read what the chairman says about this matter:

The CHAIRMAN. From such examination as I have been able to give to the amended proposition, as suggested by you—it introduces many complications that it will be very hard for the legislative mind to understand. In other words, it will take an expert explanation, and it is going to be very difficult to get that into the legislative mind under any circumstances.

That is, by Dr. Maddrill—

[Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Ohio that I was perhaps speaking of my own legislative mind, because I am frank to say that the figures that were then given to me were never able to penetrate my mind, and I do not think they can penetrate the mind of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I admit that the virtues of the Senator's bill do not penetrate my mind. [Laughter.] I read further from the statement of the chairman of the committee:

The present bill is absolutely so simple that anybody can understand it. Here the employees are going to contribute half and the Government is going to contribute half, and the pensions provided are fairly equitable. At any rate, all of the employees are willing to contribute on this system that they understand themselves; it has perfectly plain terms; they know exactly what they are going to get. It does not take an expert to explain what they are going to contribute, and it does not take an expert to explain what they are going to get. They can look at the terms of the bill and see what they are going to get and they can look at the terms of the bill and know exactly what they are going to contribute. Why is not that the best system in the world under the particular conditions that confront us?

Now, Dr. Maddrill said, speaking of the bill reported by the Senator from Tennessee:

May I suggest this, that there are several defects in the bill, which I have pointed out, that seem to me to be fatal?

That is the expert that my friend is quoting.

Mr. GRONNA. I thank the Senator from Ohio. It simply shows that my poor judgment is sustained by that expert.

Mr. REED. And that even the legislative mind can appreciate the statement.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am going to vote for this bill, imperfect as I believe it to be, for the reason that I believe it is our moral duty to take care of these more than 4,000 people who seem to be unable to take care of themselves. There is no need in the world to enact legislation which will give an employee an opportunity to invest his money in life insurance. We have life insurance companies that are not run by the Federal Government; and I, for one, must confess that I do not believe we should enact this legislation, increasing the hardships upon these people who have hardly been able to live upon the salary paid them during the last two or three years. The salaries here in Washington may be high. They may be higher than they are in the country. As I said a moment ago, while we have no wealthy people in my State, we have no people there who are dependent upon the public. Poor as they may be, they have a home, humble though it may be. Most of them own a home, and we have not a single poorhouse in the State.

I believe, Mr. President, a measure of the kind I refer to is only fair in a great Government like ours, where so many people are overburdened with wealth. Look at the thousands of millionaires and billionaires. They have become so rich during these few years that they are being oppressed in taking care of their great fortunes. Yet, when it comes to a question of dividing a few thousand dollars among four thousand and a half of worthy old people who have done valiant service for the country, we hesitate to give it to them. Is that a democratic principle, I ask you? We have just gone through this tremendous war, promising not only our own people but the people of the world that we are going to take care of all the people, and here we are refusing to take care of at least four thousand and a half who we know are unable to take care of themselves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] as a substitute.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Johnson, Cal.	Page	Spencer
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Phelan	Sutherland
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Poindexter	Swanson
Curtis	King	Pollock	Trammell
Fletcher	Kirby	Pomerene	Underwood
France	McKellar	Ransdell	Vardaman
Gay	Martin, Ky.	Saulsbury	Walsh
Gronna	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Warren
Harding	Moses	Sheppard	Weeks
Hardwick	Myers	Sherman
Henderson	Norris	Smith, Mich.

Mr. KING. I wish to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. STERLING], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] are necessarily absent on official business.

Mr. PITTMAN. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] are necessarily detained in the Finance Committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on official business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. GOFF] is absent owing to illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. FERNALD, Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. KNOX, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. REED, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. THOMPSON, and Mr. WILLIAMS answered to their names when called.

Mr. KENYON, Mr. NEW, Mr. LENROOT, Mr. HALE, and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio to amplify his explanation in respect to a number of the provisions in the measure under consideration, particularly that provision wherein it states in substance that one-half of the amount to be paid for the annuity shall be contributed by the employees and one-half by the Government. I understood the Senator to say, and his statement is borne out by the testimony of Dr. Maddrill, that it would cost more than 5 per cent of the employee's compensation or salary to purchase an annuity. It would seem under the testimony of Dr. Maddrill and under the statement of the Senator from Ohio that more than 50 per cent of the cost of the purchase of the annuity was being imposed upon the Government.

I should like to have the Senator explain that, and also explain the provision of his substitute with respect to the 8 per cent of the compensation; that is, the maximum being 8 per cent. I should like to ask the Senator also to state, if he can, from the investigation made and the report of experts, if any have been made, what would be approximately the amount that would be required to be paid by the employees where they make the full contribution for the annuity.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the question of the Senator from Utah is very comprehensive, and it will necessitate perhaps my repeating to some extent what I have already said on the floor of the Senate.

I did make a statement to the effect that under the committee bill it would cost more than 5 per cent, and I based that upon Dr. Maddrill's statement to the effect that 5 per cent would be within a few tenths of 1 per cent less than the actual cost; in other words, that the actual total cost of the bill would be a few tenths of 1 per cent less than 6 per cent.

I did in substance say that many of these employees, if the McKellar bill were adopted, would have to pay more than 50 per cent of their pension. The information which we gleaned when I was a member of the committee was to the effect that when the young man or the young woman was 20 years of age the total cost of his or her pension would be 3 per cent of the average salary, which is $1,132. If the salary was twice that sum, then the total cost would only be 1½ per cent of the salary. If three times that sum, it would only be one-third of that amount, or 1 per cent of the salary.

I made the further objection to the bill that if we adopted the 2½ per cent assessment a man might be required to pay $30 per year or $125 per year, and he would only get the same pension as the one who paid less. In other words, if you analyze the McKellar bill, you will find that instead of calling it a fifty-fifty bill many of the employees would be required to pay not only 50 per cent of the cost of their annuity but in many instances they will have to pay 200 per cent, or twice what their actual pension will cost. I referred to the testimony of the committee's expert, Dr. Maddrill, who sustained that position.

So you have a system here under which the Government is first paying 50 per cent of the cost, and, assuming now that it only costs 5 per cent, you will have the employee paying 50 per cent of the cost of that pension, and even less than that, as I shall point out in a moment, but an amount that is equal to 200 per cent and more of the cost of the pension, depending on the amount of his salary and his age. I say that because under this system if a man is 67 years of age and he has been in the employ of the Government in the unclassified service for 14 years, not intending to be permanently with the Government, and afterwards thinks it is going to be to his pecuniary advantage to get into the classified service, and he gets into the classified service and stays there one year only, and makes certain back payments represented by the 14 years of service which he has rendered in the unclassified service, he is entitled to a pension of $420 a year. When you call that a fifty-fifty plan it is camouflage.

While the statement has been made here that all those of higher salaries want to do this, I wish to see the credentials authorizing these statements, and they have not been produced by those who make them. It is an easy matter for a man who sits here in Washington representing certain interests and, coming to a certain conclusion, to say, "I represent the employees in 48 States." Senators have had experience in similar committees. Amendments may be offered here on the floor of the Senate to-night at 4 o'clock and through the manipulation of some people who are interested here in Washington send out telegrams and to-morrow morning Senators receive telegrams from people all over their State, and, for that matter, from all over the United States, saying we are in favor of your amendment or we are against it. That kind of telegrams never leads me anywhere, and they are not very persuasive in character.

Now, then, let me go to the other proposition. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] speaks of the 8 per cent limitation in the substitute bill. I recognize the fact that if we were taking 8 per cent from all employees it would be an expensive proposition, but they fail to point to the fact that 8 per cent is the maximum that can be taken under all circumstances. This 8 per cent is the extreme amount that may be assessed, and it depends upon the age of the employee and the amount of his salary, and perhaps I ought to explain that preliminarily.

You will understand that the question of health does not enter into the annuity, or, in other words, the insurable character of the employee. The assessment will be based under the substitute plan on two facts which will be all-controlling. The one is the amount of the salary, the other is the age of the annuitant at the time the assessment is made. At the time when the actuary, Dr. Brown, made the estimate the average salary was $1,132; and assuming $1,132 to be the average salary, then on that salary, if he enters the service at the age of 20, the total cost of the annuity would be 3 per cent annually. If he enters at the age of 25, it would be 4 per cent annually. If at the age of 30, it would be 5 per cent annually. If at the age of 35, it would be 6.5 per cent annually. At the age of 40 it would be 8 per cent annually. At the age of 45, 11.5 per cent annually. At the age of 50, 16 per cent annually. At the age of 55, 23.5 per cent annually, and at the age of 60, 39 per cent annually. But his annuity, if he were 60 years of age, and was to pay the entire cost of it, would amount to 39 per cent of his salary. Under the plan that we have adopted the Government can only take 8 per cent and the other 31 per cent will be paid by the Government out of the public funds in the Treasury. Now, those figures are based upon a salary of $1,132. If the salary was twice that, or $2,264, then you would have to cut these estimates in two.

Mr. President, I wish I could get Senators to give this subject enough attention to understand the total cost of this system. We have the estimate under the substitute bill, which was furnished by Dr. Brown two years ago. I have it before me, and it will be found on page 39 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Tuesday. If all those who are 70 years of age are retired, their pension will cost the Government the first year $2,890,500. From year to year the number of the annuities will increase and the amount of the expense to the Government under this system will increase for a time, then decrease for a number of years, and ultimately be self-sustaining. In 21 years it will reach a maximum, or peak, as the actuary calls it, of $6,207,600, and then from that peak it runs down to the lowest point in 60 years from date, when it will cost the Government only $100 for the year. Then the entire system is self-sustaining, but the total cost to the Government during these 60 years until we get to a point where it will be self-sustaining will amount to $172,351,800. In other words, on the average it will cost the Government about $3,000,000 a year for 60 years, and then the plan will be self-sustaining.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. KING. Would those figures be continued if the number of the employees of Government within the civil service should increase, as they will, of course?

Mr. POMERENE. Of course, it is very difficult for me to say, because the number of employees retired may increase beyond present estimates, and that would increase the cost. Under all circumstances the assessments are limited to 8 per cent. That is the maximum, understand. So it is possible that the total cost during these years might be more than the figures indicated it, but after that time it will be completely self-sustaining.

Now, let me assume the case of an individual who is getting a salary of $100 a month. Suppose the Government does take the 8 per cent, it is not taking the money from him. It is saying to him simply this: "You are in the service, and you have been here for a good many years. We want you to set aside $8 a month, or $96 a year, and leave it here in a savings bank, so to speak, and we are going to pay you 4 per cent interest per annum, compounded annually upon that amount." In no event is he deprived of a dollar. If, after he becomes 70 years of age and he has paid his 8 per cent, it may be for only one year, he is then retired, and if he lives to be 100 years old the Government is paying him $600 a year for the remainder of his days. Now, that is the situation. But what about the cost of the other bill? I attribute no fault to the chairman of the committee, but it is just a little remarkable when you take into consideration the fact that they have only attempted to give the cost of their bill for a matter of six years. They only attempt to give you the amount of the assessments for six years, and they estimate that this will show a net surplus in the Treasury over and above the annuities to be paid the first year and will leave a large balance. That is like a good many other half truths. They lead to the worst kind of deception. It will be very interesting to Senators to have a complete statement from their actuaries giving the total cost for each of these years for the full period—60 years. They take no account of the fact that when they claim to retire about 7,500 superannuated employees the Government must replace them with perhaps 3,750 new clerks and they must be paid.

Let me point it out a little more carefully if I can, and I take their own figures for this. I will read from page 7 of the committee's report:

> For instance, the estimated receipts from employees during the year 1920 will be $9,000,000.

But they are only taking, according to their own statement, from the employees one half of the cost of this system. The other half is to be paid by the Government. In other words, by promise of the Government and by contributions from the employees, they expect to get in one year $18,000,000. Of course, you and I know that the pay roll of the Government is going to increase from year to year by the natural increment of employees, but assuming for the sake of argument that it does not, then you have $18,000,000 as the cost to the Government and employees together for one year, and for 60 years it amounts to $1,080,000,000. In other words, the Government will pay one-half of that, or $540,000,000, in 60 years, whereas the plan in the substitute bill will cost the Government $172,351,800 for the same term of years. My belief is this: I do not think Government employees are any different from anybody else; and while it may be that some of these gentlemen who are receiving the lower salaries are willing to pay 2½ per cent of their salary for the first part of their term of service, suppose they are advanced from time to time until the salaries become twice their present pay, how long will it be before they come in here with their petitions complaining and saying, "My insurance cost me 2½ per cent when I was only getting a small salary; you are not increasing my annuity, but my salary has been doubled, and you are taking from me twice the amount that you took at first." Wonderfully fair, that is! Yet employees are led to believe that this is a half-and-half plan. They will find out some day that it is not if the McKellar bill is adopted.

Mr. President, just one further thought, and then I am going to conclude. Much is said about employees receiving lower salaries and that they can not afford to pay. I have explained that they are not paying, but simply that they are setting it aside under a compulsory system in a savings bank for a rainy day; that is all. But, on the other hand, let us admit—and I think it is true—that there are many employees who are not getting as much compensation as they ought to have. That, however, is not a reason why we should fit a pension or annuity system to meet their lower salaries. It is a reason why their salaries should be increased. In other words, my thought is that the pay system and the pension system are two separate and distinct things and that we ought either to be for a pension or against a pension, and we ought not to be for or against it because a man is getting too much or too little pay, for some system of insurance has become a part of the system of the country. Every individual, with rare exceptions, carries a given amount of insurance. He does not carry it because he gets a high salary or a low salary, but he takes out his insurance because he wants some security against a rainy day. That is the situation here. If these salaries are not what they ought to be, then it is incumbent upon the Congress to increase salaries where they are too small and to lower them if any of them are too high.

Mr. President, I have occupied a good deal more time than I expected in this discussion, but I have gone into it so thoroughly in years gone by that I feel intensely the importance of the subject. I do not want the Government to adopt a system now that by later years of experience is going to be so offensive to the public that there will be a demand for its repeal.

I want to say to those employees who are here advocating this system that there are two steps to be taken and to be considered. One is, Shall we establish the retirement principle? The other is, After we shall have established the retirement principle, what shall the plan be? If they are a unit in desiring the retirement scheme, let us adopt a system here that will win to it the support of all. Then, after we have established a retirement system and it develops out of the abundance of experience that we shall have under it that there should be some changes, let us then make them.

If employees were drafted into the service, if they were compelled to remain in the service, then they could come with some grace and make their demands; but there is not one on the pay roll of the Government who was forced to come here. They have come into the departments, they have come into the public service, for the very reason that I am occupying the position I now have, namely, because I was ambitious to get into the Senate; they came into the Government service because they thought in the Government employ there was something of honor attached to it, and that it was a better-paying proposition than 95 per cent of them had before. Let us not forget that fact.

When people come to me and say the people back home are a unit for the system, I deny it. I say that in perfect candor. I know that those words are not welcome; but I am here as a public servant trying to do, as I have the light, that which will not only be rendering service to the employees of the Government but to the people back home as well.

Mr. President, I trust the substitute which I have offered will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the substitute for the bill which has been proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. There does not seem to be a quorum present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Johnson, Cal.	Moses	Shafroth
Calder	Johnson, S. Dak.	Myers	Sheppard
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	New	Sherman
Cummins	Kellogg	Norris	Smith, Mich.
Curtis	Kenyon	Page	Spencer
Fernald	King	Phelan	Sutherland
Fletcher	Kirby	Pittman	Swanson
France	Knox	Poindexter	Thompson
Gay	Lenroot	Pomerene	Trammell
Gronna	McKellar	Pollock	Underwood
Hale	McLean	Ransdell	Vardaman
Harding	Martin, Ky.	Reed	Walsh
Henderson	Martin, Va.	Saulsbury	Williams

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Ohio asks for the yeas and nays on his amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Tennessee to yield until I can have a resolution reported to the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the pending amendment. Let the roll be called, and then I shall yield to the Senator from Missouri with pleasure.

Mr. REED. But there may be further discussion. The fact is that I desire to ask some questions.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield immediately after the roll shall have been called on the pending Pomerene amendment.

Mr. REED. I want to ask a question or two about the amendment before it comes to a vote. The resolution which I desire reported I think will take but a moment for consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. But the trouble about it is that the yeas and nays have already been ordered.

Mr. REED. That stands.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the roll be called, and then I will yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. What I am trying to explain to the Senator is that the debate may yet go on for an hour.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am perfectly willing to yield to the Senator immediately after the calling of the roll on the Pomerene amendment.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Tennessee does not understand me. The yeas and nays have been ordered, but the roll call has not been started, and the Senator from Tennessee knows there may be further debate, which may last for a week.

Mr. McKELLAR. How long will the consideration of the resolution take which the Senator from Missouri desires reported?

Mr. REED. If the resolution requires any discussion I shall not ask that it be considered.

Mr. McKELLAR. With that understanding, I am perfectly willing to yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. Very well.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report back favorably without amendment Senate resolution 371, submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and I call the attention of that Senator to the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, S. Res. 371, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds or any subcommittee thereof be directed to inquire into the costs, construction, operation, maintenance, and future disposition of the public buildings of the Government of every nature, kind, and location and the program and contracts of the various departments of the Government with reference to future costs, construction, operation, maintenance, and disposition of the Government buildings of every nature, kind, and location, and report to the Senate thereon, together with their recommendation of any steps which they may deem advisable to take with a view to remedying conditions.

That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-fifth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not understand precisely what that resolution is. I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri what is the purport of the resolution?

Mr. REED. I can answer the Senator from Mississippi if the Senator from Kansas will permit me.

Mr. THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. REED. This is merely a resolution to authorize an investigation as to the expenditure of money for the putting up of public buildings. It grows out of the debate here this morning when there was a request for the information asked for by the resolution. That is all there is to the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The expense to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate?

Mr. REED. The ordinary expenses of the investigation are to be paid just like those of any other investigation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think I have any objection to the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN's name was called). I am requested to announce the absence of the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] on official business. If he were present, he would vote for the so-called Pomerene amendment. I understand he is paired with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. NELSON's name was called). I am requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] on official business, and also to announce the absence on official business of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. The two Senators are paired upon this question.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "aye."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and vote "yea."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when the name of Mr. THOMAS was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of official business.

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. TOWNSEND's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] on official business. Were he present he would vote against the Pomerene amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] on official business. I understand he is paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], who is detained from the Senate because of attendance on a committee of the Senate.

Mr. KELLOGG (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. May I inquire whether the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland, which I transfer to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and vote "yea."

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] are detained on official business.

So Mr. POMERENE's amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to further amendment.

Mr. REED. Do I understand that the substitute offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has been adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hope this bill will not be forced to a vote to-night. While the question has been debated for a number of days it has been a broken debate, occasioned by many topics and subjects that thrust themselves upon the consideration of the Senate. I wish for my part to deal justly with the employees of the Government, but I do not want to see the employees of the Government singled out for special benefits, those benefits to be paid for by the other citizens of the Republic. There is reason, as I have already suggested, why the Government may rightfully insist that if it gives to employees permanent positions those employees should contribute to a fund which will be sufficient to retire them when they are no longer able to work. Such a law would seem to be a necessary concomitant of permanent Government employment, because otherwise the Government will find itself in the position of having superannuated or disqualified employees upon its hands and be put to the hard condition of either discharging them when they are impoverished and old or of retaining them in their places when they are worthless. But, Mr. President, when it is proposed to take from the taxpayers of the country, who have no pension provided for them, the money with which to pay the pensions of the favored Government employees that is a different proposition.

We have a peculiar condition here in Washington. A bill like the one I have just been discussing ought to have been passed at the same time that we passed the civil-service act, and thereby provided practically for permanent employees for life positions. We did not do it, however, and now we find that there are a large number of old men and old women in Washington who have worked many years for the Government. Many of these people, if discharged, would be without any means of subsistence. So the Government is carrying them upon its rolls, at full pay, although they are incompetent to do the work for which they are paid.

I think this bill ought to go back to the committee. I think the committee ought to report to the Senate a bill providing some means to take care of the present superannuated employees who are without means, and they ought to be retired. Whatever the necessary expense may be we should assume it, because no provision has been made for these people in the past; and while we are under no legal obligation so to do, we are under that kind of moral constraint which comes when the heartstrings are pulling in one direction and cold business in another. That is a very badly mixed metaphor, but I will let it stand. I think the committee ought to report a clean-cut compulsory pension bill, so that in the future we will never find ourselves with a large number of employees upon our hands who are incapable of doing work and who have nothing to live upon.

That sort of bill I will gladly support; but I do not propose, as far as I am concerned, to levy taxes upon the people of the United States who have no pension, who have nobody to look after them, and who, if they have annuities, must pay for them out of their own pocket, for the benefit of Government employees who are all their lives getting better salaries, better pay, better compensation than is generally paid for similar labor. It is not fair to the rest of the people to give a man a life job—and that is substantially what he has under the civil service—and give him a salary which is so attractive that people all over the United States are clamoring for the position he has acquired, and, having given him that benefit, then proceed to tax the rest of the people to take care of him after he quits work. This question ought to be settled on its merits. It ought not to be settled by agitation or by agitators. So far as I am concerned, I have tried to be fair with the Government employee all the time; but I am getting a little tired of a Government employee lobby constantly being around the offices, like Oliver Twist, demanding more and still more.

My heart bleeds for some of these old, decrepit creatures who are barely able to crawl around the departments. It is true that they ought to have saved something from their wages in the past, but I take it most of them have not. Nevertheless, in order to deal generously or kindly with them we ought not to fasten a permanent burden upon the people of the United States.

It is useless to deny that these Government positions are attractive. Because they are attractive, they are sought after on every hand. The wages paid in these positions are fully up to the wages paid outside under normal conditions in similar occupations, and a little better. So you find boys and girls, men and women all over the United States taking civil-service examinations and clamoring for the places, demanding to know why they do not get the places, and insisting that they are not being treated fairly because they have not received them. When they obtain one of the positions it suits them so well that they insist on their right to stay there. They do stay there in preference to entering the ordinary vocations of life.

That is sufficient to show that the position is a little better than the ordinary position they could get. We make that position permanent by virtue of the civil-service law, so that they are not like the general man, liable to be discharged at any moment, and under the disagreeable tension that the job may not exist the first of the next week or the first of the next month. Altogether the position is a desirable one for them. Now it is proposed to pay them a pension, and to pay it by taxing the rest of the people of the United States.

Let us see just how that will work. Who looks after the farmer in his old age? The poor master, unless the farmer has looked after himself. Who looks after the miner in his old age? The poor master, unless he has looked after himself. Who looks after the lawyer in his old age, if he has not saved money, if he has nothing put by? The poor master. Not often, perhaps, does this fall to the lot of the lawyer, and yet it does fall to him. Who looks after the poor girl who works in the department stores? She, again, must shift for her living. She has no permanent job, and if she grows old and superannuated, then God have pity upon her!

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I was interested in what the Senator said in regard to the lawyers. It may refresh the Senator's recollection when I state that the average earnings of the lawyers of the United States before the war, as shown by recent statistics, were approximately between $750 and $800 per year. The average earnings of school-teachers were considerably less; and the average earnings of the American people, wage earners, were somewhere between $500 and $600. So that the employees of the Government here in Washington and elsewhere under the civil service are getting very much more than the working people throughout the United States, and many of the professional classes, too.

Mr. REED. Under normal conditions.

Mr. KING. I mean, of course, under normal conditions.

Mr. REED. We might as well look at this question fairly. It is not to be settled, or ought not to be settled, by a resolution passed in some labor council. I have the utmost respect for those organizations, but I asked a member of one of them the other day if he thought it was right to tax the union carpenter who was working in Kansas City to pay an annuity to a civil-service gentleman who was working down here in the gun factory, when nobody took care of the carpenter out there. My friend could not answer the question. I ask the same question now. But, returning to my theme, take the school-teacher.

The school-teachers of the United States are paid on the average from one-half to one-third what is paid here to Government clerks. Who takes care of the school-teachers in their old age? Who pays them annuities? The Senator from Mississippi said that if we were going to provide an old-age pension or a disqualification pension for the employees of the United States Government, we ought to do it for all of the people of the United States at the same time and not single out the favorites of the Government. Is that not a just proposition?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Mississippi cited as his authority the English Government, which I have previously cited, and said that they started with pensioning the civil employees in 1834, and added these two afterwards. If the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Mississippi believe in the theory of old-age pensions, which I am frank to say I have not examined, is it possible that these distinguished Senators believe that it can be done all at one fell swoop; or would it be wise to follow the example of the English Government, which has had experience in it?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there are three or four answers to that proposition. The first one is that it does not make a particle of difference to me what the English Government has done or what it has not done. It may have acted wisely, and it may have acted unwisely. The English Government used to sell, and for many years did sell, its commissions in the army. That would have afforded no reason for us to have ever done it in this country. The English Government has a titled aristocracy that constitutes the English House of Lords. That is no reason why we should have it here. The English Government has a King. That is no reason why we should have one here. The English Government has classes among its people. That is no reason why we should have them here. England has sovereigns and citizens; we have sovereign citizens.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. REED. The English Government has a good many things that I would not have here if I had to start a rebellion to prevent it.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will yield——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. That may be all true; but every other government on earth except the United States Government and the Government of Turkey and perhaps the Government of Venezuela, in South America, has established a system of retirement for its civil-service employees. Is it possible that all other governments on earth are wrong and that only the Government of the United States and the Government of Turkey are right?

Mr. REED. Now, the Senator has emigrated from England and spread himself out over all the world. That is too big a territory for me to discuss; but I want to say to the Senator that it is not true that every government on earth has a civil-service system in its government.

Mr. McKELLAR. There may be some forms of government down in the South African countries that I do not know anything about.

Mr. REED. No; more than that. But I do not intend to follow this in detail. How much good does it do to know that some other Government has done something to a certain class of employees unless you know about the employees? Suppose that the German Government provided for its soldiers a pension of a certain amount, and you cited that as an example—would it help us out any? An American soldier gets a dollar a day. I understand that a German soldier gets about 4 cents a day. A man who gets 4 cents a day has to have a pension when he can not work any more or he would starve to death. The other man might or might not need a pension. Conditions of life make these differences. What about the salaries in these countries? Are they paid $100 a month? Are they paid $150 a month? Do they have the opportunity of promotion up to $3,000 or $4,000? Are they paid $6, $7, and $8 a day as wage earners? Is that the condition you find in England?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the question is addressed to me, I shall take a great deal of pleasure in answering it. The pensions granted to the civil-service employees are in proportion to the salaries paid by the Government.

Mr. REED. That is not the question I am raising.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; that is precisely the same question.

Mr. REED. No; it is not. The Senator does not understand my proposition.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think I do.

Mr. REED. Suppose in the United States we pay a clerk $2,000 a year. Suppose, merely for illustration, the same kind of a clerk in England gets but $300 a year. Manifestly there is more equity in pensioning the poor creature who has been starved all his life over there than there is pensioning the one who gets $2,000 a year here.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, there might be.

Mr. REED. There might be? I should say there would be.

Mr. McKELLAR. There might be a case singled out in that way; but taking the general rule, the pensions accord with the salaries paid, just as we propose in this bill to make the pensions accord with the salaries paid.

Mr. REED. That is absolutely unjust. It proceeds upon the idea that if the Government has paid to one man good wages all his life it also will pay him a big pension after he quits work. But if the Government has paid another small wages all his life, it will dole out to him a meager pension after he can no longer work. Thus you give the man who never had a chance to lay by anything for a rainy day the little pension, while you give to the man who has had a chance to amass a competence a larger pension.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator manifestly has not read this bill. If he had read this bill he would know that that is not what this bill provides.

Mr. REED. That is just what the Senator said.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; not at all. The bill provides that they shall be divided into four classes, and paid $600 in one class, $540 in another class, $480 in the next class, and $420 in the last class.

Mr. REED. Exactly. Well, I just took the Senator's own statement; that was all. I took the statement the Senator had just made, and I commented on it. I think his statement just made confirms me.

Now, Mr. President, I want to return to my theme. Who is going to pay the old man in the Senator's own State who has worked hard all his life at common labor? Who is taking care of him? Who is pensioning him?

Mr. McKELLAR. If he was a Federal soldier the Federal Government is pensioning him, and if he was a Confederate soldier the State of Tennessee is pensioning him. We are trying to protect them and care for them, just as we are trying to do in this bill.

Mr. REED. Suppose he was a soldier in neither army, but just a plain, ordinary citizen. The soldier, of course, stands in a class by himself. He has been pensioned because of his heroic sacrifice of the richest and best years of his life.

Mr. McKELLAR. Sometimes he has and sometimes he has not. Sometimes he has been put on the roll by Congress when he has never been in the Army.

Mr. REED. Oh, well, the Senator is merely dodging the question.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I am not.

Mr. REED. The Senator is trying to take an exception to a general rule and is arguing from that. The Senator can not put up the soldier pension roll as an argument. The soldiers have been pensioned for different reasons than the one that is being assigned here. They will be pensioned, some of these boys that come back from France, not because of the reasons assigned for this bill, not upon that basis, but upon the basis that they imperiled their lives and their health in defense of their country while others escaped that ordeal.

Let me tell you why foreign countries do not furnish a very good example on the question of old-age pensions. The old-age pension proposition in European countries grows out of conditions that are a disgrace to those countries. Men are born substantially to one place in life. They have little opportunity given to them. They are often compelled to work for a wage that does not permit the gathering of a competence. Although they have pinched and starved throughout their entire lives, when the shadows of old age engulf them, when they are groping and staggering toward the tomb and no longer able to support themselves, they become public charges. It is because of those conditions which obtain in Europe that they have the old-age pensions.

In this country we have had a different theory. We have contended that a man ought to be taught to take care of himself, that he ought to have a chance to make a living, a chance to save something, to take care of himself in old age, so that he would not be a public charge, so that he would not be a pauper, so that he would not require the crutch of government to hobble through the world upon. That has been our theory of government—a theory upon which we have prospered beyond every other nation on earth—a theory that has developed a manhood in this country that I unhesitatingly pronounce superior to the manhood of any other country under the sun.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED. I will yield for a question, of course.

Mr. McKELLAR. What does the Senator do in his own State with the helpless and superannuated? Does not the State take care of them in the State of Missouri?

Mr. REED. Oh, no, Mr. President; not in the sense that the Senator employs.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was honest in that. They do in my State.

Mr. REED. The Senator is discussing something that I did not say. I was asking the Senator who provided a pension for these people in the respective States, trying to make it plain to the Senator that while this bill proposes to single out the Government employee and take care of him nobody proposes to pension the faithful servants and laborers of the States, but, on the other hand, it is intended to tax them for the benefit of the Government employees.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to make a suggestion to the Senator. In his own State the government of the State of Missouri singles out the old people in that State, and not only pensions them in the truest sense of the word, but it furnishes houses for them, it furnishes help for them, it furnishes clothes for them. After all, it is just a question of the method, whether you furnish poorhouses for them or whether you furnish pensions for them. The principle is precisely the same.

Mr. VARDAMAN. There are poorhouses and palaces; that is the difference.

Mr. McKELLAR. Quite the contrary.

Mr. REED. The Senator is talking about my State and making an assertion about it that does not exist at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. Have you no poorhouses in the State of Missouri?

Mr. REED. Yes; we have a few; but the Senator has been talking about the State of Missouri pensioning the old people of Missouri. The Senator insists on arguing everything but the case at issue. The alternative for pensions is not poorhouses.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the practical alternative.

Mr. REED. If that be true, then your bill ought to provide for pensions for all the old people of the United States, and not leave the poorhouses to take care of everybody except the favored Government employees. Why should you send the unfortunates of Tennessee to the poorhouses of Tennessee and pension the employees in Washington, who have been paid more money all the years they have worked here than similar employments pay in your own State?

Why have you got poorhouses in Tennessee, if you want to make that kind of a comparison? You have them because it is better to keep unfortunates in poorhouses than to let them starve. But that is not the question we are discussing. We are not discussing the question whether people, when they are impoverished and in want, shall be allowed to starve. We are discussing the question whether a few people out of all the people of the United States shall be singled out, and, first, be given a better salary than is paid in similar private employments; second, be given jobs for life; third, be given pensions. We are asking whether these pensions should be paid for by taxes wrung from people who have neither a Government job nor a Government pension. We are inquiring whether the Government employee should have a pension even though he possess a competence and the citizen who never had a Government job should in old age, if helpless and poor, be given a ticket to the poorhouse? That is what we are discussing. You may wiggle and twist, and twist and wiggle, and squirm from now until eternity shall dawn, and you have got to come back to that proposition. You can not get away from it.

Let us see. Somebody said here this afternoon the poor people, the laborers in the States, did not have to pay any taxes. I answered that then, but I want to answer it now in connection with what I am saying. There was never a bigger fallacy in the world than that. The man who sleeps in a rented furnished room when he pays his rent pays the taxes upon that room. The man who wears a pair of hobnailed shoes when he buys them pays a part of the taxes of the retail dealer, of the jobber, of the manufacturer, of the tanner who tanned the skin, and of the farmer who raised the cattle. In the last analysis everybody in the world who is not a pauper is a taxpayer. The burden rests upon all. So when it is proposed to pension the $150 a month clerk in Washington and pay that pension out of taxes, let it be understood that the $50 a month country schoolteacher in Tennessee pays her part of the pension and has no pension provided her. The $50 a month clerk——

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. One moment. The $50 a month clerk in the bank in Tennessee or North Dakota pays a part of that pension and has none provided for himself.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. In just a moment. Let it be understood that the $2 a day laboring man working on the section pays a part of that pension and nobody provides a pension for him. The farmer in his field in Tennessee or North Dakota or Missouri pays a part of that pension, but if anybody furnishes an annuity for him it is after he has paid for it in coin of the realm taken from his own pocket. The blacksmith, the groceryman, the carpenter, all classes of men in all the States you must acknowledge will be taxed for the purpose of paying the pension of the clerk in Washington. But there is no pension provided for these ordinary citizens. In their old age and poverty you propose to send them to the poor farm. Mr. President, gentlemen may seek to justify that, but it is favoritism, pure and simple.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I would not disturb the Senator, but in discussing the question he does me an injustice in the few remarks which I made. It was said by some Senators that these clerks paid no taxes. I think I made the statement that neither does the laboring man on the farm pay taxes. I know as well as the Senator from Missouri, at least I know to a certain extent, that every man pays a consumption tax.

Mr. REED. The clerk pays just the same as these other people.

Mr. GRONNA. But the Senator will admit, I am sure, that these clerks do not buy hobnailed shoes, they buy some other kind of shoes, and they pay proportionately the same tax that the people on the farm pay.

Mr. REED. Let me answer that. It is true the clerk in Washington who consumes, who has rent to pay, pays taxes just the same as these other people similarly situated pay taxes, and those taxes go into the Government Treasury. Now, all having contributed to a common fund, you propose to have one class take out of the common fund certain benefits you deny to all others. One class is to get back a part of that tax and the other class is not.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will permit another interruption——

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. I think the Senator and I quite agree, or we are not very far apart. I stated at the outset, in the few remarks I made, that my sympathy is for the 4,500 superannuated clerks who are not performing efficient service, who have no way of taking care of themselves. We ought to make some provision for them. I think the Senator from Missouri agrees that that ought to be done.

Mr. REED. I am willing to do that as an act of grace.

Mr. GRONNA. I made the further statement that I believe both these measures were unscientifically drawn.

Mr. REED. I agree with that.

Mr. GRONNA. I think the Senator from Ohio, whose amendment I opposed, read from the hearings or from some document where some expert supported that statement. I am perfectly willing, and I take it from the course on which the Senator from Missouri has set out, knowing him as well as I do, that he is willing to support some legislation that will help out the 4,500 people who are here at the expense of the Government, unable to perform efficient service. However, they are here, and we ought to take care of them. Is it not true that we ought to have some legislation for their relief?

Mr. REED. Exactly so. I say that this bill ought to go back to the committee, and a bill should be brought in with a provision to take care of these superannuated clerks, carefully guarded of course, so that we will not find ourselves taking care of people who do not need help, and then there ought to be, if you desire——

Mr. McKELLAR. And let the Government bear it all?

Mr. REED. Yes; that part of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is very much more than we propose.

Mr. REED. Oh, no. Then let the other people be provided for out of funds to be paid by the employees themselves.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is no man in the Senate for whom I have greater admiration, especially for his ability as a debater and a reasoner, than the Senator from Missouri, and I wish to ask him this question: When he labors so carefully and in such detail as to the laboring man, as to the schoolteacher, as to the man on the farm, the man in the shop, who has the great burden of taxation, does not the Senator think he is just a little unfair in his argument, because he has not mentioned that other great body of people who pay the real income of this Government and from whose taxes this annuity is to be most largely obtained? I have not heard the Senator say anything about those who pay the income taxes of the country, the wealth of the great corporations of the country, that pays almost seven-eighths of the taxes of the country.

Mr. REED. If the Senator had followed my line of reasoning a little more carefully, he would have found that I had absolutely included them.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not so understand. I thought the Senator was laying very little stress on the capitalistic classes.

Mr. REED. I am going to make it so plain that the Senator will understand. I said that the man who rented a room, who did not have a dollar on earth except his daily wage, paid the taxes upon that building proportionately; that the man who wears shoes paid the taxes proportionately with the retail dealer, the wholesale dealer, and the manufacturer. I in effect said that in the end the burdens of government, no matter how you may seek to avoid or obscure it, must at last fall upon the great producing classes. It is true that when men have gathered enormous profits the tax upon those profits is primarily collected from them, so that apparently the taxes are largely collected from the capitalistic classes, but the capitalistic classes, if we may use the term "classes," and I do not say it offensively, transfer that tax right down the line, as I have shown, to the ultimate consumer. This they do without the least "variation or shadow of turning." It is practically the universal rule. So while I did not name capitalists specifically, they were nevertheless covered in my illustration.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 6, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

THURSDAY, December 5, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Representative TEMPLE offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, we thank Thee for Thy goodness which Thou hast revealed to us. We recognize Thee as the King of Kings, the Governor among the nations, and we pray that Thy blessings may be upon this Nation. Guide the deliberations of those who attempt wise laws. SANATORIUM FOR DISCHARGED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12917.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12917, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not, and the Doorkeeper will close the doors and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it takes a call of the House.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will say aye——

Mr. MANN. But the point of no quorum was made before that motion was put and the Chair decided there was no quorum present and the Chair can not now put the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not understand the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The Chair had decided there was no quorum present. The Chair can not now put a motion before the House except a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 307 gentlemen answered to their names—a quorum.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

The question was taken, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12917, with Mr. FOSTER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12917, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12917) to provide for the establishment of a sanatorium for the treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. According to previous arrangement made, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is now recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is an important bill sought to be connected with an important service. I do not believe there is a single man on either side of this House, under existing conditions, who desires to vote for something that ought not to be voted for. I have no attack to make upon Dawson Springs. I never was there. I know nothing of it, except as I have made a little inquiry, but let us talk a minute about the present situation. Unprepared when this war began, preparation had to be in haste, and it was so enormous from every standpoint that there was much effort that did not bear fruit, and it would have been impossible to have had the expenditure of every dollar bring a dollar's worth. The Army, the Navy, the Public Health Service, volunteers without pay or nominal pay, great masses of people were called into the public service. The draft came. We sent 2,000,000 people to the other side, to be reenforced by a million and a half if the war did not close. It has been an expensive war. The man power has been seriously impaired. A great debt has been created. The suffering in man power is not to be compared with dollars; yet it is over and done, and for one, as a Representative—and I think I speak for every man on both sides of the House—we will legislate and the people will approve legislation that will make good every pledge that was made in laws hastily passed to care for the people who went into the military and naval service. [Applause.] And so I will drop it right there. The question is, How can we best prepare? I said the expenditure had been extraordinary. There will be paid in round numbers interest on a public debt in the fiscal year 1920, commencing on the 30th of June next, a billion dollars.

What will be paid for compensation, what will be paid all along the line, remains to be seen. But, thank God, we are rich enough and patriotic enough so that we will meet it all by taxation. But that does not mean that with peace we are going to throw away money, and we should remember that in addition to caring for those we are obliged to care for 100,000,000 people who pay the taxes. It is quite one thing to pay taxes when we have 30 to 50 cent cotton, $2 wheat, $1.50 corn, and other things in proportion. But the time will come, and is to come rapidly, when you will have 8 to 10 cent cotton, when you will have 75 cents to $1 wheat, when you will have pork at, instead of 18 to 20 cents a pound gross, you will have it from 5 to 6 cents. And everything will be along that line. It is coming and it will come rapidly.

Am I saying this for the purpose of intimating that we are avoiding our pledges? No; I am not.

Now, let me get right down to "brass tacks." This is a provision to locate a tuberculosis hospital at Dawson Springs, a place at which there is no spring, but all wells, better, no doubt, for other diseases than tuberculosis. But let us see what we have now to care for the people in the hospitals, and what we have got to do with the situation. I will hastily, with a hop, skip, and jump, try to get to the meat of it. For general hospitals for the Army, apart from camps and cantonments, we have spent $54,000,000, for all camp and cantonment hospitals we have spent $99,500,000, making a total expenditure of $153,000,000 for construction and furnishing only. The number of beds in Army hospitals in camps and cantonments is 50,000, the number of beds in general hospitals and Army hospitals 25,000, or a total of 75,000. Now, these camp and cantonment beds are in hospitals mostly temporary in nature, but which I find, after inquiry, are good for service for 20 years. They will never be occupied, all of them. And they are scattered all over the country. And I do believe, as I stand here, after the best inquiry I can make, to say the least of it, that all of them are as good locations for tuberculosis hospitals as is Dawson Springs, the place sought to be acquired by this bill. I do not say that Dawson Springs may not be utilized, but let us use that which we have. Let us halt before we commence to make new locations for tuberculosis or other hospitals, utilizing those facilities which we have, the 75,000 beds that we have in the Army hospitals alone.

Let me go a little further. It is believed that the full capacity of these 75,000 beds has never been utilized. And I trust to God, so far as the future is concerned, that they never will be occupied. But we can amply care for those soldiers and ex-soldiers who desire hospital care with a greatly less number of beds than the 75,000 we now have.

Now, I want to speak a little further. These Army hospitals which are permanent are 37, the number of hospitals in camps and cantonments is 38, making 75 altogether. What else have we? There is a general Army and Navy hospital at Hot Springs, Ark. We all know about Hot Springs. There is a hospital there for many diseases. I suppose there is no place in the United States, or on earth, to equal Hot Springs. As my former colleague, John Allen, from Mississippi, in his closing speech, when he located the fish hatchery down there at Tupelo, said, "It is the center of the earth; that you might climb the highest tree; and that it was equally distinct to the eye as far as the eye would reach." For the purposes of a hospital, Hot Springs is a very good place. They have one there now and you can build more if it is necessary.

The Army has a tuberculosis hospital at Fort Bayard, N. Mex. My impression is, although I have not been able to fully verify it, that this is an abandoned post of the Army; that it is well located for tuberculosis treatment; and that there is already, and has been for years, a tuberculosis hospital there.

The Navy has a tuberculosis hospital in Colorado, at Las Animas, with over 600 acres, and supposed to be a good place for a tuberculosis hospital, which was established in time of peace. Now, there is a hospital that the Public Health Service has, in Fort Stanton, N. Mex. I am not sure exactly, but my belief is, from the best information I can get, that the whole area there is available for the extension of a tuberculosis hospital.

There are others that I might speak of. There is one criticism I want to make about this service in the future and what we ought to do, in my judgment. And in making it I have no reason to attack anybody. Take the Public Health Service, for illustration, and at its head is Surg. Gen. Blue, a man of extraordinary equipment for the public service, with a large staff. They have a tuberculosis hospital in New Mexico. Let us see what is proposed to be done and what has been done in peace and war for this service.

The Army bill passed on the 30th of June, I believe. I hold it in my hand, and if you will turn to page 47 of that bill, Chapter XV, you will see to what I refer. The chapter is too long for me to read, but I will read a short extract from it:

SEC. 4. That the duties of the Division of Venereal Diseases shall be in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury (1) to study and investigate the cause, treatment, and prevention of venereal diseases; (2) to cooperate with State boards or departments of health for the prevention and control of such diseases within the States; and (3) to control and prevent the spread of these diseases in interstate traffic: Provided, That nothing in this chapter shall be construed as limiting the functions and activities of other departments or bureaus in the prevention, control, and treatment of venereal diseases and in the expenditure of moneys therefor.

This is scattered. There are four or five departments of the Government working at this particular disease. I want to call your attention to a provision in this bill which we have under consideration. God knows, if it passes at all, it ought to be seriously amended.

If you will turn to the bottom of page 1 and then turn over to page 2 you will find these words touching this location. What for?

For the treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States and persons who are now or hereafter may be beneficiaries of the United States Public Health Service.

What does that mean? Why, this Public Health Service treats all sorts of men at the public expense in this country, including people in civil life. Here is a further grant of power in this Army bill, and the first thing we know, unless we amend and limit this legislation through careful consideration later on by provisions to be proposed when we get outside of the necessity for legislation, when we will cut off many men who are duplicating work and many departments which are duplicating work, here we will have a law under which you can go into interstate commerce and take anybody that may be treated by this Public Health Service, and under their direction, with or without cooperating with the States; and here is a large appropriation to carry that out, and do what? You can fill them up from civil life—the whole 75,000 beds—and probably you might have to multiply that number by two or three.

I am here to care for and keep our pledges, whatever it costs; pledges that we made in behalf of the boys in blue or in khaki, wherever they are, when they come out of the service. But I am not ready to pick up the civilian population and include it. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes left.

Mr. CANNON. Two minutes. Why, I have hardly commenced. [Laughter.] I am for the amendment that was offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. Let us defeat this bill. Let us adopt that amendment, and let us find out how many of these Army and Navy hospitals will be needed, how many of them have locations that are favorable, with beds—75,000 beds—furnished and good for 20 years. I want to say, measuring my words, that this legislation as proposed is indefensible. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire if the gentleman used all of his time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman used all but half a minute.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman yields back that half minute?

Mr. CANNON. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois yields back half a minute.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] concluded his very interesting remarks to the House by the statement that this legislation was absolutely indefensible. I challenge that statement, Mr. Chairman. I challenge it for the reason that in the orderly process of legislation a committee of this House, charged with the duty and responsibility of considering legislation, had this bill up for consideration and heard the evidence upon it; and in reporting this bill to the House it was simply carrying out the mandate of the law already passed by the Congress with reference to those who are entitled under the war-risk insurance act to hospital treatment after they had been discharged from the naval and military service of the United States.

Now, the question is, gentlemen, Do we owe an imperative and solemn duty to these men who have enlisted in the Army and Navy of the United States and who in the course of that service have contracted these insidious and in many cases what will prove mortal maladies in the discharge of their duty under the flag? No man will dispute the proposition that there can be no higher class of moral obligation that we owe to any of our citizens than that which we owe to these men.

What is the evidence that is produced by the committee and by the hearings? The evidence shows that the hospital accommodations required under the law for the treatment of these men is absolutely inadequate at this time, or apparently in the immediate future, to take care of these soldiers and sailors who are entitled under the provisions of the war-risk act to hospital treatment if they desire it.

There is talk about "haphazard legislation" and about picking out one particular place for the construction of this proposed hospital, and it is said that the matter ought to be left to those experts who are in authority to arrange a definite and permanent program. Now, gentlemen, who has made the recommendation for the establishment of this particular hospital at this particular place? Why, the executive officers of the medical department of the War Risk and Public Health Service Bureaus, the very men under whose jurisdiction and responsibility the carrying into operation of this legislative duty rests, and they have come and made a recommendation that, after an investigation of the conditions surrounding this particular place, it presents practically an ideal location for one of the units of this great system, which we all admit must later on be established in full.

Now, it must not be overlooked, gentlemen of the committee, that under the law, as testified to by Dr. Banks, the senior Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service and the chief medical adviser of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau—and surely those positions ought to entitle Dr. Banks to some consideration at the hands of this committee—there are only at the present time, as he states in his testimony, two classes of hospitals to which they can send discharged soldiers and sailors for treatment under the provisions of the existing law. He further states that the present hospital and medical facilities are not sufficient to take care of these civilians. Bear in mind, gentlemen, that that is the status of these men that we are now seeking to take care of. They are not still in the service of the Army and Navy, but they are men who have been discharged from that service because of physical disability, and they occupy now the status of civilians, and, under the law which we passed and which we all approve of, it is the duty of the Government to provide hospital and sanatorium treatment for these men.

Now, an effort has been made to inject local issues into this fight. An amendment was proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] and adopted here yesterday to move this sanatorium out to Amarillo, Tex. A large number of the gentlemen on the other side of the House said at first that they were opposed to this proposition in toto; that they were opposed to this piecemeal legislation to locate this hospital, under the terms of this bill, at any particular site. Yet it seems, gentlemen, that you took a rather inconsistent position on that proposition when you unanimously voted to waive that objection and cast an affirmative vote for that amendment locating it at another site than that proposed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE].

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, of course we all understand that there is a motion pending to strike out the enacting clause of this bill, which, if carried, will kill the bill.

It has not been my good fortune to have been a Member of this House many years, but during the time I have been here I have tried to take an interest in legislation, and I am candid to say that in the discussion of this bill there have been more wild, irresponsible remarks made, more innuendoes and insinuations, than I have ever seen with reference to any legislation that has ever been before the House. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] yesterday in his speech stated that his information was that a big hotel at Dawson Springs had been burned and that some New York syndicate were trying either to enhance their property or to sell bonds on the strength of getting this sanatorium here. The gentleman surely got that from some source or he would not have said it.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman did not say it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman said that, or in substance that, and I do not care what source it came from; there is absolutely no foundation for it in the world. At the beginning of this war there was a corporation formed to build another big hotel in Dawson Springs. Dawson Springs has 50 hotels. It is a great summer resort. The War Industries Board cut down the material. The stock had been sold. The land has been bought, and the place where it is to be located is 2 miles from the proposed location of this hospital, on the other side of the river, in another county, and the corporation at Dawson Springs which proposes to build this hotel has no more to do with this sanatorium or the furnishing of this land than I have or any other gentleman on this floor.

Why, it has been assumed here, by gentlemen on this side especially, that this is to be a sanatorium for tubercular patients altogether. The bill does not contemplate that. It does not say that. There are many men discharged from the Army with kidney trouble, many men with rheumatism. Enough men are discharged to-day as wards of this Government with these diseases, for whom there is no provision made to take care of them, to fill two hospitals like this one which is contemplated. Col. Banks went down there at the solicitation of the department upon whose shoulders rests the responsibility of these hospitals. He testified in the hearings that the altitude had nothing to do with tuberculosis. The distinguished gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LAZARO], who is a physician, said so in his speech yesterday. He says that the best medical science agrees to-day that you can come nearer to curing a tubercular case in the climate in which the patient lives and where he expects to live, if you want a permanent cure. Why, gentlemen talk about these hospitals down at these cantonments. I ask you gentlemen, if you had a son, would you want him to be placed at any of these various cantonments regardless of location and regardless of the accommodations? Or, after he has fought the battle and won it for the preservation of liberty and civilization, would you not want him to have the best hospital that money can buy and human brain and genius can construct? [Applause.] It is perfectly all right to go out and make broad assertions. Why, here is the statement that Col. Banks himself made. He said: "We have filled up all of the Marine hospitals to overflowing. We have rented buildings in Savannah and New York." This hospital is not to take care of wounded soldiers. It is to take care of soldiers of the Army and Navy that the War Department and the Navy Department will no longer have any jurisdiction over; and when we passed the war-risk insurance act practically unanimously in this House we said to these boys, "You go to the trenches of Europe; if you lose your health or lose your limb we guarantee you hospital treatment." [Applause.]

Are you going to say now, "We will put you out in some abandoned cantonment," after they have gone and paid the price? If you do, then take the responsibility. Do not take my word about locating this in Dawson Springs. You want to locate it in Dawson Springs or you want to send it out to Texas. Why, the gentleman who represents the Amarillo district [Mr. JONES of Texas] said yesterday that in that county there had not been any deaths for many years. I think he said there was no cemetery there. I know one of the most eminent physicians that Kentucky ever had was practically starving for a practice in Kentucky, and he went to Amarillo, Tex., and he is absolutely rich to-day. [Laughter.] If the statement of the gentleman from Texas is correct that there is no cemetery at Amarillo this physician who went from Kentucky down there is "some doctor," because he had lots of sick folks there. Of course, that is put in to kill the bill. What department of the Government said this hospital ought to go to Amarillo, Tex.? Where is there any report from any physician, or from the Bureau of Public Health, or the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, or the Secretary of the Treasury, under whose jurisdiction all of these departments are, saying that it ought to go to Amarillo, Tex.? Col. Banks, of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, comes here and says that he went down to Dawson Springs. He does not say this is the only place for a hospital. He does not say it is for tubercular patients only. It is one of the chain of hospitals that he wants erected throughout the country in view of the dire need of them everywhere.

A bill before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will be ready for your consideration in a few days appropriating $10,000,000 more, not for enlarging the hospital at Dawson Springs but constructing hospitals in your State, so that your boys can go there. I want to see them all over the country. This bill had a privileged status, and the Bureau of Public Health and the War-Risk Insurance wanted speed. They wanted to build the building immediately, because the testimony shows that there are 14,000 of these unfortunate boys to-day that Col. Banks and Dr. Simpson say have no place on earth to go.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I will.

Mr. KEATING. I wish to ask the gentleman a question, because the information I receive will determine how I shall vote. According to the gentleman from Illinois, the War Department has thousands of beds available. The Assistant Secretary of War to-day told me, not in reference to this bill, that they had 50,000 beds available. The gentleman says that there are thousands of discharged soldiers in the country without hospital conveniences.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Discharged soldiers.

Mr. KEATING. Would not the reasonable way be to pass a bill opening these available beds to discharged soldiers, so that we can take care of them at once? [Applause.]

Mr. KINCHELOE. I will say, first and foremost, that they can not be taken care of under the law.

Mr. KEATING. Why not change the law?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Suppose you change the law. Two-thirds of the hospitals at the various cantonments are on ground which the Government does not own; they are temporary. You are not able to take care of them.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman allow me to answer the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. For the simple reason that nearly all the hospitals at these cantonments are not suitable for the care of tubercular patients.

Mr. KEATING. We have at Denver a hospital in my district with 2,000 beds, and that hospital has not been occupied, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] did not even mention that hospital.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Probably they could not utilize that; but I do know that the evidence all shows that they are not suitable for tubercular patients or for discharged soldiers. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, we are all of one mind in regard to the care of men discharged from the military service requiring hospital treatment. There is no difference in Congress in that regard. We will do our full duty toward these men. The question is, What is the thing to do at this time? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has called attention to the fact that there are 75,000 hospital beds in camps and cantonments, 25,000 of them in the general hospitals. Seven of these general hospitals were established for the purpose of caring for tubercular patients. One of these hospitals, at West Baden, Ind., has now more than 600 empty beds. One of these hospitals is at New Haven, one of the finest in the land. Another is located near the city of New York. They are scattered all over the country. These hospitals are the best that can be built. Some of them were built for private use, and all as up to date and first class as such institutions can be. It is true that these hospitals are not now available for the treatment of men discharged from the service. It is necessary to have legislation designating these hospitals as available for such men. I have offered an amendment to this bill which calls upon the Secretary of War to designate such hospitals to be used for discharged soldiers and sailors. The Secretary of War can do that in 24 hours; he can open the doors to these splendid institutions, now fully equipped, and allow the men to go into them to-morrow, to enter them and have care and treatment. [Applause.]

What is it that is proposed? To build a hospital in a questionable location, which can not under any circumstances be ready for the admission of men inside of 18 months. How are these men to be provided for in the meantime? It is true my amendment is subject to a point of order. The gentleman in charge of the bill will probably make the point of order, but in doing that he puts himself in this position: He refuses to make immediately available for men discharged from the service the thousands of beds in the splendid institutions, now fully equipped and fully manned and ready for these men, in order that we may build somewhere in a questionable locality an institution that may be available in 18 months or two years for perhaps 500 men.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. Does the gentleman know what the combined capacity of these institutions is?

Mr. MONDELL. The seven tuberculosis hospitals I do not know, but it is very considerable. There are 26,000 beds in these 37 general hospitals. Seven of them are hospitals specially adapted for the care of tubercular patients, and I have called attention to one splendid institution where there are 600 empty beds. The gentleman, if he makes the point of order, will refuse to allow the use of these splendid institutions now built and available in order that this scheme for building for the far distant future, for the benefit of a particular locality, may be carried forward. I appeal to the gentleman in charge of the bill, if he is really in earnest about the care of the men discharged from the service, to withdraw his point of order and thus allow us to bring immediate relief in institutions as fine as any ever built for such purposes. I appeal to the gentleman in charge of the bill to withhold the point of order and allow us to make immediate provision for the men needing this medical treatment—let us do something for the discharged soldiers rather than for Dawson Springs. [Applause.] I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back half a minute.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] eight minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I made this motion to strike out the enacting clause of this bill because I believe the bill ought not to pass. I am and every other Member of this House is in favor of doing everything that can be done to redeem our pledges to those who have suffered disease or wounds in this war. That goes without saying, that we are all for that, but this bill is not a good bill and ought not to pass for several reasons, a few of which only I shall have time to refer to. In the first place, gentlemen, there is absolutely no necessity shown in the hearings or by the facts for the establishment of this hospital at Dawson Springs or at any other place at this time. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] have just referred to some of these reasons. I have taken the trouble to go to the Surgeon General's office this morning and get from him a list of all the hospitals in the United States, both general and in cantonments, and I have here that list, which shows not only the names of the hospitals, the number of beds already there, the number of beds that are vacant, but also the number of beds that are being built and added to the various hospitals. I want to incorporate that statement, which is not excessively long, into my remarks, and, Mr. Chairman, at this time I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting this statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting the matter indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, what was the request?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman proffered certain matter which he wished to incorporate as an extension of remarks.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. From the Surgeon General?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Signed by the Surgeon General.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Surgeon General of the Army or the Public Health Service?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Of the Army.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. For a brief question only.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I just wanted to ask if these discharged soldiers mentioned in this bill can be admitted to these hospitals?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will answer the question. In my judgment the discharged soldiers can not be admitted to these hospitals, but this can be done: These soldiers are brought back here and they are all incorporated in our Army under the selective-draft act, and under that act they are to serve "during the emergency." That emergency is not yet completed, nor will it be until peace is officially declared. During that time the Army authorities have absolute authority to keep these men in the service, and instead of discharging a man who comes back suffering with tuberculosis he can be placed in a hospital, one of the medical institutions of the Army or the Navy, and be there treated for his ailment until his Army service legitimately expires.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. For a question.

Mr. DEWALT. Is it not a fact the policy of the Army and Navy Department now is not to discharge men who are incapacitated either in whole or in part?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Absolutely. I was told at the office of the Surgeon General this morning it is their policy to keep these men in the service and see that they have medical treatment until they are well, and then turn them over for vocational education, and do all that before they are dscharged.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman object to giving the totals?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will give the totals; they are very interesting.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. For a brief question; my time is short.

Mr. GARD. Did the gentleman get information about the time when these 14,000 soldiers were discharged—the 14,000 now claimed to be tubercular soldiers?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No, sir; I did not. He did not inform me about that, and, in fact, I did not ask. Gentlemen, this is not a partisan question. This is nothing but a matter of good common sense, and if we can economize here we ought to do it. We all feel the same way about that. In the general hospitals of the United States the standard capacity of all of them is 24,949 beds. Of those beds at this time 19,927 are occupied and 7,530 are unoccupied at this time, and are vacant. There are also proposed and now being added to these general hospitals 16,274 beds, which will be available at once. So you see, gentlemen, in the general hospitals of this country there are approximately a total of 23,000 vacant beds. These hospitals are not frail buildings, barracks temporarily constructed, but base hospitals in the United States, with the best medical attendants and the best physicians there in attendance. If it may be said that these men, even if discharged, can not be admitted there, I ask anybody how long it would take to pass a joint resolution through these two Houses to give the proper authority to the Army authorities to admit them there. I believe it can be done by Executive order, but whether it can or can not this and the other House could and would immediately act upon such a resolution, in my judgment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Has the gentleman a letter, or did I understand he has a letter, from the Surgeon General?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; this is a list of the hospitals prepared by the Surgeon General's office, and giving the information relative to them as of November 30, 1918.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I mean, is it an official document; is it signed by the Surgeon General?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It is signed, "By direction of the Surgeon General, Wilford H. Smith, colonel, Medical Corps, United States Army." I got it this morning. Now, let me hurry along, because my time is very brief.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman know whether it embraces the $800,000 hospital on the banks of Lake Michigan which has been authorized?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I have not noticed. I notice that it embraces the following tuberculosis hospitals: Fort Bayard, N. Mex., that has at this time 290 vacant beds; Otisville, N. Y., which has now 18 beds vacant; New Haven, Conn., that is full; Markleton, Pa., that has 3 vacant beds; Waynesville, N. C., with 228 vacant beds; Azalea, N. C., that has 62 vacant beds; Whipple Barracks, Ariz., 10 vacant beds; one at Denver, Colo., with 173 vacant beds.

Now, these are all tuberculosis hospitals, and you will find by looking at this list that hundreds of beds are being added to those institutions.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. For a brief question.

Mr. SNYDER. If your proposition becomes effective, would it not mean also the continuation of his salary when a soldier is committed to one of these hospitals?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Absolutely.

Mr. SNYDER. That would be a further reason why your idea should be adopted.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. He gets his salary and treatment, and he is not discharged until he has finished. Why discharge a man with tuberculosis?

Mr. SNYDER. If we are attempting to do the best thing we can with the soldiers, that would be another reason why we should do as you suggest.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Absolutely. As to the camp base hospitals——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DEWALT. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has been allotted, and the time is in control of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Let us take the camp base hospitals. It has been said that they are flimsy affairs, but I am told by the Surgeon General they are good hospitals, and that in every one there is a tuberculosis ward or department. Now, I have a complete list of them here in this same appendix to my remarks. I find the total capacity of these camp base hospitals is 51,666 beds, and of that number 28,875 only are occupied, and in the camp base hospitals of this country to-day are 34,010 vacant beds, and projected and in course of erection in these same camp base hospitals are 3,470 additional beds.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is it not a fact that all ailments are treated at these camp hospitals, as well as reconstruction work being conducted there?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Absolutely. There is one at Bowie, Tex., and one at Camp Cody, N. Mex. The one at Bowie, Tex., has 1,181 vacant beds; Cody, 410; Fremont, Cal., 1,054 vacant beds; Kearney, Cal., 750; Logan, Tex., 751; McClellan, Tex., 564; at Fort Sill, Okla., 870; at Travis, Tex., 608 vacant beds. All of these beds are vacant in institutions where tuberculosis may be well treated.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does not the gentleman think, or has he made any investigation to find, if when these wounded or sick soldiers are brought back from Europe these beds will be occupied by them?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Whether they would consent to it?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. These that are in the Army and which the War Department must take care of. Has the gentleman made any investigation as to whether or not they would occupy these beds?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I may say in reply to that that they have not occupied them, and they were not occupied on the 30th of November.

Mr. REAVIS. Following the line of the argument of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], what will we do with the 14,000 soldiers who now have tuberculosis? Shall we put them in these places or wait two years?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That is exactly the question. Will we wait a year and a half to build a hospital down at Dawson Springs, Ky., and let those boys die in the meantime, or will we put them in the institutions we have? And then, when we get this institution built at Dawson Springs, it will take only 500 of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. There are in all the hospitals of the United States at this time a total of 109,610 beds, and, gentlemen, of that number 50,520 are now vacant and unoccupied—in the general hospitals and in the camp base hospitals of this country. And in spite of that we are now asked to appropriate $1,850,000 for the erection of a hospital which we can not use for two years. And I say that the common sense and judgment of every man in this House will reject such an idea. [Applause.]

The following is the statement which I have received permission to print in the RECORD:

Hospital Division, Surgeon General's Office, Washington, Nov. 30, 1918.

[NOTE.—Those marked with an * are hospitals for the treatment of tuberculosis. Those marked with  are for the insane. General Hospital 7 is for the blind. General Hospital 11 is for eye, ear, nose, and throat. General Hospital 30 is for neurosis. The others are general hospitals.]

By direction of the Surgeon General.

WINFORD H. SMITH,
Colonel, Medical Corps, U. S. Army.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have been surprised to see the unanimity that exists on the Republican side of the House in opposition to this measure. I do not know whether it is just a wearing off of the wire edge, felt because of your recent victory, that you are attacking in such savage fashion this very meritorious measure, or whether it is the general plan of opposition to all measures of real merit.

I recall, Mr. Chairman, when the war-risk insurance bill was up for consideration that it was opposed by many Republicans in both Houses, a bill that looked to the protection of these men sent by the country into the very jaws of death itself, when this Government, by suggestions from this side, wanted to protect these men and provide for their loved ones back at home, when they were there fighting and dying for us and humanity.

Now, I could not believe that when a measure came out from this side to provide a hospital at one of the most famous health resorts in the world, costing $1,500,000, for these poor sufferers from the white plague, that I would see the Republican Party in this House marshaled to a man in opposition to such a measure. But I have witnessed it, gentlemen; the country has witnessed it. For three days you have combated this great measure. Now, you come and the solemn proposition before this House is to strike out the enacting clause, to enact no law upon this subject. These men are coming back from the firing line in France, where they have been in the blasts of hell fire for weeks and months, driving back the murderous Huns, coming back with their lungs affected, suffering with tuberculosis, some of them, and the Government is saying, "We will open up a place for you at Dawson Springs, Ky.; medical testimony pronounces it one of the best places in the world; we will have it ready for you; we will put you there; we will take care of you; we will give you every treatment that human agency can provide," and I see the Republican Party marshaling all of its forces and fighting that bill to the death.

Gentlemen, do you think the sober, thinking people of America will indorse this peanut politics that you are playing here to-day at the cost and expense of the lives of those boys? If you do, you have got something to learn, and if you keep up this pace two years from now you will not be able, when these two million men return, who would have supported the Democratic ticket if they had been at home, you will not be able, I say, two years from now, even by the aid of the pro-German vote you got at the last election, nor with money furnished you by the whisky and profiteering interests of this country, to get enough seats to give you a majority in this House. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Gentlemen, I am surprised at you. One of your great leaders and the greatest Republican now living, Mr. Taft, has at last seen the light, and he comes out and tells you that you have no business annoying and embarrassing the President, no business trying to belittle and discredit the President of the United States. The greatest man in this world to-day is our President, Woodrow Wilson. [Applause.] You are trying to embarrass him in another body. You are trying to heckle and embarrass him in every way you can as he goes over yonder to grapple with the greatest problems that have ever confronted the human race, and here at home is the poor old remnant of the Republican Party fighting to the death with a unanimity I have never seen before the establishment of a tuberculosis hospital for the boys coming back with injured lungs from France. My God! What a death the old Republican Party must finally die! [Applause.] Hanging around, nosing about, trying to kill such a meritorious measure. Is it not a glorious performance for the old party of Lincoln, just barking and howling and growling over the establishment of a tuberculosis hospital for the boys injured in their lungs in the war zone of France, fighting and dying to save our country and civilization, coming back as fast as ships can bring them, and the Government saying, "Establish this place, open it up, have it ready; we do not know how many such men will come," and here you are moving to shift it from one place to another, playing pusillanimous politics, and at last you make a motion to strike out the enacting clause, denying them a place anywhere in the country and saying you will put them in some swamp where we have already got a temporary cantonment, where we do not own the land, where we ought not to put them, where they have no business to be placed with weak lungs, instead of sending them down here where they can be treated for kidney troubles, stomach troubles, lung troubles, and everything.

Mr. KNUTSON. Who is responsible for placing the cantonments in the swamps?

Mr. HEFLIN. They are standing up here fighting the establishment of a tuberculosis hospital at any place. What a miserable performance. God pity the poor old Republican Party. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, how much time did the gentleman use?

The CHAIRMAN. Seven minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman from Michigan use some of his time?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How much time have I, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has 24 minutes and the gentleman from Florida has 40 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman from Florida use some of his time? He has 40 minutes and I have only 24.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I thought we would alternate. We have had three speeches and the gentleman's side has had three. I thought it was probably better that way.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, this question is not a political one, but it is a very practical one. The proposition is this, as I understand it: There is some claim made by the proponents of this bill that there have been discharged 14,000 American soldiers because they have tuberculosis, and that they have no place to treat them, and that there should be established a series of tuberculosis hospitals, of which this is one; that by making 500 beds in this hospital and putting two in a bed you would take care of a thousand, and therefore it would require 14 hospitals to take care of this emergency.

This is but the beginning. This hospital will be erected at an expense of about $2,000,000. There will be $28,000,000 to make a beginning, and the first one is to be at Dawson Springs, Ky. Reasons have been given why the first hospital should be placed there. They are silent as to where the others are to be located. If by a party division in this House the majority is able to carry this hospital down into Kentucky, then the other 13 can be placed in the other 13 Southern States.

There is a great deal of misinformation in the House as to the necessity of this hospital. If we believe the evidence so far adduced, there is no necessity for it.

I wish to say this: As you all know, the boys who come back from France with the disease of tuberculosis, discharged, are going to their homes first of all. They are going to see father and mother, sister, or sweetheart. They are going to the old homes, and I want to tell you very few of them will go to a distant part of the country—distant from the old home—to be treated for tuberculosis unless they are forced to do so.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HERSEY. I can not in five minutes. The mind of a tuberculous patient is a great factor in the healing of that disease to-day, according to the best medical testimony. I have here a book, Tuberculosis, Its Cause, Cure, and Prevention, by Edward O. Otis, M. D., professor of pulmonary diseases and climatology, Tufts College Medical School, late president of the Boston Tuberculosis Association, member of the National Tuberculosis Association, one of the best authorities in America. What does he say? On page 79 of this work he says:

Worry is still another predisposing cause, for it depresses the nervous system, which interferes with the healthy normal functions of the body, and this reduces its power of resistance. In the treatment of the disease in sanatoriums it has been found that patients fail to improve or retrograde if their minds are not at ease, and they worry over the family left at home or some other real or imaginary trouble. Contentment of mind is an essential condition for the maintenance of a good bodily condition.

Up in my State we have two sanatoriums for the treatment of tuberculosis, maintained by the State. They have plenty of room. The beds are not all occupied. They are building in my home county another one, to be maintained by the State. Why? To bring the sanatorium home to the man, the woman, and the child afflicted with that disease in order that they may have surrounding them the environments of home and family while they are being treated and not go even to a distant part of the State.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERSEY. I will not yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have the promise of some time, which I will give to the gentleman.

Mr. HERSEY. That does not make any difference. I have the time now, and I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HERSEY. The soldiers who come from France to Maine, the Maine boys, are not going to Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] give me two minutes of the time that he promised me in order that I may yield it to the gentleman from Maine to answer a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman accept the gift of two minutes?

Mr. HERSEY. Why, I shall be very glad to have two minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman answer the question?

Mr. HERSEY. I do not yield for any question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, well, then—of course.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would not be candid if I did not say that in the consideration of this bill many surprises have occurred. The Committee on Rules was largely induced to report the rule for the consideration of the bill by reason of the fact that it was stated that it was a unanimous report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Of course, we expected some opposition on the part of Members on the floor, but we did not expect that organized, concentrated opposition that has been displayed here. We did not expect that this would be made a party proposition. To our surprise, however, it seems to have been made so. We expected opposition from the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOODS], who, although they have known that the armistice was signed in the world war, seem never to have learned that the Civil War was over. Sometimes when those gentlemen were talking I have wondered whether they were akin to the fellows who came out of a swamp in Indiana or Iowa or somewhere a few years ago and threw away their guns, saying that this blamed Civil War might go on just as long as it pleased, but darned if they were going to fight any more. [Laughter.] We expected opposition from that source. We did not expect a general opposition from the Republican side of the House to the building of a hospital to take care of discharged soldiers.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield just for a moment?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. DEWALT. If that opposition was sincere on the other side of the House, would they have ever consented to the establishment of this institution at another place, to wit, at Amarillo? Is not that of itself evidence of insincerity?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, yes. Now, strangely enough, although we expected only picket baiting, a bit of sniping, yet all the heavy field artillery, all the machine guns, everything except the big Bertha, have been called into operation here in the fight on this bill. We had cannon to the right of us, cannon to the left of us, and very much of CANNON in front of us. [Laughter.] Then we heard the put, put, put, put of the aviator as he blithely sailed over and dropped a bomb upon a southern hospital. [Laughter.] I wonder why it is that you gentlemen now oppose a proposition which has been investigated, the only proposition that has been investigated, so far as I know, to provide quarters where discharged soldiers may voluntarily go to be treated? Of course, the gentleman from Iowa does not want his son to go there. His son does not have to go there. It is all a voluntary proposition with the soldier, if he chooses to avail himself of the opportunity presented.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. HUSTED. I am informed that the Surgeon General was offered a hotel at Dawson Springs for hospital purposes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Surgeon General of the Army or of the Navy?

Mr. HUSTED. Of the Army, and that he refused to accept it. I understand the statement is made at the Surgeon General's office that they would not have taken it for a gift. I should like to ask the gentleman whether he knows anything about it, and whether that property was refused on the ground that the location was not suitable for hospital purposes?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let me ask the gentleman where he got his information?

Mr. HUSTED. From a Member of Congress, who said he was told it at the Surgeon General's office to-day.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is three degrees removed.

Mr. HUSTED. It was the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], who has spoken here to-day.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. All the information that I have and all that has caused me to act on this proposition is the official report of these gentlemen who have been sent out from the Public Health Service to investigate the situation.

Mr. HUSTED. Was there any report from the Surgeon General's office of either the Army or the Navy?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not think so, because my friend understands that this is not a proposition to take care of men still enlisted. This proposition is to take care of those soldiers who have been honorably discharged from the Army and the Navy, and makes it voluntary on their part as to whether they will go to the place and accept treatment.

Mr. HUSTED. Not necessarily discharged.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is this bill, and I am speaking of this bill.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from Alabama protested against locating this hospital at some cantonment which is situated in a swamp. From that I infer that some cantonment is located in a swamp. If that is the case, who was responsible for it?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Minnesota ought not to ask anything of that kind——

Mr. KNUTSON. I admit that it is embarrassing.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Now, the gentleman adds to the offensiveness of his question.

Mr. KNUTSON. I withdraw it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I answer every question that is put to me on the information honestly and intelligently. I do not know whether intelligently or not, but I answer it honestly. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman puts me in a false position. I feel that the House has a right to know——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I know on yesterday the gentleman presented a proposition to take men from somewhere and put them in tents on land up in Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon, I did not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is what the gentleman said; I do not know what he meant. Now, gentlemen, I do not, of course, know what is going to become of this bill; none of us can know. The gentleman from Texas I believe submarined it, and that added to the military character of it. [Laughter.] It would seem a strange thing that gentlemen are not willing upon all the reports that we have to create a hospital for the treatment not only of tubercular patients but of other diseases.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. DENISON. I want to ask the gentleman this question in all seriousness. Did the Rules Committee make any investigation whatever as to whether or not there were already hospital facilities sufficient to take care of these men?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Rules Committee took the statement brought before it by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that it was a unanimous report, and relied upon their investigation.

Mr. DENISON. Is it the practice of the Rules Committee to report a special rule whenever there is a unanimous report from the committee reporting the bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is a very persuasive thing; that has been the practice throughout this administration. I can not say what it will be in the next.

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman will yield, in addition to the testimony before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the gentleman from Tennessee will remember that the same gentlemen who were before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reiterated their statements before the Rules Committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, how much time did the gentleman from Tennessee use?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman used all his time.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I did not want to inject anything personal into this discussion, and I have endeavored to keep anything political out of it as far as I am concerned. But the remarks that just preceded me have forced the issue upon me. I do not refer to the gentleman from Alabama who, I think, receives little or no attention from this side, and never ought to receive any.

Mr. HEFLIN. Let me say that I consider it a compliment to receive no attention from the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is well known for missing his mark very widely. He never shoots accurately, but always hits something he did not intend to. He is welcome to the compliment.

Mr. HEFLIN. I know that I did not hit very much on that side.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. As far as my good friend from Tennessee, Mr. GARRETT, is concerned, I have only the highest respect and also an affectionate regard for him, and I am surprised at the tone of his remarks. I have been in Congress a few years. In any charges that have been made against me heretofore I have escaped the charge of sectionalism. The claim has never been made that I have raised that issue, and I have not in discussing this bill. But when it is claimed by the gentleman from Tennessee that I am making an argument against bills solely on the ground of politics, and that I do not want to aid the soldiers of the Army, the gentleman is forgetting or has overlooked that a year ago the 14th of this month I introduced a bill providing that the discharged soldiers might be received into any hospital or sanatorium of this Government which has been constructed for that purpose. Nearly a year ago this month I went before the Military Committee and had an extended hearing on the bill, it having been referred to that committee. I was received with the utmost courtesy by the gentlemen who are in control of it, a courtesy so profuse that I feared it was to make easy the place upon which I was to fall. They listened courteously to my statement that already many of the discharged soldiers were afflicted with tuberculosis, and that the experience of England and France showed that we would have many more. I explained that we had and would have abundant room to care for all in the Government hospitals for treatment of that disease which were already constructed. But all was to no avail and the bill was buried.

It was not reported against because gentlemen could not afford to do anything of that kind. It was not reported on favorably because of what? I had not intended to mention it, but the attitude of the gentleman from Tennessee has forced me to do so. I might have said when I spoke before on this bill, I might have said then, as I did not say, that my bill was rejected because it was introduced by a Republican and did not call for any appropriation and because it did not put a million and a half in hospital buildings located in the South. I did not say it then; I do not say it now. I leave it simply with the House to draw their own conclusion from the situation which we have before us. The bill which I offered would have taken care of every one of these soldiers who are sought to be relieved by this bill, and it would have taken care of them now, while this bill will afford no relief for a year. It would have opened these hospitals which were already constructed, with extensive buildings and grounds having every facility possible for the treatment of tuberculosis, located in favorable situations in various parts of the country—it would have opened those hospitals to the discharged soldiers. That was the special provision in my bill. It was for the discharged soldiers which gentlemen say we are unwilling to care for, but it received the fate of a bill offered by a Republican, and now they say we are talking politics when we offered a bill of that kind, which would have provided for all of these men without costing a cent to the Government, and it was rejected without a report by the Committee on Military Affairs. Now, who has brought politics into this discussion? Where has small politics—petty politics, if you please—been played when we on this side are unable to get reported a bill providing completely for cases of this kind and it sleeps the sleep of death in committee until a bill is brought forward which appropriates a million and a half dollars for the construction of a sanatorium in the South? [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I care to use over three minutes. I want to say one thing in regard to the statement made as to the opinion of the Surgeon General's Office. There can be no more unfair method of trying to defeat a just measure than by that kind of hearsay testimony. Surgeon General Ireland is not yet in this country, I think, and Gen. Gorgas has been out some time; therefore the surgeons themselves could not be responsible for any such statement, and if any responsible official in the Surgeon General's Office made such a statement, then the gentleman who repeats it owes it to this House to tell who it was and to whom he said it, and ought not to resort to that kind of indirection when human life is at stake. As I said yesterday, the purpose of this bill was not to take advantage of anybody or any place. Investigation was made as to this place, investigation by the Public Health Bureau, men in official position, and by the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance. They investigated other places. They stated so before the committee—before both committees—the Committee on Rules and the Committee on Public Grounds. This one was selected, as they thought, on account of its special adaptedness to the treatment of pulmonary troubles. Why, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] yesterday ridiculed the idea of soldiers having kidney trouble and troubles of a like character, setting up his judgment against the positive statement of Army officials that there were many cases of the kind, and told of the beneficial effect of that water upon that class of diseases and that it was a most admirable place for the location of a sanatorium. Mr. Chairman, it is opposed here because political leaders on that side or somebody wants to do something to defeat this measure, either from sectionalism or something else. It looks like gentlemen are trying to make a partisan measure now when the lives of American soldiers or those who have been soldiers will be involved. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There ought to be some humanitarian consideration given in this case, considerations of sympathy for those who have risked their lives and lost their health following the Stars and Stripes.

There is a bill, as has been stated repeatedly, before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which I am a member, that proposes a comprehensive system for the establishment of this kind of hospitals; but, Mr. Chairman, when that bill is passed then there will have to be commissions appointed, investigations and examinations made, that will necessarily cause delay because different places all over the country will be presenting their merits and insisting upon locations there, and if this is delayed one week, or even one day, and a single soldier loses his life by reason of failure to secure the treatment he should get, you gentlemen who defeat this bill will be responsible for the murder of that man. Now, we ought not to quibble over these questions. Why, men have talked about altitude being necessary, of a dry atmosphere being necessary, and gentlemen before the committee stated that along the seacoast many sanatoriums of this kind were being established, and private sanatoriums have been established for the cure of tuberculosis everywhere, and they say it is not necessary about their having to be given a certain elevation. It is dry atmosphere there, it is a sunshiny atmosphere there, it is surrounded by agricultural lands adapted to the growing of cattle, and cattle are being grown there and everybody knows, and even a layman knows, that as a matter of common knowledge milk is one of the necessary things in the treatment of pulmonary troubles and troubles of that kind. These eminent doctors have investigated it and if there has been a contrary statement made by the Surgeon General's office the man who reports that statement here ought to be fair enough to the House to tell what official of that bureau stated it [applause on the Democratic side], and if that official made a misstatement his chief, the superiors in his department, ought to know it. But it has never been brought to the attention of the Public Buildings Committee and is not in the hearings before the Rules Committee, and there is no intimation that there has been any objection to it by anybody from the War or Navy Departments or the Surgeon General's office, but now, right on the eve of the passage or defeat of this important measure, gentlemen bring up third-hand hearsay testimony for the purpose of trying to throw a doubt over this meritorious proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE].

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have listened with much interest for the last three days to the wide range of discussion that has been indulged in with reference to the provisions of this bill. To begin with, I was vitally interested in assisting any plan to provide a proper treatment for our discharged soldiers, especially those who have been discharged by reason of their having contracted tuberculosis while in the service. I have been led to this by reason of personal appeals that have been made to me from parties within my own district that have been discharged upon this ground. They have been returned to their homes, and not being able to get the kind of treatment that they should have they were desirous of being placed in some institution where they could receive proper treatment.

I have been advised by the War Department that there was not at this time any place under control of the Government where they could be assigned for such treatment. Many reasons have been urged here why Dawson Springs, Ky., is a proper place for the location of an institution of this kind. I have not objected seriously to this place. I have objected more seriously to the fact that this place should have been selected for the consideration of this Congress upon terms which have been presented to it, principal among which are that it has been promised a large donation of land in order to induce its location there and the medicinal qualities of the waters of the springs in that locality. Now, we have many other localities that in my judgment are better calculated for a location of this kind by reason of the altitude, dry and pure air, and bright sunshine surrounding them, and at the same time they have access to all of the very best mineral waters that can be found in any part of the country, and the famous Manitou water in the locality of the place I shall suggest is known the world over and equals, if not excels, even Carlsbad.

I have felt I would support the motion to strike out the enacting clause of the pending bill for the reason that I believed the proper proceeding would be for the health department to work out a comprehensive plan for the building of such of these institutions as might in the judgment of the department be found necessary after a careful examination of the circumstances and the demands that will be made upon the Government for this care for our brave discharged soldiers and sailors affected by this disease, which thus early are reported to be about 14,000. In that event, I expected to bring to the consideration of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which will have such a bill in charge, a location within my own State and congressional district, which I believe is one of the best places, everything considered, that could be selected for a recuperating sanatorium for tuberculosis. I refer to Colorado Springs, Colo., than which, in my judgment, there is in this country none better adapted for the location of such an institution, and, time permitting, I shall mention some of the reasons for this conclusion.

It has been suggested by one of the speakers here that it would be an improper act to send our soldiers down to occupy any of the hospitals that have been erected in our cantonments, which, as has been suggested by several speakers, might be used for this purpose temporarily, for the reason that they are on swampy ground. I hold in my hand the photograph of a place that was recently desired by the people of Colorado to be selected by the department for a cantonment, from which you can see that had this site been selected there could have been no charge about the swampy condition of that cantonment. We were unable, however, to secure a cantonment site in Colorado.

Now, then, in my time I just want to call attention to Colorado Springs briefly and why it should be taken into consideration when the subject of a location for an institution of this kind is mentioned. It is at the foot of Pike's Peak, halfway from coast to coast, connected by six lines of railway with every part of the continent—to San Francisco, 66 hours; to New York, 50 hours; to Chicago, 26 hours; to Galveston, 32 hours; altitude, 6,030 feet; Pike's Peak, 14,109 feet; 310 days of actual sunshine; mean annual temperature, 46 degrees; and among other things I could mention why this would be a most desirable place, Colorado Springs is a city of 35,000 people, progressive in every way.

I want to call attention to one feature of it that makes it desirable for a location of this kind. The fact that we have so much sunshine; the fact that the air there is so dry and pure, is said by those who have tried its efficacy to be the best means for restoring one to health who is suffering from this malady. There are persons who have spoken to me on the floor of this House and Members of our body who can testify to its efficacy in this connection.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman give us the highest temperature and the lowest? He gave the mean temperature. Give us the highest and the lowest temperatures.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I do not think that I can give the exact figures in answer to this question. The mercury may drop low on a winter day but the air is so void of moisture and the sunshine so warm that the cold is not felt as in lower altitudes. These conditions make both heat and cold scarcely objectionable in either direction.

Now, as before stated, I will give you a few of the reasons why, in my judgment, the Health Department should take into consideration Colorado Springs when considering locations for institutions of this character.

The fame of the Colorado Springs climate has spread to every quarter of the globe because it has been known from the earliest days that there at the foot of Pike's Peak is the climate that gives new life and energy, building up, invigorating, and restoring to health and vitality. The factors entering into and making this climate ideal in every respect for an institution of this kind, then, I would say, are pure air, sunshine, altitude, restful and picturesque surroundings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this proposition has been assailed on several grounds, any one of which, if sustained, would be sufficient to defeat it. If there is any taint, or suggestion of graft in this proposition, we would all agree that it should go out. If it is a wasteful, or extravagant proposition, we are at one that it ought to be defeated. If it is an unnecessary proposition, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, then as a matter of course it should be rejected by this body. But the critics have failed to tender to this committee any evidence to support any one of the various objections that have been made to this bill.

No one in this body will have the temerity to say that he is opposed, to the concrete proposition, that the Government should provide curative treatment for discharged soldiers suffering from tubercular trouble. It is one of the pathetic incidents of this war that service in the trenches will afford a constantly increasing number of victims of this particular malady. We know in my State, and in many other States that training in the camps has sent home a number of tuberculous patients. In Virginia we are trying to provide treatment for these men in our State sanatorium. The deadly blight of tuberculosis has fallen upon countless thousands of allied soldiers who have served in the trenches in France in the four long years of tragical war, now so happily ended. Much of that tuberculosis supervened immediately upon service. In other cases it developed at a later period. We have every reason to believe from the medical history of this war, that for many long years to come there will be an increasing number of tuberculous cases among the discharged soldiers of this country. That being so, the problem of adequately caring for them is a large proposition. I do not undertake to say that Dawson Springs is the only proper site in the United States for a sanatorium for tuberculous soldiers.

Doubtless there are many desirable locations. They may be found practically in every State. But I do call the attention of this body to the fact that there is not one single criticism of this site that is worth considering. I do call the attention of this body to the fact that the medical experts who have testified in connection with the Dawson Springs location are all agreed, in spite of what the medical experts on this floor have stated in the way of criticism, that this is a first-class proposition.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MADDEN. I would just like to ask the gentleman if he will not be kind enough to say what he thinks about the propriety of providing for only 500 patients when, as a matter of fact, it is said that there are 30,000 tubercular cases? Why do we not provide for all?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. As I said a moment ago, I do not undertake to say that this will be the only plant of this character. I agree that we should provide for the 30,000, or 40,000, or possibly even 100,000 patients, that in the years to come may afford. I agree heartily with the proposition that we should provide for these unfortunates. But we must make a beginning somewhere and at some time, and this is a beginning. Are you opposed to beginning this work? Are you prepared to say, are you willing to say, that you are opposed to giving those 500 men the benefit of this legislation, simply because there are others who will be cared for by later legislation?

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. LAZARO. Is it not a fact that if we are going to do anything at all for these tubercular patients they must be treated in the very beginning?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly. I maintain that we should make a beginning.

Mr. MADDEN. Will that beginning interfere with the treatment of the 29,500 other cases?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Not at all. But if we wait on that compendious investigation to which the gentleman refers it will postpone the treatment that would be provided for the patients that will be accommodated in this particular hospital.

Mr. MADDEN. If you would give the Public Health Service the means to provide for them all, that would not happen.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. There is nothing to prevent the Public Health Service from suggesting a most compendious scheme of hospital treatment of this character.

Some ridicule has been cast upon this site by a few of the participants in this debate. They can hardly pose as qualified experts. Whatever may be the extent of their medical wisdom it can hardly be regarded as so accurate or extensive as that of Col. Banks, of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, or of Dr. Stimpson, assistant to Gen. Blue. These gentlemen in the most positive and unequivocal fashion have announced that as a site for a sanatorium for tuberculous patients, Dawson Springs is a first-class proposition.

Of course it is idle to suggest that, if we authorize the expenditure proposed for this particular hospital, only five, or six, or seven hundred men will be treated therein. This will be only the beginning of work at this point, and with the plant once established and the enlargement that will inevitably come thousands of men will be treated in a few years at Dawson Springs. The cost will not be $3,000 per man, once this becomes a going establishment. Not a bit of it. Counting in the cost of the plant and operating expenses the cost per bed will be $3,000 per bed for a few hundred patients, but with the enlargement of the plant the cost per patient will rapidly decline.

If this proposition is meritorious, it should be accepted, particularly in view of the fact that this action will hasten the day of benefit for hundreds of deserving soldiers, and it will in no wise jeopard the interests, or postpone the treatment of other, and equally deserving beneficiaries of an enlarged scheme of national benefaction. The larger scheme may be undertaken at once, but at least accept the offer that comes from the great hearted men who tender this magnificent location at Dawson Springs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, how many more speakers has the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Two more.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I have approached the consideration of this question with an entirely open mind. I have listened with a great deal of care and strict attention to all the arguments that have been presented pro and con. In other words, I was trying to place myself in the position of being a juryman, sworn to try the case according to the evidence presented.

I have heard objections made to this site by reason of the fact that certain people said it was unfitted for the cure of tubercular patients. Every line of the testimony presented, so far as my judgment goes as a lawyer and occupying, as I say, the position of a juryman, has been purely and strictly hearsay testimony.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DEWALT. I certainly will.

Mr. MADDEN. Without respect to the advisability and propriety of the site, what does the gentleman think of the propriety of providing for only 500 men out of 30,000 men?

Mr. DEWALT. As to that I would respond in this way: The life of one soldier who fought for his country in the late war is to me of greater moment than the consideration of even $1,500,000, wherever the location may be. [Applause.]

I had some portion, some little part, in the discussion and in the consideration of the war-risk insurance act. I recollect distinctly that in the discussion and in the framing of that bill the committee and this House pledged itself that if these boys came back and were suffering from any disease, or from wounds incurred in the line of their duty, or if they were deprived, by inability, of the opportunity of pursuing their usual vocations, the United States Government guaranteed, and does guarantee in that bill, that they will be taken care of by reason of such illness and by reason of such incapacity.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. Now, gentlemen, "consistency is a jewel."

Mr. MADDEN. Does this bill do that?

Mr. DEWALT. It does it in part. It is the commencing of a program. Now, gentlemen of the opposition—because I call you that for the reason that you have stood solidly in opposition to this bill—I repeat that somewhere it is said by the great poet, "Consistency, thou art a jewel." I ask you now, frankly, how you explain your inconsistency in opposition to this bill by saying that you are in favor of a general program and are against this location because it is not included in a general program, and yet in the same breath you vote for a location in Texas, at Amarillo? I am willing to follow oftentimes the advice of gentlemen on the other side as a fair-minded legislator. I am not bound to this party by bands which are indissoluble, because I recognize my duty as larger and greater than that, but I will never follow the lead of those who themselves prove to be inconsistent in their arguments. [Applause.]

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DEWALT. I will yield if I can get any time.

Mr. GILLETT. I can explain that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS].

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill must be disposed of under the condition as it exists now, and not under the condition which existed at the time the bill was offered or at the time it was reported. At the time the bill was reported we were in a war, and there was no hope of an early cessation of that war. At that time the Congress and the Nation were both very apprehensive of a tremendous list of casualties and of illness for which provision would have to be made. The war came to a termination somewhat unexpectedly, and fortunately the list of those disabled soldiers is much smaller than we had feared previous to the armistice. I am quite sure in my own mind that practically all of the soldiers who are discharged by reason of disability, or all of those soldiers who are retained in the service and who are suffering from tuberculosis can be taken care of properly by the expenditure of a sum much less than is contemplated by this bill and the other bill that will shortly be presented to the House.

All at once there comes before the House the proposition to expend a million and a half of money for the erection of a permanent hospital at Dawson Springs, Ky., with the idea of treating tubercular soldiers. So far as these hearings disclose, that locality was unheard of as a locality where tuberculosis could be treated beneficially. All over this great Nation of ours there are certain localities especially favored by climatic conditions, as, for instance, the States of Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona. I see by the report of Dr. Banks that practically 70 per cent of the days in Dawson Springs have sunshine. In other words, one day out of every four is a cloudy day. One of the beauties of Arizona, with reference to the treatment of this disease, is that in many portions of that State they have 100 per cent of sunshine. That State has a salubrious climate, where the nights in the winter are comparatively warm, where the patient is permitted to remain in the open air 24 hours a day for practically every day of the year. I doubt very much whether there is a Member of this House, whether his mind is committed to this bill or not, who would send one of his own to Dawson Springs for treatment in preference to either Colorado Springs, Arizona, or New Mexico, if that one of his own were suffering with tuberculosis.

I am not opposing this bill upon any sectional grounds. I am opposing it because I do not care to do with a tubercular soldier what I would not be willing to do with my own son under the same conditions. [Applause.] My opposition to this bill is founded upon a desire to be of benefit to that soldier even at the expense of Dawson Springs, while it seems to me that those who favor this bill are favoring Dawson Springs to the detriment of the soldier. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL].

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is not my purpose to say anything as to the merits of the bill, because yesterday I took up considerable of the time of the committee in debating the merits of the bill. In the few minutes that are allotted to me I simply want to absolve from some criticism that has come from this side of the House two distinguished members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds on that side of the House. I refer principally to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], with whom I have served 10 years on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I want to take this opportunity to publicly commend him for the great service which he has rendered on that committee. He is ardently in favor of this bill and has been doing what he could to pass it. Strange to say, however, the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, one of the most loyal Republicans in the United States, a man who has always been loyal to his party, was defeated, and you gentlemen permitted him to be defeated in the Republican primary, and my understanding is that the leading Republicans on the floor of this House undertook to bring about his defeat.

Another distinguished gentleman on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH], who had gallant service in the Civil War. I am indeed pleased to note that he is standing solidly with us on this proposition.

Now, gentlemen on that side of the House, let me say to you that every Republican, every minority member on the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, every minority member on the Rules Committee, was heartily in favor of this bill, and when you gentlemen on that side, with the two exceptions I have named, lined up against the passage of this bill as you did on times innumerable yesterday, you repudiated the action of the gentlemen on that side of the House who unanimously on these two committees were in favor of the proposition. [Applause.] Now, gentlemen, it is known to every man in this House that in the treatment of tubercular cases they should be separated from other people. It is folly to talk about putting tubercular patients in Army hospitals already established, with other people suffering from other diseases. It is a crime against humanity to do that, and you gentlemen know it, and you ought certainly to be abreast of the times in supporting this proposition, which will make a separate hospital for tubercular patients, where they can be put by themselves and treated in accordance with up-to-date methods.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will yield, I want to ask him in that connection if he will object to limiting this hospital to tubercular patients?

Mr. CANTRILL. I much prefer that it would be done, but I think it is unwise to put restrictions around the Public Health Service. They will use it largely for that purpose, but I do not think it wise to write it into the law now.

Mr. BURNETT. They have stated that they expect in this large area of land to have them segregated.

Mr. CANTRILL. That is the purpose. Now, I do not propose to discuss the merits of the bill, for I did that yesterday, and I do not want to take up much more time. There is one gentleman on that side to whom I always listen with great respect because of his long service, longer than any man in the American Congress, the distinguished ex-Speaker of this House; and although I did not see exactly how it affected the argument on this bill, yet the distinguished gentleman in his time undertook to serve notice on the country that the farmers of the country, when the next Congress comes in, should look for dollar wheat and six-cent hogs, and other things in proportion.

As I recall, one of the main things that contributed to our defeat, especially in the Western and Northwestern States, was the statement that the Democratic Party had placed the price of wheat at $2.20, and then by action of Congress raised it to $2.40, which bill was vetoed by the President of the United States, for which he gave excellent reasons. You gentlemen on that side of the House went to the people and said that the Democratic Party had reduced the price of wheat from $2.40 to $2.20, and therefore we ought to be voted out of power. In some localities in the wheat States we were voted out of power on that issue. Now, here comes a distinguished representative of the Republican Party in the House of Representatives, and he serves notice on the farmers and upon the laboring people of the country that under the next Congress, which will be under your control, the farmer can look for dollar wheat and six-cent hogs, and labor cheapened in proportion. Gentlemen, the proposition is up to you to maintain the prices where we have maintained them, and if you do not do it, after the next election there will not be a handful of you left on that side of the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], with his usual unintentional inaccuracy, stated that many Republicans in the House voted against this war-risk insurance bill, which provided for the hospital treatment. If the distinguished gentleman will refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 13, 1917, when the final vote was taken on that measure, he will find that there were 319 voted in favor of the measure, none voted against it, and five answered "present."

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Has the gentleman investigated the RECORD to find how many Republicans spoke against it?

Mr. WALSH. I have investigated only the statement which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] made, and that was as to the vote. The gentleman sought to lay on this side of the aisle the responsibility for the defeat of this legislation, and as usual he interspersed his remarks with a most glowing and fulsome eulogy of the Chief Executive, now on the high seas. I wonder if, perchance, the Chief Executive, now on his way across the mighty deep, may not experience a deep sense of loneliness from the fact that he is not accompanied on the expedition by his champion on the floor, the gentleman from Alabama. How much it would add to the assemblage upon foreign soil if the Member from Alabama, who has the great advantage over the rest of us in that he looks apparently like what his people think a Member of the House of Representatives ought to look like, was with that expedition. [Laughter and applause.] But if the Chief Executive is deprived of that noble presence, how fortunate, indeed, are we to have him in our midst to rise upon occasions and indulge in partisan speeches, with that noble brow, that manly bosom always encompassed in snowy white.

Gentlemen of the committee, the gentleman from Alabama was present yesterday; and if he has read this measure, which I doubt, he will know that the amendment which is proposed was offered by a Member upon his side of the House who but a few days ago wore the uniform of a soldier of the Republic. [Applause.] That gentleman made a speech to his colleagues here and convinced many of them that, as far as sites go, at least, Amarillo was to be preferred to Dawson Springs, in the Blue Grass State of Kentucky. It can not be said that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] seeks to deprive his former comrades in the Army of the Republic of any benefit that might accrue as the result of this piece of legislation. He it was that offered the amendment that substituted the site. Gentlemen, the fact is that now peace times are approaching you are seeking to return to your old inefficient methods for providing for the administrative functions of the Government. You were inefficient before the war, and you were inefficient in many respects in legislating for the war; you are inefficient in seeking to provide for this great work by piecemeal, and attempting to locate a site and let all but 500 soldiers wait until further provision is made. I assert, sir, that it is just as easy to enact the measure which is pending before the committee, which has not been reported, which leaves the selection of all these sites to the duly constituted authorities, and let them begin the work upon all of these hospitals, as it is to pass this legislation, and not compel them to wait two years for the completion of a sanatorium that will only accommodate 500 people. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 10 minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, there have been more misunderstandings and more misstatements about this bill the past three days than upon any bill that has ever been in the House during my service of 14 years.

I am going to try, if I may in the short time I have, to clear these away. Now, I want to say in the beginning that this bill is the result in part of the work of a committee appointed by the Public Health Service, the War Department, and the Navy Department, and all this talk about the Surgeon General of the Army and about there being thousands of unused beds is simply all stuff; there is not anything in it. Now, I call attention here to an official document, or rather to the men who served upon the committee and who formulated this plan which includes this hospital at Dawson Springs, Ky., and a number of other hospitals which are to be enlarged and added to—at Boston, Mass.; Chicago, Ill.; Cleveland, Ohio.; Detroit, Mich.; Evansville, Ind.; Louisville, Ky.; Norfolk, Va.; New Orleans, La.; San Francisco, Cal.; Seattle, Wash.; St. Louis, Mo.; Wilmington, N. C.; Fort Stanton, N. Mex.; Berkshire Hills; and in North Carolina—and the names of those officers are as follows: Earl H. Bruns, lieutenant colonel, Medical Corps, United States Army; W. E. Eaton, lieutenant commander, Medical Corps, United States Navy; and W. G. Stimpson, Assistant Surgeon General, United States Public Health Service. And in this document, made after this committee had made its report, Surg. Gen. Blue, of the Public Health Service, under date of September 17 last, says this, among other things:

It should be stated that this bureau has, in an effort to supply accommodations for the greatest possible number, filled many of its hospitals to overflowing by placing beds in hallways and verandas, and even in tents scattered about the reservation, and has already rented private dwellings to be converted into temporary hospitals in order to relieve the demand for hospital treatment arising from this source, from the increased merchant marine service, and the constantly growing work incident to caring for injured civil employees of the Government under the compensation act—

And so forth.

That is signed by Gen. Blue.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do.

Mr. SABATH. When was this report submitted?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The 17th of September.

Mr. SABATH. Of this year?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes, sir. Here is a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury on November 18, this past month, in which he states, among other things:

In my letter of September 20, transmitting a tentative draft of legislation, which has since been given H. R. 13026—

That is the ten-million-dollar proposition—

there was also transmitted a report from a committee appointed by the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and myself, in which the statement was made that 13,000 beds would be required for these patients, and that the War and Navy Departments had made no provision for patients other than those of active forces, and therefore the War and Navy Departments had no beds available for patients of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, and in addition thereto a memorandum from the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service of this department, in which the statement is made that these beds would not be for temporary purposes, but would be needed for years to come—

And so forth.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is the official record from an official source, and I submit it to this House in opposition to the statement of a gentleman who says he went to the War Department and talked with some employee and got some information which he undertakes by the use of to defeat this bill.

Mr. BURNETT. And this is one of the very places selected by the War Department?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. One of the very places selected; yes. Now, let me say this: The evidence here in the hearings shows beyond all question that this place was selected by the sworn officers of the Government dealing with this very question. The Public Health Service and the War-Risk Insurance Bureau—they are the people who will have charge of discharged soldiers and sailors—have selected this spot, and they ask us to place a hospital there. There is not any graft in it, there is not any politics in it, and there is not anything in it except an honest effort to comply with the recommendation of the medical authorities having the matter in charge. Ah, Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen on the other side make all sorts of arguments, but when it comes to the test every one of them lined up and went through tellers and voted for Amarillo, Tex., and against locating this hospital at Dawson Springs, in Kentucky, which the Medical Department says is the proper place. They voted for Amarillo, where, I understand, there is not water enough to keep a jack rabbit alive for 30 days, and yet, without any evidence of its fitness, knowing its total unfitness, every one of them voted for it, and I dare say that if the bill should come to a vote on final passage with Amarillo, Tex., as the location for the hospital, not one of you would vote for it, and you know it, and therefore you are simply playing with a proposition here involving the health and the treatment of these soldiers and sailors who have been discharged. Your vote for Amarillo shows this beyond the shadow of a doubt.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. For a question only. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

Mr. JONES. I would like to ask the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. Two minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then I can not yield. [Laughter.] This hospital is not limited to tubercular patients. Tubercular patients, those suffering from kidney disease, those suffering from rheumatism and diseases of that kind, and there are thousands of them; it is intended for them. Gentlemen then say you can not build it in two years. I deny that, because the evidence in this record shows they are to put up narrow, long buildings that can be constructed rapidly, and which will be constructed rapidly, and the evidence in this case shows that buildings have been rented in New York, buildings rented in Savannah, residences have been fitted up, and tents have been used to try to take care of these boys satisfactorily until a proper place can be constructed where these men can go and get what we are in duty bound under our oaths to give them—the very best treatment that money, science, and intelligence can supply. You agreed to do that in the law when you passed it. You are under your solemn oath to give them this treatment, and I am appealing to you, gentlemen, for God's sake, drop your political stuff now because it happens to be on the border line, not even in the South, but happens to be on the border line, and you do not want it to go there. Why? Is it because the gentleman who represents the district is a Democrat, or is it because you think they may be tinctured with a little southernism down there? Which is it? It is bound to be one or the other. The place is testified to as the best they inspected. The officers of the departments are asking for it. The War Department, the Navy Department, the Public Health Service, and the War-Risk Bureau, all of them, are asking that the hospital be located there, and you have not a single word of testimony against it. What moves you? Politics? It is sectional alone, and you can not get around it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed five minutes.

I wish to correct a misrepresentation of facts as to the water there and as to the location.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. JONES. I was just asking for unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] objects.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment reported.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I make the point of order on the ground that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MONDELL: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to designate such general hospitals and hospitals at camps and cantonments, now under the jurisdiction of the War Department, for the treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States as in his opinion can advantageously be utilized for such purposes, and are not needed for those in the military and naval forces, and the said Secretary shall within 30 days after the passage of this act report to Congress as to the character, location, and capacity of the hospitals designated by him as available for the treatment of those discharged from the military and naval forces."

The CHAIRMAN. To this amendment the gentleman from Florida makes the point of order that it is not germane.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I certainly do.

Mr. MONDELL. I trust the gentleman will withdraw the point of order and do something for the discharged soldiers.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. When did the gentleman get it into his mind that he wanted to do something for the soldiers, when he has been fighting a proposition for three days here to do something?

Mr. MONDELL. I am proposing something that will furnish something.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MONDELL. Why, Mr. Chairman, the amendment is subject to a point of order beyond question. I was in hopes the gentlelman would not insist on the point of order, as the amendment would bring about the establishment of conditions under which discharged men could be immediately provided for in hospitals.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The next question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] to strike out the enacting clause. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: Page 1, lines 1 and 2, strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Division, Mr. Chairman!

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 95, noes 99.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois and Mr. CLARK of Florida took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 116, noes 106.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 12917, had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The question is on striking out the enacting clause.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I demand the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 153, nays 157, answered "present" 8, not voting 115, as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER]. If I were permitted I should vote "no."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the room listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. SISSON. I was in the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman can not vote.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. HELM with Mr. DALE of Vermont.

Mr. PRICE with Mr. MUDD.

Mr. DUPRÉ with Mr. SWIFT.

Mr. HOWARD with Mr. ROWE.

Mr. SEARS with Mr. BACHARACH.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. FOSTER in the chair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "acres," strike out the language down to the word "for," line 9 of page 1. On page 2, line 4, after the word "beds" insert the following:

"The location of such sanatorium under the terms of this act shall be determined by a commission of suitable size, to be appointed by the President, and such commission shall certify that the site accepted is the most desirable site tendered and is a proper site for such sanatorium."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment. I understood that an agreement was entered into yesterday afternoon that after the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Wyoming was disposed of and the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] was voted upon that no other amendment should be in order.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is under a misapprehension, I think. At least I took a minor part in coming to the agreement, and that was not my understanding, and that was not the language used. We did agree to have a vote on the motion to strike out the enacting clause, and, of course, if that had prevailed there would be no other amendment offered. But there was no agreement not to offer amendments if the vote to strike out the enacting clause was not agreed to, either in the committee or in the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, it is impossible to tell what was in the mind of the gentleman when the agreement was made.

Mr. MANN. I tried to be very careful that the request was stated in that way, and I think the RECORD will show it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, if the gentleman understood it differently, I would not try to interpose an objection to the amendment, except on the question of whether it is germane or not, and I will reserve the point of order outside the statement I have made.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, while they are looking up the question, I think, possibly, we can settle this whole disturbance. I think the gentleman from Illinois has offered his amendment in good faith, as he always does, and if the gentleman will support the bill, if his amendment is adopted, I think we are prepared to accept it.

Mr. MANN. I will say very candidly, Mr. Chairman, that while I have not consulted with many Members on this side of the House concerning this matter, if the amendment is agreed to, I propose to vote for the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. We will accept the amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk reported the amendment again.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Illinois explain what is going to become of the Amarillo proposition under this amendment?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we have all heard the debate on this bill and the varying positions it has occupied at different times. There is no division of sentiment in this House or in the country upon the proposition as to whether the General Government shall make ample provision for the care and restoration to health, if possible, of any and all of the boys who went to the front in behalf of the American Republic. [Applause.]

There was a proposition to locate the site of a sanatorium, said to be in the main for the treatment of tuberculosis, at a particular place, and the Committee of the Whole on a vote substituted another place. A majority of the committee in the vote indicated their belief that western Texas was probably a better location for a tuberculosis sanatorium than any place selected in Kentucky, without any reflection upon Kentucky. But after all we do not know just where this or any other sanatorium is best located. We must trust either our own judgment, which we know is weak, or trust the judgment of some of the administrative officials or of some one appointed to select a location. The proposition which I have offered strikes out the selection of any particular place and will authorize any locality to tender to the United States a thousand acres of land. If it had not been subject to a point of order, I would not have left it to be tendered to the Government; but this permits a commission to be appointed by the President to investigate all of these circumstances and locate this sanatorium at the best place, whether it be Dawson Springs, Amarillo, Colorado Springs, the Adirondacks, or wherever it may be.

And I have had occasion to know that it may not always be easy to tell the best location for the treatment of tuberculosis, but I think we can afford at this time to take the judgment of a commission, and it may be that the commission will report in favor of some existing hospital which the Government now owns. I do not know whether under the strict terms of the bill that could be done, but I apprehend that if a commission were appointed and found that the Government had a hospital already constructed which was not needed in the future for the Army, it might properly recommend that a sanatorium under the Public Health Service should be located at that point. We can afford to spend all the money that may be necessary, and we can not afford to lose sight of the fact that Congress must begin to recognize enconomy in the administration of its own affairs and appropriations. [Applause.]

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, of course I do not indorse this amendment, because I think, in view of the investigation that has already been made by those who are in authority, that this bill should pass in its original form, yet I am ready to submit to the majority of this House on any proposition, especially when any proposition has been so thoroughly discussed as this has; yet, nevertheless and despite the things that may have been said in the heat of debate, I am ready, so far as the adaptability of Dawson Springs is concerned, to submit it along with any other part of the United States, in view of its splendid climate, the medicinal qualities of its water, its central location, and its railroad facilities, and in view of that, so far as I am concerned, I shall vote for this bill as amended by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I, of course, have no interest in the bill, except that I have been trying to do the best I could to provide a place for the treatment of injured soldiers, but I do want to say this, that in the future unanimous reports from committees coming to the Committee on Rules will not be so persuasive as they have been in the past. The Committee on Rules is a committee of procedure, not a legislative committee. It has been, or has tried to be, the servant of the House. Whenever a report from a committee has come before the Rules Committee as a unanimous report, the committee has given great consideration to that, and it has been extremely persuasive. I do not know how it will be in the future, but for the rest of this term unanimous reports of committees, unless they display some vision, will not, so far as I am personally concerned, have the effect they have had heretofore. The gentleman is throwing away everything that was involved in this bill. It was not made a straight party proposition when it was brought in here the day before yesterday. Every Republican opposed it——

Mr. DENISON. No; not every one.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Now, in order to avoid the possibility of placing themselves in the position of not trying to take care of discharged soldiers, you propose this amendment, which the gentleman from Florida has seen fit to accept. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There is no mistake about it. This was not brought in as a proposition except to serve the honorably discharged soldiers. The foundations of this hospital would have been built by now except for the objection upon the Republican side. Through two days you have maneuvered in an effort to defeat this proposition. Why? You know why. Then finally, when you found that you can not afford to go to the country upon the proposition——

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. We just came back.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, surely, the gentleman from Illinois believes that the election of Republicans will cure tuberculosis and restore a limb to a wounded man! I have heard many things claimed for the Republican Party, but I never heard that claimed before. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You now are not willing to go to the country upon a straight opposition to this bill.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. We are.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. You are?

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then vote down the bill.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. We can not; you will not help us. There is not enough of us, but there will be enough of us two years from now to vote it down.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There will be enough two years from now to destroy the lives of many soldiers who are waiting for help. Oh, gentlemen, gentlemen! I have through many years seen gentlemen who have insisted upon giving pensions, service pensions, to men, not with respect to their contracting disability in the line of duty, not with respect to their financial need, but because of their service. We have been denounced as treasonable because we insisted, some of us, that there should be at least a disability or a financial need. I have seen gentlemen who have run fast to the support of that proposition stand here now and fight this thing to make a hospital for the treatment of tuberculosis.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has my time expired?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have seen these gentlemen who are always running to that proposition stand up and fight every movement here toward taking care of the soldiers of a united country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why is it? The matter is very plain and simple. Hospitals will be constructed throughout the different sections of the country for the treatment of diseased men, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I think, made some reference to unpreparedness. The Bureau of Public Health sent its representative out to look over this place, and he reported upon it favorably.

Gentlemen, many soldiers will be discharged down in Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, and southern Illinois who can take advantage of this service if it is given. It is not an exclusive proposition. Gentlemen seem to have proceeded upon the theory that this was to be an exclusive hospital. It is not. Of course, the son of the gentleman from Iowa would not have to go there. But why is it that you object, gentlemen, to soldiers, men who went to the colors, having the opportunity to go to a place near by in order to be treated for whatever it may be? I understand, of course, I am entirely helpless about the matter now. I have no interest in the world in Dawson Springs. I have been there occasionally. I do not know whether it is a better place than any other place, but I do know this, that it is the only place that the Public Health Service has reported favorably upon. And I resent the idea that the Public Health Service has not been considering this proposition, and that it has failed to prepare for it.

The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] accepts the amendment. Of course, there is nothing further that I can do; there is nothing further that I desire to do. All that I have desired to do from the beginning has been to try to bring about a situation under which these men could be treated.

Mr. DENISON. What objection has the gentleman from Tennessee to a commission appointed by the President selecting the most available site?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. None in the world.

Mr. DENISON. Then what are you talking about if you have no objection to that?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is a very intelligent question, may I say? I do not know whether I can say anything to the gentleman from Illinois that would enlighten him or not. The only place that the Public Health Service has reported upon, after many investigations, is this particular proposition at Dawson Springs. I have predicated my support of this bill upon the thought that the Public Health Service, charged with the responsibility and the duty of administering the law that was provided by Congress, had investigated and favorably recommended this particular site.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do.

Mr. POWERS. Is it not true that Dawson Springs is the only place that has been examined by the Public Health Service; and do not the hearings show that?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; that is not true. Does the gentleman care to ask anything further?

Mr. POWERS. I think the hearings show that.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. I understood the gentleman to say that the Committee on Rules was unanimous in the report on this measure.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I did not state such a thing. And I knew that the gentleman from Ohio, who hates everything from the South, was opposed to it. What I stated was that it was stated before the Committee on Rules that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was unanimous in favor of the report.

Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to ask anything further?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GILLETT and Mr. GREEN of Iowa rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] is recognized.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I see that the House is anxious to vote. I just wish to say a word.

I have great respect for the gentleman and for his ordinary fairness, but he undertakes to read a lecture to this side of the House, and I presume he referred to me personally, for I remember when this bill came up at the last session I was one of those who said I thought the bill ought not then to be considered, and the reason I then gave was the reason which is covered by this very amendment, that we ought not to pick out without thorough medical investigation one locality in the country and place the hospital there, but that we ought to undertake a comprehensive survey and be sure that we placed it not only in a good place but in the best place.

And I wish to suggest to the gentleman that this side of the House has for the last year and a half not been critical. We have thrown away many opportunities where we thought we ought to criticize. We have allowed many bills to go through of which we did not approve and which we thought had in them favoritism and sectionalism and politics, because when the war was in progress we did not propose to raise any obstruction. We lost sight of all minor issues in the earnest support of everything which tended to win the war. And although we often thought that under the guise of a war purpose many selfish and political ends were attained, particularly by the executive departments, yet we did not yield to the temptation to criticize and oppose them, because we feared that we might retard the war.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Did the gentleman vote for the Amarillo proposition yesterday?

Mr. GILLETT. I thought Amarillo was better than Dawson Springs. [Laughter and applause.] But, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. REAVIS. Does not the gentleman know that this very morning the Surgeon General's office made the statement that Dawson Springs had been offered as a site, together with a hotel, if they would accept it, and they refused to do it because the location was unsuitable?

Mr. GILLETT. I was not aware of that. I am glad to be advised of that and to have that brought before the House.

Mr. BURNETT. I would like to know who in the Surgeon General's office stated that. We would like to have the authority.

Mr. REAVIS. It was stated this morning, but the gentleman's name was not given.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I will.

Mr. FESS. When this matter came before the Committee on Rules I made the request to know if there had been any hearings of any sort of any representative of the Surgeon General's office or the Public Health Service, and because there had not been anyone before the Committee on Rules I said I would not vote for it; and although it passed in the Committee on Rules, it was decided later on not to report it until a subsequent meeting, about which I knew nothing. I was not at the other meeting. And I would like to state, if the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit, that the insinuation that I vote against this or that measure because it comes from any particular geographical location is hardly fair to this side of the House or to that side, either. What I object to is any party in power discriminating totally in favor of its own side and recognizing no rights on the other side. That is what I object to. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, while in the past we have put aside all these political and sectional thoughts, being wrapped up in the one purpose to win the war, now that the war is over I think it is but fair that that side should understand that there will be in the future more careful scrutiny of bills, and that while we stand always ready to provide for the returning soldiers whatever they may need, yet we want it done fairly. When we suspect that a bill is urged more because of some sectional or political advantage than for its ostensible purpose, when we suspect, as in this instance, that a hospital is located more for the advantage of the locality than the health of the soldiers, we are going to assert our opinion, and you know that the time is soon coming when those opinions will be put into force. [Applause on the Republican side, and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope this side of the House will not be too tender about lectures directed to us from the other side of the House, because it is the only satisfaction they can get now.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, the Senate is operating somewhat.

Mr. MANN. Having been repudiated by the people at the last election—the Democratic majority of the House and the Democratic majority of the Senate—let us keep our good nature and our tempers on this side while they whine about it on that side, and let us dispose of this thing good-naturedly all the way through. [Cries of "Vote"!]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have just three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Alabama will be recognized for three minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the only purpose that I had in view in trying to press this bill was on account of the expeditiousness of it. It was shown to be an urgent necessity by eminent physicians who were before our committee. If we delay about different sites proposed, that means months of postponement when this work could be going on.

It has been twice stated in this debate—and that is the main reason why I rose—that the Surgeon General's office, or some one in high authority there, had said that Dawson Springs was not a suitable place for the sanatorium. I want to give the gentleman who made that statement one minute of my time—whoever is responsible for it—in which to name the officer of the Surgeon General's office who made that statement. There ought not to be any hiding out. If any gentleman said he heard an official say that, and stated it on authority, the gentleman owes it to himself and to this House to state the name of the officer of the Surgeon General's office who made such a statement; and I now yield to the gentleman time to give it, whoever is responsible for that statement.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have not made the statement.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman has not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can see that a Member of this House who has received such information from the Surgeon General's office would be doing a very dirty trick—a very dirty trick, indeed—to disclose the name of the man who makes the statement in the Surgeon General's office here.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then he ought not to use it.

Mr. MANN. It certainly would be considered by the War Department as a violation of the rules, which permit no information being furnished to anybody outside, and it might result in the court-martialing of a very conspicuous officer in the Surgeon General's office.

Mr. BURNETT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I think it was certainly a very dirty statement to make when a man, for fear of compromising some official, should make the statement here and hide behind the fact that in some way it might compromise that official to name him, and therefore refuse to name him.

Mr. MANN. A great many rumors are stated on the floor of this House frequently. No gentleman has stated on the floor of this House that authoritatively such a statement was made by the Surgeon General's office.

Mr. BURNETT. If it was not made, I take that as an explanation; but I understood the gentleman to say that such a statement had been made to a Member of this House by a high official of the Surgeon General's office.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, the statement I made on the floor of the House a few minutes ago was that I had been advised this morning by a Member of this House that one of the prominent officers in the Surgeon General's office had made the statement that the site of Dawson Springs, a thousand acres of its land, and the hotel situated thereon, had been offered to the Government for a tuberculosis hospital and had been refused by that department for the reason that the location was unsuitable. I have no doubt, knowing the character of the Member of this House who told me, that the statement was made to him. I do not know the name of the officer who made it to him, but it is certain in my mind not only that the statement was made but that the officer related the fact to the Member. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does this amendment dispose of the question of Amarillo, Tex.?

The CHAIRMAN. It does. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

In carrying the foregoing appropriations into effect the Secretary of the Treasury may purchase materials and labor in open market or otherwise and employ laborers and mechanics for the construction of such buildings and their equipment as in his judgment shall best meet the public exigencies within the limits of this appropriation.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out the paragraph, lines 16 to 21, inclusive, and insert the following:

"In carrying the foregoing authorizations into effect the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to enter into contracts for such construction, equipment, etc., or to purchase materials and employ laborers and mechanics, and construct, equip, etc., said sanatorium, etc., as in his judgment shall best meet the public exigencies within the limits of this authorization."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. Will the gentleman from Florida state what the purpose is in including the phrase "and so forth" in the committee amendment which is inserted in lieu of the language stricken out? What does it apply to and what does it mean?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman will notice that the language stricken out really prohibited the letting of the work by contract. It confined the Secretary of the Treasury to building it himself with his own force. That was one reason why the language was stricken out and the other was inserted, so that he might enter into a contract for the purchase of materials, and so forth.

Mr. WALSH. I understand the difference between the two phrases, but I want to know what the meaning of this particular phraseology is.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is the phraseology that the Superintending Architect has always used in paragraphs of this sort in all public-building bills—"for construction, equipment, and so forth." I suppose that is to cover something of a like character that might be left out.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit, may I direct his attention to the effect of this phraseology? It says:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to enter into contracts for such construction, equipment, etc., or to purchase materials and employ laborers and mechanics, and construct, equip, etc.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I should say that the approaches and appurtenances to the sanatorium would be covered by that.

Mr. WALSH. That is intended to include all the appurtenances to the sanatorium?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is the idea.

Mr. WALSH. "To construct, equip, and so forth, said sanatorium"—what does that mean?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I suppose that means anything incidental to it. I do not see that this can do any possible harm.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman see any harm in striking out that phraseology?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I prefer not to strike it out, because it is their peculiar method of drafting it. I do not think it will do any harm.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the committee amendment. Mr. Chairman, at the time the original provision for which the committee amendment is a substitute was adopted we were in a condition of war. Labor conditions were very uncertain. The material market was very uncertain, and it was deemed necessary to have some provision under which the work could be done otherwise than by contract. There was some objection made to the original proposition, on the ground that it possibly authorized the letting of a contract under the so-called cost-plus contract, and I presume that the substitute was adopted in order to make it clear that no cost-plus contract could be made.

However, the amendment still provides for the construction of this building through the purchase of material and equipment and the employment of labor. Now we have returned to times of peace, and it occurs to me that with the return of peace conditions we should return to the usual practice of the Government and provide for construction under contract. Not only should the amendment go out, but the original provision should go out also. That having been accomplished, this sanatorium will then be constructed under contract in the usual way. There are no conditions in the country which seem to me to justify a provision authorizing the construction under force account and the purchase of material in the open market.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, strike out lines 16 to 21, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. That is already proposed to be stricken out by the committee amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The committee amendment strikes out and inserts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that the way to get at that is to vote down the committee amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I ask for a division of the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendment, being a motion to strike out and insert, can not be divided.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the Chair will hear me, I offered that as a substitute for the committee amendment. It is altogether a different proposition. The committee amendment is to strike out language and insert, and my amendment is to strike out and stop there.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, under the rules the motion to strike out and insert, if defeated, would not prevent a motion to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what the Chair was trying to explain.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman can not get a division of the proposition. He can only give notice that if the motion to strike out and insert is defeated he will then move to strike out. Let us observe the rules, in any event.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is entirely correct. The gentleman from Iowa can then offer his amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I object to the gentleman from Illinois calling what I have offered "an amendment." With all due deference to the gentleman from Illinois, it is a substitute.

Mr. MANN. A substitute is an amendment, and so provided in the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly; but the committee can vote down the committee amendment and then the gentleman from Iowa can offer his amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then I want to be heard on the committee amendment. The committee amendment ought not to prevail, for the reasons stated by the gentleman from Wyoming and for numerous other reasons. There is not the excuse now that we are engaged in war as a reason why we should have this kind of a provision. It would authorize the Secretary of the Treasury not only to enter into a cost-plus contract but any other kind of a contract that he wanted to enter into, without asking for bids or proceeding in the ordinary manner. There is no occasion for this. If we are to do it with this bill, we ought to do it with every other bill that is brought before us. This is simply a proposition to exempt this particular case from all rules that we have applied to contracts made by this Government. If this contract is let at all—I do not think it ever will be—it ought to be let by publishing a proposition to receive bids. This matter is already a subject of scandal and disgrace, and this will simply make it a subject of further scandal and disgrace. I regret that the gentleman from Tennessee is not here, but I wish to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I am opposed to this whole proposition and that I intend to vote against it; and I hope that a number of the other Members on this side will vote against it, notwithstanding the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

I agree with all that the gentleman from Illinois has said as to the reasons why he should offer his amendment, but they do not militate against the reasons why this bill should be voted down in any event. There is not the slightest necessity for it. What the other side ought to do if they want to help the soldiers and help them immediately, if they want to give these men a chance to recover instead of having a chance to die, is to present a resolution here opening the Government hospitals, where there is an abundance of room for them and abundant opportunities to take care of them. But they have declined to do this. They refused to do it a year ago when I offered my bill, and they refuse to do it now. If they can not have this pet job they will have nothing, and in my judgment they will get nothing in the end.

I regret to see gentlemen on this side giving encouragement to a scheme in which I can see nothing but waste, pure and simple, at a time when we should be seeking every opportunity to cut down expenses. This hospital ought not to be built, because we already have more hospitals of this kind than we can use. It ought not to be built because it will not be occupied when built and is not asked for by the soldiers. Nor is there any reason for appropriating half the money provided in the bill. As a result of legislation of this kind I can only see more liberty loans, without the slightest advantage or benefit to the soldiers. I would spare no expense where the soldiers can be benefited, but how are we to obtain the money for their needs if we squander it in this manner?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word. The gentleman from Iowa talks about his bill. He admits that he simply introduced it and went around to the Military Affairs Committee once. He knows that that is not the way to get a bill through here. He knows that when a gentleman introduces a bill he has got to follow it up. He has got to go around to the committees, he has got to keep it up. There is no evidence here that he did anything except introduce it and go there one time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No. Now, the original bill forced the Secretary of the Treasury to let out the work by contract, and our committee thought that we ought to give him discretion to let it by contract or purchase the materials and build it with his own constructing force if he saw fit to do so; if it was for the better interests of the Government to go into the open market and buy materials and use his own force and put up this building, that he could do that, or he could let the contracts.

Now the war has not ended. There is simply an armistice. Peace has not been declared and all the conditions of war still exist. Certainly there has been no falling off in the price of labor. There has been no falling off in the price of materials. Conditions to-day are exactly what they were when this bill was reported, with the exception that an armistice is in force and that we are not actually fighting to-day. There is no telling but what we may be fighting within a month. The war is not ended. All the conditions are exactly the same as they were except that we are not actually fighting, and it seems to me that we ought to give the officers of the Government the power to exercise their judgment, letting it by contract or else doing the work themselves, and that is all this amendment amounts to. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to employ for service within or without the District of Columbia, without regard to civil-service laws, rules, and regulations, and to pay from the sums hereby authorized at customary rates of compensation of such additional technical and clerical services as may be necessary exclusively to aid in the preparation of the drawings and specifications for the above-mentioned objects and the supervision of the execution thereof, and for traveling expenses incident thereto, at a total cost for such additional technical and clerical services and traveling expenses of not exceeding $33,000 of the above-mentioned limit of cost.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in lines 6 and 7, on page 3, the words "without regard to civil-service laws, rules, and regulations," and, in line 8, strike out the word "of" where it last occurs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WALSH moves to amend, on page 3, lines 6 and 7, by striking out the words "without regard to civil-service laws, rules, and regulations," and, in line 8, strike out the word "of" where it last occurs in the line.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, it would seem that in carrying on this work of construction and providing these walks, grounds, and parking, and so forth, in view of the greatly increased number of men upon the civil-service lists who have been drawn upon for various war activities, now that the need of men for war work is about to cease, we ought to permit the operation of the civil-service laws and regulations once more, and that we ought to require these men who are to be employed for this work, done under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be drawn from the various eligible lists. Now, I wish to point out to the chairman of the committee the fact that the word "of" in line 8, where it last occurs, is evidently an error, because it does not make, I think, good sense.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That ought to be stricken out.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The word "of" ought to be "for."

Mr. WALSH. I have nothing further to submit, except I think we ought not to let down the civil-service bars on this proposition.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, this provision refers to highly technical men, and sometimes they are over the age of civil service, beyond the age of 45. It is very hard to get them, and it has been customary in practically all the building bills we have passed here for a number of years in the days of peace as well as of war to have a provision of that character—bills for the construction of the great departmental buildings, and all that. In the construction of the great departmental buildings it has been customary to allow the Secretary, if it were necessary, to go outside and employ technical skill and to do so without regard to the rules of the civil service. I do not care anything personally about it one way or the other, except it has been customary here for a long series of years to include that kind of provision. It is really necessary if we are going to get the kind of service required.

Mr. WALSH. Of course this only applies to technical and clerical assistants?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is all.

Mr. WALSH. And as I understand it, the civil service does have an eligible list of technical and clerical assistants, architects, draftsmen, and so forth.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. They do have examinations, but I do not think you get many people through them. I know it has been customary in the construction of big departmental buildings always to have a provision of this character. They have always requested it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, just an inquiry. Should not that amendment be divided? There is no objection to striking out the word "of" the last time, and it ought to go out; but there is objection to striking out the other part. I ask for information. Should not that amendment be divided?

The CHAIRMAN. It can.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I ask that it be divided.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I accept the part striking out the word "of," which is, of course, obvious.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the word "of" will be stricken out and the question is upon the other part of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman. I withdraw the request.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 15, after the word "cost," insert "Provided, That no contract shall be awarded under this act under what is known as the cost-plus system of payment."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. We have no possible objection.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Said sanatorium shall be under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury and operated under the direction of the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this, Mr. Chairman, just to make two or three brief observations. I am glad this bill is finally to pass, and pass with a somewhat national character. We have divided frequently in this House on the tariff and other questions, but the most remarkable exhibition that we have had in division in this House since I have been here has been on the subject of tuberculosis. This controversy is the second division we have had. The other occurred in the passage of the agricultural appropriation bill last winter, when it was sought to furnish the funds for the eradication of tuberculosis in food animals.

Now, this great plague has been carried more than three milleniums in man and brute and is communicable from one to the other. One of the great sources of infection or communication is from the food animals to the human being. I desire to recall for the benefit of those who have seen fit to criticize the partisanship in this division what occurred on February 1 of the present year. Look on page 1692, when a strong effort was made on this side of the House to make liberal appropriation for the work of eradication of tuberculosis. Milk from food animals is the source where human tuberculosis is obtained more than from other humans. The division in that case was practically as it has been during this contest for the past two days—divided almost strictly upon the political lines of the House. There were but six of those to my left who voted for the increased appropriation and only three on my right who voted against it. It pleases me especially to see this bill as it is about to pass take on a national character and not a sectional one. In both cases the Republicans battled for construction and control in a national and nonsectional method.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, just a word. I want to say this: Our committee brought this bill into the House, as has been often stated here, with an absolutely unanimous vote of the committee. There was not a breath of opposition to it of any kind on either side. Of course, I had the right to expect that we would have the active support certainly of every member of the committee, because no voice was raised against it. The committee was induced to report the bill, because the Public Health Service and the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, the Medical Department of it, had investigated sites in New York, California, Minnesota, and Kentucky and had decided on this as the logical place to build this first hospital, and it is only the forerunner of a number to follow, which are to go in different sections of the country. That high medical authority after investigation spoke in favor of it, and it was brought in here by the unanimous report of the committee. We have been now here three days trying to get this bill through and there has been a stubborn fight against it for various alleged reasons. I want to say this, if gentlemen are willing to put themselves in the attitude of trying to defeat a bill of this character because they think the site ought not to be at some particular place, I do not want to put myself in the attitude and in the way of getting a hospital, no matter where it goes.

I do not care whether they put it in Maine or in California or anywhere else. It does not make a particle of difference to me. I want it put where those gentlemen in charge of the affair and who should know, say it ought to go, and for that reason I have stood for the place named in the bill. But when I saw, Mr. Chairman, that there was a determined effort upon the other side to defeat that proposition and the eminent gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made his proposition, which I considered fair, I immediately agreed to accept it, because it means a hospital; it means that this business will be taken care of, and I am satisfied when the President appoints his commission you will see the hospital located at Dawson Springs, because it has already been selected by the medical authorities. Mr. Chairman, under permission granted me to extend my remarks I shall print herewith House Documents 1294 and 1361, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, as follows:

[H. Doc. No. 1294, 65th Cong., 2d sess.]

HOSPITAL AND SANATORIUM FOR TREATMENT OF SOLDIERS AND SAILORS BY PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, September 20, 1918.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith a tentative draft of legislation, with the request that the same be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for immediate consideration:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to provide immediate additional hospital and sanatorium facilities for the care and treatment of discharged, sick, and disabled soldiers and sailors, patients of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, and for others entitled to treatment by the Public Health Service, by lease or purchase of existing plants or the construction of new hospitals and sanatoria, to include the necessary buildings, with their appropriate mechanical equipment and approach work, including roads leading thereto, for the accommodation of patients, officers, nurses, attendants, storage, laundries, and live stock, on sites now owned by the Government, or on new sites to be acquired by purchase or otherwise at such places as he may elect, including the remodeling of such of the existing or authorized buildings and their equipment, owned by the United States, as may be necessary to economically adapt such facilities to those herein provided, at the sanatorium at Fort Stanton, N. Mex., and at such of the marine hospitals where increased facilities can be placed, at a limit of cost for sites and buildings, etc., as aforesaid, complete, of $9,700,000, or as much thereof as may be found necessary; for miscellaneous furniture and equipment for the above, $800,000; in all, $10,500,000; and the above amounts are hereby authorized, and when appropriated to be immediately available and remain available until expended.

"The Secretary of the Treasury, in securing additional sites herein provided for, may request the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Agriculture, or the Secretary of the Interior to transfer to the Treasury Department such lands or parts of land under their control, not required for other purposes, as may be found suitable for this use, and they are hereby authorized to make such transfer as may be in the interest of the Government.

"In carrying the foregoing authorization into effect, the Secretary of the Treasury may enter into contracts for the lease or purchase of existing buildings, grounds, and equipment, or purchase materials and labor in open market, or otherwise, and employ laborers and mechanics for the construction of such buildings and their equipment as in his judgment shall best meet the public exigencies, within the limits of this authorization.

"And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to employ, for service within or without the District of Columbia, without regard to civil-service laws, rules, and regulations, and to pay from the sums hereby authorized, at customary rates of compensation, such additional technical and clerical services as may be necessary, exclusively to aid in the preparation of the drawings and specifications for the above-mentioned objects and the supervision of the execution thereof, for traveling expenses, and printing incident thereto at a total limit of cost for such additional technical and clerical services and traveling expenses, etc., of not exceeding $330,000 of the above-mentioned limit of cost."

Attached hereto are photostatic copies of certain reports and recommendations, which are self-explanatory and show the necessity for the above legislation.

Respectfully,
W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Subject: Need of enlarged hospital facilities.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the care and treatment of men who have been discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States who are beneficiaries of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, and are in immediate need of sanatorium facilities.

2. Under the provisions of the amended act of October 6, 1917, defining the duties of this bureau it is provided in article 3, section 300, paragraph 3, that the sick or injured beneficiaries "shall be furnished by the United States such reasonable governmental medical, surgical, and hospital services and with such supplies, including artificial limbs, trusses, and similar appliances as the director may determine to be useful and reasonably necessary."

3. Section 303 provided that "as frequently and at such times and places as may be reasonably required, submit himself to examination by a medical officer of the United States or by a duly qualified physician designated or approved by the director."

4. At present the only "governmental" hospital services available for this work are the hospitals and relief stations of the United States Public Health Service, as the hospitals of the Army and Navy can not be used for the treatment of discharged soldiers and sailors under the law, because these men have resumed their civilian status, and for the further reason that these hospitals are entirely occupied with the sick and disabled who are now in active military and naval service. The chief medical advisor of this bureau is now making use of every hospital and relief station of the Public Health Service in all parts of the country, and as this hospitalization of discharged soldiers and sailors is increasing, the necessity of making increased provisions in the hospitals of this service will be more acute when the Army is numerically increased.

5. The great problem connected with this work is the caring for discharged soldiers and sailors suffering from tuberculosis, and as 10,000 have already been discharged and are eligible for compensation and sanatorium treatment, the chief medical advisor informs me that he has already filled the Government sanatorium at Fort Stanton, N. Mex., to its capacity, and that he is finding difficulty in procuring suitable bed space in local hospitals, where the cost of maintaining them is greater than in the Government institutions.

6. The experience of the allied nations should be our guide in making preparation for the cases which will inevitably become a charge upon this bureau in the near future, as both England and France have returned tens of thousands of cases from the front broken down by this disease.

7. It is therefore the desire of this bureau that this condition be represented to the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service directing his attention to the department's needs in this respect, and urging his cooperation in providing sufficient bed space, either by the enlargement of hospitals now existing or the construction of new buildings.

Respectfully,
WILLIAM C. DELANOY,
Director.

MEMORANDUM.

AUGUST 10, 1918.

The SECRETARY: Referring to the attached letter from the Director of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, I beg to strongly approve the suggestion that the attention of the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service be directed to the needs of the medical work of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, as pointed out in the letter of the director, and that he be urged to cooperate in providing the necessary facilities for taking care of this work with the least possible delay.

Sincerely,
THOS. B. LOVE,
Assistant Secretary.

To Surgeon General, United States Public Health Service, by direction of the Secretary.

Approved:
J. H. MOYLE,
Assistant Secretary.
AUGUST 14.

SEPTEMBER 11, 1918.

Report of the committee appointed by the chairman of the conference of officers of the Army, Navy, and Public Health Service to obtain data regarding the number of men discharged from the military forces and the percentage of these engaged who will become beneficiaries of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau; also to present conclusions, if any could be reached, regarding the accommodations which should be furnished to those patients.

This committee has the honor to make the following report:

The largest number of discharged soldiers requiring treatment will be cases of tuberculosis. Fourteen thousand men have already been discharged from the Army on account of this disease. During the remainder of the calendar year 1918 and during the year 1919 it is estimated that 20,000 men will be rejected on their primary examination at the camps after induction into the service.

The War-Risk Insurance Bureau of the Treasury Department would have to care for these patients. From its experience, three-fourths, or about 26,000, will avail themselves of sanatorium treatment.

It is estimated that the average length of time the patients will remain in a tuberculosis sanatorium is six months. Therefore 13,000 beds will be required for these patients.

The number of soldiers that will be discharged from the Army hereafter during the war will be small, as it is the policy of the War Department since May 21, 1918, not to discharge tuberculosis soldiers as long as they need sanatorium treatment. Practically the same policy is followed in the Navy Department.

The War and Navy Departments have made no provision for the treatment of patients other than those of the active forces, and therefore no beds are available for patients of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau.

The number of soldiers discharged for diseases other than tuberculosis that will require hospital accommodations will probably be small and can be taken care of in existing hospitals.

Medical Corps, United States Army.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE,
OFFICE OF THE SURGEON GENERAL,
Washington, September 17, 1918.

Memorandum for the Secretary.

Report of the proceedings of a conference held at the office of the Surgeon General of the Army to consider what provision should be made for the hospital treatment of patients of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance.

Officers of the Army, Navy, Public Health Service, and the chief medical advisor of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance were present at this conference. A committee was appointed by the chairman to obtain data regarding the number of men discharged from the military forces and the number which would, in all probability, become beneficiaries of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau during the remainder of the year 1918 and the year 1919. A copy of the report of this committee is attached. This report shows that 13,000 beds should be provided for patients for the War-Risk Insurance Bureau suffering from tuberculosis, and the Army and Navy state that they have made no provision for the treatment of these patients, nor do they contemplate doing so. The number of patients suffering from tuberculosis for whom beds will be necessary is estimated to be 26,000, but only one-half of this number of beds will be needed, as it is improbable that any patient will remain at the sanatorium for more than six months at one time. These beds will not be for temporary purposes, however, but will be needed for years to come, because, with recurring breakdowns of tubercular soldiers, they will apply for reentrance and treatment, and will be entitled to receive it under provision of the war-risk insurance act. If new buildings are built for this purpose, at least six months will be required for their construction after authority is granted by Congress, at a cost of approximately $26,000,000.

It is recommended that the estimates for 5,000 beds only be approved at this time, at a cost of approximately $10,000,000, and the remaining beds be provided for in a supplementary estimate, to be submitted to Congress at a later date.

The draft of a bill attached to these estimates authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to construct new buildings or rent existing buildings, if such can be found.

RUPERT BLUE,
Surgeon General.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE,
OFFICE OF THE SURGEON GENERAL,
Washington, September 17, 1918.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

SIR: Complying with departmental instructions of August 10, accompanying a letter from the Director of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, dated July 30, 1918, a copy of which is hereto attached, there is submitted herewith for your consideration and approval estimates for the supply of hospital and sanitoria facilities for the care and treatment of beneficiaries of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau and others entitled to receive treatment by the Public Health Service of this department, which it is recommended be transmitted to Congress for their earliest possible consideration as an unusual necessity brought about by war conditions.

These estimates are based on careful calculations in collaboration with the medical advisor of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau for the supply of minimum facilities which, it is believed, will serve the country's needs in this direction along the lines set forth in the letter from the director of that bureau, above mentioned.

Attention is invited to the last paragraph in the letter above referred to, in which it is stated that 10,000 soldiers and sailors suffering from tuberculosis have already been discharged and are eligible for compensation and sanatorium treatment. It should be stated that this bureau has, in an effort to supply accommodations for the greatest possible number, filled many of its hospitals to overflowing by placing beds in hallways, on verandas, and even in tents scattered about the reservations, and has already rented private dwellings to be converted into temporary hospitals in order to relieve the demand for hospital treatment arising from this source, from the increased merchant-marine service, and the constantly growing work incident to caring for injured civil employees of the Government under the compensation act, and while further efforts are being made to locate and make use of privately owned hotels and other property that may be adaptive to this use this practice is neither satisfactory nor economical.

In providing these increased accommodations, it should be stated that our estimates are based on supplying facilities for caring for approximately 5,000 patients, as a minimum of the total number of patients entitled to receive treatment from these sources, who will require or demand same. It is not thought desirable, however, to limit the availability of the appropriation to accommodations for any specific number, as it may later on be found necessary to provide for a greater proportion than that above mentioned, if the same can be done within the limits of this appropriation.

One of the primary considerations in locating these sanatoria facilities is to have them in suitable climates and within economical travel and purveying areas and in such sections of the country that beneficiaries need not of necessity be widely separated from their native surroundings or homes.

In meeting these conditions it is thought that approximately 2,000 should be placed in quarters to be erected on marine hospital sites, indicated in the attached list; that a new hospital and sanatorium should be located at Norfolk, Va., with a capacity of approximately 300 patients; one at Seattle, Wash., with a capacity of 150 beds; and that the balance be distributed in new sanatoria, located as may be best suited to the needs of the service to be performed.

For your convenience there is submitted herewith a tentative draft for legislation which it is believed provides for all the necessary things to be done in supplying these additional facilities.

The estimated cost of the necessary sites and buildings, including miscellaneous furniture and equipment, is $10,549,000.

Respectfully,

RUPERT BLUE,
Surgeon General.

HOSPITAL ACCOMMODATIONS FOR DISCHARGED SICK AND DISABLED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, November 18, 1918.

THE SPEAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Pressing necessity of the utmost gravity impels me to invite your attention to two bills pending in Congress to supply hospital accommodations for discharged sick and disabled soldiers and sailors, patients of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, and others entitled to treatment by the Public Health Service of this department, namely, H. R. 12917, to provide certain hospital facilities at Dawson Springs, Ky., on land to be donated to the Government, and H. R. 13026, to provide like hospital accommodations at various points throughout the country. The former bill was introduced in the House on September 11, and on investigation by the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee was reported out and subsequently made a special rule in Congress, that the greatest possible expedition might be given to the project, and at this writing I understand that the bill is only waiting for a quorum in the House to complete the legislation in that branch of Congress.

I my letter of September 20, transmitting a tentative draft of legislation, which has since been given H. R. 13026, there was also transmitted a report from a committee appointed by the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and myself, in which the statement was made that 13,000 beds would be required for these patients, and that the War and Navy Departments had made no provision for patients other than those of active forces, and therefore the War and Navy Departments had no beds available for patients of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, and, in addition thereto, a memorandum from the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service of this department in which the statement is made that these beds would not be for temporary purposes, but will be needed for years to come, and that the estimated cost of supplying the number of beds required would be $26,000,000 for hospital accommodations for soldiers and sailors suffering from tuberculosis.

In addition to these patients, I am advised in a letter dated October 26, from the chief medical advisor of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, that the Surgeon General of the United States Army asked for some practical solution for supplying sanatoria for restorative or institutional treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces suffering from epilepsy, due to shell shock and other causes. The War Department is desirous of discharging these cases into the care of the War Risk Insurance Bureau. In connection with these cases it is estimated that accommodations for not less than 2,000 should be immediately provided for out of the funds carried in H. R. 13026.

The bills above referred to represent estmates for approximately 6,000 beds only, but it is of the utmost importance that this number be made available at the earliest possible moment. Since these estimates were transmitted to Congress an armistice has been declared and hostilities ceased, but while these are happy conditions it has, as a matter of fact, foreshortened the day and hour when hospital accommodations must be made available, and has pressed home to me the tremendous responsibility of supplying accomodations for the sick and disabled discharged soldiers and sailors who will soon return from overseas in overwhelming numbers, and I can not too strongly urge upon you to exercise all your influence to translate the proposed legislation into law, as one of utmost importance, in order that the Government may carry out its part of its contract with the soldiers and sailors who have so magnificently carried out their entire contract with the Government, and to this end request that this legislation be made a special rule in the House, in order that funds may be made immediately available for the purpose above stated.

Respectfully,

W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I now move that the committee do rise and report the bill and amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12917) to provide for the establishment of a sanatorium for the treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same to the House, with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I agreed to ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the vote has been taken and the bill is passed. If this is done, I want a separate vote on some of the amendments.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I had addressed the Chair and made a motion to reconsider and lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that the demand of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for the yeas and nays comes too late, because the Chair had recognized the gentleman from Florida to reconsider and lay on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, pending that matter, I ask unanimous consent. A number of gentlemen on this side of the House said that they would like to have a roll call. I talked with some gentlemen on that side of the House, and told them I was going to ask for a roll call. Somebody was talking to me or I was thinking of something else—I do not know which——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. There is not a quorum here if you get a roll call.

Mr. MANN. I think there is a quorum in the offices. I think it would be well to have the roll call.

Mr. LEVER. Why not take an adjournment and have the vote to-morrow? Many Members have gone, thinking there would be no roll call.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is to put the vote on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to get a roll call. If they will not give us a roll call, I can not get a roll call on that very well.

The SPEAKER. The noes have it.

So the motion was rejected.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask that my colleague, Mr. SEARS, be excused from attendance indefinitely on account of illness. And I would like to state that I had a telegram from Mr. SEARS two or three days ago asking me to do that, and it has been because of my neglect that I have not done it before.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks leave of absence for his colleague [Mr. SEARS] on account of illness. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I wish to secure leave of absence for 10 days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks leave of absence for 10 days. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT OVER UNTIL SATURDAY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet next Saturday. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, awhile ago I understood that the House was to meet Saturday only for the purpose of receiving the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and that no other business was to be transacted.

Mr. KITCHIN. I was going to give that notice, that after we have met Saturday and the gentleman from Mississippi presented his report on the District bill I would move to adjourn over until Monday.

Mr. FOSTER. Why not get permission to do it?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the bill will be perfected to-morrow or to-morrow night. It is the District of Columbia bill. We finished marking up the bill just a moment ago. Some gentlemen on that side, as I understand, have applied to the ranking member of this subcommittee for time on general debate. The bill is ready to be printed now, and if it is printed Saturday and we can take the bill up I would like to have unanimous consent that the general debate only on the bill be completed on Saturday.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not press that request, because I do not think the House ought to be required to go into consideration of any large appropriation bill before the Members have had a chance to see it.

Mr. SISSON. Oh, I will say this to the gentleman, that——

Mr. MANN. Well, I will say this to the gentleman, that I will not have a chance to see it. The gentleman may have a chance, but the House will not have a chance to see it, certainly before Saturday afternoon. It will not be released before that. That is the usual thing until after it has been reported to the House. Now the gentleman suggests that we immediately proceed to the consideration of it.

Mr. SISSON. Let us state the facts about it correctly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman assumes that nobody ever considers the bill under general debate. That is not a correct assumption. The gentleman would close general debate on Saturday.

Mr. SISSON. Yes; close general debate on Saturday.

Mr. MANN. That means to make the precedent that anybody who wants to be heard on an appropriation bill can not be heard on it at all.

Mr. SISSON. Then the bill can not be taken up for consideration by sections until Monday, under that agreement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have the District of Columbia appropriation bill printed to-morrow, so that I may present it to the House on Saturday.

Mr. GILLETT. Why do you need unanimous consent?

Mr. SISSON. To get my bill printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to have the District of Columbia appropriation bill printed to-morrow night. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object—and I do not wish to object to anything that the gentleman wants done—of course, the gentleman will have the bill printed anyway, whether the House gives consent to have the bill printed or not. The bill is printed for the use of the committee, I assume.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It can be at any time.

Mr. SISSON. But I want it printed also for the use of the House.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman wants it printed as if reported by the committee to the House?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It will be reported to the House Saturday noon.

Mr. SISSON. I want to have it printed so I can report it to the House on Saturday and then take it up on Monday.

Mr. GARNER. I understand the gentleman desires to occupy Saturday in the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill?

Mr. MANN. Yes; but we do not think that ought to be done.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman does not need unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. I am not sure whether the practice in the Government Printing Office has been changed, but heretofore it has been the practice, where a bill was ready to be reported, that the Government Printing Office at the request of the committee would print the bill as though it were reported, and release it only when the report was made.

Mr. SISSON. Of course, that is the committee print, as it is called.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; I am not speaking about that. I have no objection to the gentleman having it printed.

Mr. SISSON. What I want to do is not to lose a day in presenting the bill to the House. I want to have the bill printed as if it were reported to the House from the committee, and I merely ask unanimous consent that it be printed.

Mr. WALSH. If this unanimous consent is not given, when will Members be able to get copies of the printed bill.

Mr. SISSON. I hope to have the printed bill ready on Saturday——

Mr. WALSH. If this consent is not given.

Mr. SISSON. Whether unanimous consent is given or not; but what I wanted to do was to let the RECORD show that the bill was presented to the House, so that it could be taken up on Monday.

Mr. WALSH. I do not see that you are going to gain anything by that.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman from Mississippi reports the bill on Saturday, he can take it up on Monday. He does not need unanimous consent.

Mr. WALSH. He is asking to have the bill printed before it is reported. I do not think that is the way it ought to be done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD on the hospital bill which we have just passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill that the House has just passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. The Chair put my request that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday?

The SPEAKER. Yes. That has been agreed to.

Mr. KITCHIN. I now give notice that on Saturday after the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] presents his report on the District bill I shall ask that the House adjourn, so that it will be practically an adjournment until Monday, and if gentlemen desire to go home to-night and come back Monday they can do so.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I want to say to the gentleman from Mississippi that I want to speak on a matter not connected with the bill.

WATERS OF BRITISH COLUMBIA AND ALASKA.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, a little over a month ago a vessel was wrecked in Alaskan waters and between 300 and 400 persons lost their lives. This no doubt has been called to the attention of the Senate and I will not go into details. I have here an editorial in the Railway and Marine News, in the nature of a petition to Congress, calling attention to the conditions there and urging legislation along certain lines to prevent disasters of this character, that I feel ought to be called to the attention of Congress. I wish to read a couple of paragraphs calling attention to the particular features of the situation, which ought to have attention. It says:

Let the world know why in the past month an American vessel, with nearly 300 on board, when in dire trouble in British Columbia waters, was compelled to receive permission of officials of that Province before her passengers could be transferred to another vessel of the same fleet.

Then—

Let it ascertain—

Referring to the commission or body that is suggested ought to be organized to investigate conditions there—

Let it ascertain if it is not a fact that in the more recent and heartrendering case, the wreck being in United States waters the Canadian owners would have to have permission of the United States before one of its own vessels could attach a line to the wreck or a Canadian salvage vessel could have performed its proper duties.

That question implies that that is the law; that in that case before a Canadian vessel could attach a line to an American vessel in danger and distress it would have to get permission from our authorities.

I ask that the entire editorial may be printed in the RECORD; it is not long, and I hope that Senators who are interested in matters of this kind will examine the suggestions made. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the editorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Railway and Marine News.]

IN THE NAME OF HUMANITY—AN APPEAL TO THE PROPER OFFICIALS OF THE GOVERNMENTS OF CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES.

[By Kenneth C. Kerr.]

Another terrible marine casualty is reported from Alaska, where in the past years dozens of vessels, millions in property value, and numberless human lives have found a resting place in the icy waters of those sparsely lighted and poorly protected shores.

In the case of the Princess Sophia the loss of life is most appalling, making it the most serious wreck of record on the Pacific. The vessel struck and held for a time on the rocks, but later broke in two and sank without one survivor. In all 343 are said to have been lost, and the monument over their final resting place is the unlighted Vanderbilt Reef in United States waters.

A fairly new steel vessel of British build and registry, worth a million; possibly another million in gold dust, in addition to those precious human lives, mostly American, many Canadians, and others—all lost with not even a trace left. And possibly it could have been avoided.

Oh, the pity of it!

Without prejudice and lacking details, with no thought of suggesting criticism of the ship's officers, does not this teach a lesson? Is it not the opportune moment for insisting that something be done to at least minimize the risk of such tragedies in those waters of British Columbia and Alaska?

The route from Seattle to Skagway is, roundly, 1,150 miles. The vessels travel through waters of the State of Washington, then across the open Strait of Juan de Fuca, then for some 500 miles or more through British Columbia, and then for the balance of some 500 miles or more in the United States waters of Alaska.

For years Congress has been petitioned to build more and more lighthouses in Alaska. British Columbia is much better lighted, but there is room for vast improvement.

Then the rules governing salvage operations are positively awful. Under existing laws, both of Canada and the United States, an American vessel can not salve a wreck in British Columbia waters, nor can a Canadian vessel do salvage work in American waters. Oftentimes it is extremely difficult to draw the line between what would be considered by either Government as work of humanity and what would infringe on salvage laws. The masters of foreign ships now place their owners in jeopardy every time they extend aid to a ship in distress on Canadian or American coasts. Laws should be changed, and at once, or another and even more horrible disaster will be recorded.

Railway and Marine News, in the name of humanity, calls upon the Governments of the United States and Canada to remedy this great wrong by at once appointing a joint commission to study and report upon—

The coastwise laws,
Lights and aids to navigation,
The rules of salvage,
The dangerous reefs,
Continuance of geodetic surveys,
Charting unknown waters of and pertaining to the waters of the Inside Passage of British Columbia and Alaska.

Without prejudice to either Government, let all coastwise laws, in so far as they pertain to navigation and safety at sea, be so readjusted and made uniform as to meet the peculiar needs exclusively existing in the Inside Passage.

No such condition or territorial boundary lines exist in other sections, so the law should be made to cover this international route exclusively.

If the salvage rules are such that they are a menace rather than a help and promote money-making on either side of the boundary, then let this commission recommend a permanent international salvage bureau, with salvage or life-saving stations, six in number, between San Juan Islands and Admiralty Island, each station to have a powerful salvage craft to be operated by and for both Governments without unjust charges.

Let the world know why in the past month an American vessel, with nearly 300 on board, when in dire trouble in British Columbia waters, was compelled to receive permission of officials of that Province before her passengers could be transferred to another vessel of the same fleet.

Let it ascertain if it is not a fact that in the more recent and heartrending case, the wreck being in United States waters, the Canadian owners would have to have permission of the United States before one of its own vessels could attach a line to the wreck or a Canadian salvage vessel could have performed its proper duties.

Think of this, citizens of Canada and the United States. Let the two illustrations, each of occurrence in October, 1918, prove the case in point.

Nearly 700 human lives in peril in one week—half of them lost!

The existing coastwise laws should not in either case be allowed to apply to the route specified, and this should be the chief work of the commission in its suggested investigation. This refers to navigation and "safety first" only.

Let us forget all the years of salvage overcharges and graft. Let any ugly scandal of the past be buried in oblivion. But let the commission make it impossible for any future overcharge or salvage graft to be consummated.

Admit that the conditions of this route are unique and demand an exclusive law regulating the navigation of ships and their safety at sea and call for an international navigation or salvage bureau, without hardship or prejudice to the owners, the employees, the passengers, or the ships of either country. Do not allow politics to delay the move. Do not permit traffic, immigration, customs, or other important matters to be interjected into the argument, but hold it down absolutely to the protection of those who must travel back and forth incessantly between the States and the Canadian Territory of Yukon and the United States Territory of Alaska, the ill-treated stepchildren of those great Governments.

And in the name of God and humanity let us appeal to the proper authorities of each Government to show their promptness and patriotism in getting quick and favorable action.

Finally, may we not plead in behalf of the hundreds of dead men, women, and children, of the thousands sorrowing in desolate homes from the Arctic Circle to the coast of California—

"Let there be light."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate hold a session on Sunday, December 15, for the purpose of eulogies on the life and character of my late colleague, Senator BENJAMIN RYAN TILLMAN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At what hour?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Beginning at 11 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EVASION OF MILITARY SERVICE BY GERMANS.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 373), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate as soon as possible about how many citizens and subjects of countries neutral during the war with Germany there are who have resided in this country and declared their intentions to become citizens of the United States but chose to withdraw their declarations of intention to become citizens in order to evade military service under our draft laws.

THE COAL SITUATION.

Mr. VARDAMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 374), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved further, That the said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby empowered to sit and act during the session or recess of Congress, or of either House thereof, at such time and place as it may deem necessary; to require, by subpœna or otherwise, the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, books, and documents; to employ stenographers, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to take and make a record of all evidence taken and received by the committee and keep a record of its proceedings; to have such evidence, record, and other matter required by the committee printed; and to employ such other clerical assistance as may be necessary. The chairman of the committee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses. Subpœnas for witnesses shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee thereof.

Resolved further, That the expenses thereof shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers ordered by said committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

UNITED STATES PEACE COMMISSIONERS (S. DOC. NO. 311).

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD and also as a public document a statement which has been prepared at the Library for me as to all peace commissioners appointed in the United States in the various wars in which we have been engaged, beginning with Algiers in 1795. It is a brief but complete statement, and I think Senators will find it very valuable for reference.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed as a public document and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Davis, Senator from Minnesota and chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations; George Gray, Senator from Delaware and the foremost member of the Democratic minority in that body; and Whitelaw Reid, editor of the New York Tribune and formerly minister to France and special ambassador to Great Britain. The secretary was John Bassett Moore, Assistant Secretary of State."

The commissions were issued the 13th of September, 1898. Day was appointed "Commissioner plenipotentiary of the United States." The other commissions read in a similar manner.

The nominations were not submitted to the Senate.

The commission to Mr. Day was as follows:

"Know ye! That, reposing special trust and confidence in the integrity and ability of William R. Day, of Ohio, I do appoint him a commissioner plenipotentiary of the United States, under the protocol signed at Washington of the 12th day August, 1898, to negotiate and conclude a treaty of peace between the United States and Spain, and do authorize and empower him to execute and fulfill the duties of this commission, with all the powers, privileges, and emoluments thereunto of right appertaining, during the pleasure of the President of the United States.

The commissions of the other American plenipotentiaries were in the same form, their names being as follows: Cushman K. Davis, of Minnesota; George Gray, of Delaware; William P. Frye, of Maine; and Whitelaw Reid, of New York.

Wednesday, June 2, 1813.

Mr. King submitted the following motions for consideration, which were read:

2. Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause to be laid before the Senate copies of the commissions granted to Albert Gallatin, John Quincy Adams, and James A. Bayard, to negotiate treaties of peace and commerce with Great Britain and a treaty of commerce with Russia.

3. Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform the Senate whether Albert Gallatin, commissioned as one of the envoys to treat of peace and commerce with Great Britain and of commerce with Russia, retains the office of Secretary of the Department of the Treasury; and in case of his so retaining the same to inform the Senate under what authority and by whom the powers and duties of the head of the Treasury Department are discharged during the absence of Albert Gallatin from the United States.

Monday, June 7, 1813.

The following written message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. Graham:

To the Senate of the United States:

In compliance with their resolution of the 3d instant, the Senate are informed that the office of the Secretary of the Treasury is not vacated and that in the absence of Albert Gallatin, commissioned as one of the envoys to treat with Great Britain and Russia, the duties of that office are discharged by William Jones, Secretary of the Navy, authorized therefor according to the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act making alterations in the Treasury and War Department," passed May 8, 1792.

JAMES MADISON.

Monday, June 14, 1813.

Mr. Anderson, from the committee appointed the 10th instant on the nomination of Albert Gallatin, reported:

"That in obedience to the resolution authorizing the committee to inquire and report thereon he had addressed a letter to the President of the United States, inclosing a copy of the resolution under which the committee were appointed; that he afterwards called on the President of the United States, who informed him that he did not consider the authority given to the commitee by the resolution such as to authorize them to call on him in their official character; but that if they were especially instructed to call upon him, he would freely receive them and appoint a time for that purpose";

Mr. Anderson submitted the following resolutions for consideration, which were read:

"Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate the powers and duties of the Secretary of the Department of the Treasury and of those of an envoy extraordinary to a foreign power are so incompatible that they ought not to be and remain united in the same person.

"Resolved, That the committee to whom was referred the nomination of Albert Gallatin (Secretary of the Department of the Treasury) as an envoy extraordinary to treat of peace and commerce with Great Britain and of commerce with Russia be instructed to communicate the foregoing resolution to the President of the United States and respectfully to confer with him upon the mater thereof."

Wednesday, June 16, 1813.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolutions submitted by Mr. Anderson on the 14th instant; and

On the question to agree to the first resolution,

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 20, nays 14.

So it was

Resolved, That, in the opinion of the Senate, the powers and duties of the Secretary of the Department of the Treasury and those of an envoy extraordinary to a foreign power are so incompatible that they ought not to be and remain united in the same person.

On the question to agree to the second resolution,

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 20, nays 14.

So it was

Resolved, That the committee to whom was referred the nomination of Albert Gallatin, Secretary of the Department of the Treasury, as an envoy extraordinary, to treat of peace and commerce with Great Britain and of commerce with Russia, be instructed to communicate the foregoing resolution to the President of the United States and respectfully to confer with him upon the matter thereof.

Monday, July 19, 1813.

Mr. Anderson, from the committee appointed the 10th instant, on the nomination of Albert Gallatin, reported:

"That in obedience to the resolution authorizing the committee to inquire and report thereon, he had addressed a letter to the President of the United States, a copy of which accompanies this report, inclosing a copy of the resolution under which the committee were appointed; that he afterwards called on the President of the United States, who informed him that he did not consider the authority given to the committee by the resolution such as to authorize them to call on him in their official character; but that if they were especially instructed to call upon him, and the specific object should be designated, he would freely receive them and appoint a time for that purpose."

Mr. Anderson then made this further report, to wit:

"The committee to whom was referred the nomination of Albert Gallatin to be one of the envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to negotiate and sign a treaty of peace with Great Britain, under the mediation of the Emperor of Russia, to negotiate and sign a treaty of commerce with Great Britain, and to negotiate and sign a treaty of commerce with Russia, together with the message of the President of the United States of the 7th June—

"Report: That, according to the instructions of the Senate of the 16th June, the committee, through its chairman, addressed a note to the President of the United States on the 12th instant, which accompanies this report, and in reply thereto the President addressed a note to the chairman on the 14th instant, which note also accompanies this report, appointing Friday, the 16th instant, to receive the committee, to communicate the aforesaid resolution of the Senate, and apprising the committee of his late message to the Senate containing the grounds on which he would be obliged to decline the proposed conference with the committee. Upon due consideration of this reply the committee deemed it an incumbent duty to wait on the President, according to his appointment, and to present to him both the resolutions of the Senate in relation to the nomination referred to the committee; and did, accordingly wait on him and present them; when the President was pleased to observe to the committee, in substance, that he was sorry that the Senate had not taken the same view of the subject which he had done, and that he regretted that the measure had been taken under circumstances which deprived him of the aid or advice of the Senate. After the committee had remained a reasonable time for the President to make any other observations, if he thought proper to do so, and observing no disposition manifested by him to enter into further remarks, the committee retired without making any observation on the matter of the resolutions or in reply to those made by the President."

Whereupon,

The nominations of Albert Gallatin, John Q. Adams, and James A. Bayard, agreeable to the message of the President of the United States of the 31st May last, were resumed.

On the question, "Will the Senate advise and consent to the appointment of Albert Gallatin?"

It was determined in the negative—yeas 17, nays 18.

On the question, "Will the Senate advise and consent to the appointment of James A. Bayard?"

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 27, nays 6.

So it was—

Resolved, That the Senate do advise and consent to the appointments of John Q. Adams and James A. Bayard, agreeable to their nominations, respectively; and

That they do not advise and consent to the appointment of Albert Gallatin.

Ordered, That the Secretary lay the foregoing resolution before the President of the United States.

Thursday, January 14, 1814.

The two following written messages were received from the President of the United States, by Mr. Coles, his secretary:

To the Senate of the United States:

I nominate John Quincy Adams, James A. Bayard, Henry Clay, and Jonathan Russell to be, jointly and severally, ministers plenipotentiary and extraordinary, to negotiate and sign a treaty of peace and a treaty of commerce with Great Britain.

I nominate Jonathan Russell to be minister plenipotentiary to Sweden.

JAMES MADISON.

Tuesday, January 18, 1814.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the message of the President of the United States of the 14th instant, nominating John Quincy Adams and others to offices; and

On motion by Mr. King, to postpone the further consideration thereof to Monday next,

It was determined in the negative—yeas 12, nays 20.

On the question, "Will the Senate advise and consent to the appointment of John Quincy Adams?"

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 31, nays 2.

On the question, "Will the Senate advise and consent to the appointment of James A. Bayard?"

It was unanimously determined in the affirmative—yeas, 32.

On the question, "Will the Senate advise and consent to the appointment of Henry Clay?"

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas, 29; nays, 2.

On the question, "Will the Senate advise and consent to the appointment of Jonathan Russell?"

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas, 22; nays, 8.

So it was

Resolved, That the Senate do advise and consent to the appointments of John Quincy Adams, James A. Bayard, Henry Clay, and Jonathan Russell to be jointly and severally ministers plenipotentiary and extraordinary to negotiate and sign a treaty of peace and a treaty of commerce with Great Britain.

Tuesday, February 8, 1814.

The two following written messages were received from the President of the United States by Mr. Coles, his secretary:

To the Senate of the United States:

In consideration of the protracted absence of Albert Gallatin, Secretary of the Treasury, and the prospect of conveniently associating his services in the contemplated negotiations for a treaty of peace and a treaty of commerce with Great Britain I nominate George W. Campbell, of Tennessee, to be Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

Albert Gallatin to be minister plenipotentiary and extraordinary, jointly and severally, with John Quincy Adams, James A. Bayard, Henry Clay, and Jonathan Russell, to negotiate and sign a treaty of peace and a treaty of commerce with Great Britain; Richard Rush, now Comptroller of the Treasury, to be Attorney General of the United States, in place of William Pinckney, resigned.

JAMES MADISON.

Wednesday, February 9, 1814.

On the question, "Will the Senate advise and consent to the appointment of Albert Gallatin?"

It was determined in the affirmative.

So it was

Resolved, That the Senate do advise and consent to the appointments of George W. Campbell and Albert Gallatin, agreeably to the nominations, respectively.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
August 5, 1813.

GENTLEMEN: I am very sorry to be under the necessity of communicating to you an event of which there was no anticipation when you left the United States.

The event to which I allude is the rejection by the Senate of the nomination of Mr. Gallatin on the idea that his mission to Russia was incompatible with the office of the Secretary of the Treasury.

After the appointment of Mr. Jay, when Chief Justice of the United State, by President Washington, and of Mr. Ellsworth, when holding the same office, by President Adams, by which a member of a separate branch of the Government was brought into an office under the Executive, and after the sanction given in practice as well as by law to the appointment of persons during the absence of a head of a department to perform its duties, it was presumed that there would not be any serious or substantial objection to the employment in a similar service of a member of the administration itself.

Although this nomination was opposed in the Senate as soon as it was acted on, yet it was not believed that it would be rejected until the vote was taken. At an early stage the President was called on by a resolution of the Senate to state whether Mr. Gallatin retained the office of Secretary of the Treasury; and in case he did, who performed the duties of that department in his absence. The President replied that the office of Secretary was not vacated by Mr. Gallatin's appointment to Russia and that the Secretary of the Navy performed its duties in his, Mr. Gallatin's, absence. After this reply, which was given in conformity with the President's own views of the subject, and with those of Mr. Gallatin when he left the United States, it was impossible for the President, without departing from his ideas of propriety in both respects, to have removed Mr. Gallatin from the Treasury to secure the confirmation of his nomination to Russia. It would have been still more improper to have taken that step after the rejection of the nomination. The President resolved, therefore, to leave the mission on the footing on which it was placed by the vote of the Senate, by which the nomination of Mr. Adams and Mr. Bayard was confirmed. Whatever has been done jointly under the commission, given to the three commissioners by the President when you left the United States, in compliance with your instructions will not be affected by this event. (From A Great Peacemaker. The Diary of James Gallatin, secretary to Albert Gallatin, 1813–1827. New York, Charles Scribner's Sons. 1914. Pp. 10–12.)

PROHIBITION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I hereby give notice that it is my intention to move within a few days that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads be discharged from further consideration of Senate bill 5052, to make section 5 of the Post Office appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, as amended by section 1110 of the war revenue act of October 3, 1917, applicable to the District of Columbia, and that the bill be placed on the calendar.

Mr. President, the making of this motion will involve no reflection on the committee. I realize the extreme difficulty of securing a quorum in the committee under present conditions. A bill similar to this has been pending before the committee for several months. A subcommittee of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has made a favorable report on the bill, but it seems that it will be impracticable to get a meeting of the full committee before the holidays. Therefore I take this action as the only course which offers promise of any definite development.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, on behalf of the Finance Committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, I present a favorable report (No. 617), with certain amendments, recommending that the bill be passed as amended.

When the bill was considered before the armistice, there was unanimous action on the part of the committee. As to some parts of the bill as now presented the committee was in disagreement. My understanding is that the minority desire to file a minority report as to that part of the bill.

The Finance Committee finished the consideration of the bill at a late hour yesterday afternoon. Neither the members of the minority nor myself, representing the majority, have had time to prepare a formal report. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to be allowed to file a report hereafter. I did not consider it advisable to hold the bill back until these reports were prepared. On account of the necessity for the prompt consideration and passage of this legislation, it was thought best to make the formal report this morning, so that Senators, if they desire, might have a day or two to examine the bill before it is taken up for consideration.

I should like very much to have some expression from Senators as to what length of time they would like to have to look at the bill before it is taken up.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I was called out of the Chamber to answer the telephone. I do not understand that the chairman of the committee has filed his report this morning.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have made a favorable report on the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I understand that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I stated to the Senate that we only finished the consideration of the bill late yesterday evening; that the minority desire to file a minority report as to a certain part of the bill; and that I, as representing the majority, will prepare a formal written report.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the chairman expect to file that report this week?

Mr. SIMMONS. It is my purpose to file the report to-morrow if possible. It may be that I shall not be able to do so before Monday, but by next Monday at furthest.

Mr. PENROSE. The minority have under consideration the filing of a minority report, but of course that can not very well be done until the report of the chairman of the committee is submitted to the Senate. As far as the time to be consumed in the consideration of the bill is concerned, I think I can assure the chairman of the Finance Committee that there is absolutely no disposition to delay this measure. I take it that——

Mr. SIMMONS. That was not the question I asked, Mr. President. The question I asked was propounded with a view to invite an expression of opinion as to how soon we might take up this bill for consideration, assuming of course that Senators will desire some little time to look it over before we begin the discussion.

Mr. PENROSE. I should think a reasonable time ought to be permitted for all Senators to study this very complicated and encyclopedic measure. Some time toward the middle of next week, I would say, next Tuesday or Wednesday.

Mr. SIMMONS. I had hoped it might suit the views of the minority members of the committee and Senators generally to take up the bill on Monday.

Mr. PENROSE. We could hardly get the minority report ready in that time. I would suggest that the Senate adjourn to-day until next Tuesday and then proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let me ask the Senator from North Carolina a question. If the bill is not passed soon, then the revenues will be collected under the present law? Am I right?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator that my information from the revenue department is to the effect that safety requires that they shall begin preparing their forms at least by the 1st day of January; that is, if the returns are to be required to be made on the 15th day of March.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. You are speaking of the bill just reported?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am speaking generally. Now I am going to reply——

Mr. LODGE. Before the Senator begins again, if he will permit me, on the point of which he made inquiry about time for Senators to examine the bill, I think, to allow a day or two for the Members of the Senate at least to look over the bill would not be unreasonable, and I think it would probably expedite discussion. It is a bill of 275 pages, and it is riddled with amendments.

Mr. PENROSE. It took the committee nearly two months and one-half to consider the amendments.

Mr. LODGE. And it took the House four months to make up the bill. I think it would not be unreasonable that Senators who were not on the committee should have an opportunity to look over the bill a little before it is taken up. I think it would really help matters if they did.

Mr. SIMMONS. Senators will understand that I have not the slightest disposition to deny a reasonable time for that purpose. I should like to ask the Senator, if the bill goes over until Tuesday, allowing three whole days, including Sunday, and I believe Senators do examine such documents on the Sabbath, does he not think that would give ample time for the purpose?

Mr. LODGE. It depends a good deal upon the time when the bill can be put in the hands of Senators.

Mr. SIMMONS. The bill has already been printed, and I can furnish Senators copies of it to-day.

Mr. LODGE. Senators can get copies of the bill to-day?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; right away.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not think the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina to take up the bill on Tuesday is unreasonable. It certainly ought not to be taken up a day earlier.

Mr. SIMMONS. Assuming that that will be satisfactory, I will give notice now that on Tuesday morning, as soon as I can do so, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill. I wish to say in this connection, Mr. President, that I regard the immediate passage of this bill as so vitally important that when once we have begun consideration of it I am going to do my utmost to proceed with it to the exclusion of other business until we have reached a final vote.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator further consent at the proper time to move to adjourn the Senate until Tuesday?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not charge of the matter which is the unfinished business. I presume——

Mr. PENROSE. I assume the Senator will be largely in charge of the business of the Senate while this bill is pending.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not had any consultation with Senators as to the program for to-morrow, if there is any, and I would not like to commit myself without conferring with them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to say that the pending measure which is the unfinished business ought to be disposed of very shortly. I hope that will be done, and after that I would have no objection to an adjournment until Tuesday. I hope the unfinished business will be disposed of before any agreement to adjourn for three days is made.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee if he has concluded to press a vote upon the unfinished business as it stands to-day?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I think there will be a vote after we reach the hour of 2 o'clock—I hope more than one vote—but I think we can easily dispose of the bill this afternoon.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason why I asked that question was because of a remark the Senator made me last evening after the close of the session of the Senate. At that time the Senator had not fully made up his mind as to whether he would ask a vote on the unfinished business, considering its condition at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. I see no reason why we should not finish the bill this afternoon.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator from North Carolina a question, he spoke about taking up the revenue bill to the exclusion of other business. I understand that in making it the unfinished business the Senator does not propose to exclude all morning business during the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I did not mean that. Of course, there will be the morning hour. I meant to say that I would not yield the floor for some other measure.

Mr. LODGE. That is quite right, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will make an arrangement to adjourn over until Tuesday.

Mr. SIMMONS. My embarrassment is that my bill is not before the Senate and I am not in charge of the floor, but I will take up that question with Senators on this side.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Tennessee expects the unfinished business to be disposed of to-day, and then the Senate could adjourn until Tuesday.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, if I may, I will undertake to answer the inquiry made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with reference to the urgency of the passage of this bill.

The Senator asked me when was the latest date the bill should be passed in order to afford ample time for putting this machinery into operation so as to secure returns on the date provided in the bill, which is the 15th of February. I am advised by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that it will be necessary to begin the preparation of the forms by the 1st of January. He also stated that it would be exceedingly dangerous to delay the beginning of that preparation until the 15th day of January.

The forms have to be provided, and there is considerable difficulty in their preparation; the millions of copies of them have to be printed and circulated. It is also necessary to train many experts to go out in all the districts of the country for the purpose of explaining to taxpayers the methods of calculation, of computation, and so on, in order to facilitate the returns and to enable the taxpayers to prepare them in time to make them as provided by law.

The present law and also the pending bill each contain a provision which would authorize and enable the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to extend the time of filing the returns for one month. That was done, as Senators will recall, last year, when it was found practically impossible, after the present law had been passed, to prepare the forms in due time. The commissioner exercised the power to extend the time for making the returns to the 15th of April. He can this year do the same thing. That would, however, extend the time for the payment of the first installment of taxes, and it might be a little embarrassing to the Government not to be able to realize upon the first installment of such taxes on the 15th day of March. The calculations of the Secretary of the Treasury, I understand, in making his arrangements for issuing certain certificates of indebtedness against these installments have been made with a view to the first payment being made on the 15th day of March. That is a difficulty that is not insurmountable. It merely requires some readjustment and would involve some inconvenience and all that sort of thing, but it is possible that that can be done. If that is done and if the bill should pass by the 1st of February—not later than the 15th at the outside—it would be possible to collect taxes under the law. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, however, stated that, to be on the safe side, he ought to be making preliminary arrangements and preparations with a view to collecting taxes under the present law, not spending more money than is absolutely necessary for him to have the work in proper condition in case we should not pass this bill by the 1st day of February.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then, if I understand the Senator, if the bill passes by the middle of January the Commissioner of Internal Revenue can get out his forms and prepare for the returns under the act?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think so.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But does the Senator from North Carolina consider it necessary that this bill shall have executive approval or be returned by the Executive without his approval? Will the absence of the President necessarily interfere with the bill becoming a law?

Mr. SIMMONS. I should say, generally speaking, the fact that the bill is passed by the 1st of February would be sufficient for the purpose, for it could be reasonably assumed under the general conditions that it would have within the legal time the approval of the President. The intervening time would be occupied only in preparing forms and getting ready for the returns.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What prompted me to ask the question of the Senator was a statement recently made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that he was preparing to send out the forms under the present law.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think that was probably a correct statement. He is preparing the forms under the present law.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That statement was attributed to him.

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, my understanding is that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is, in a limited way, getting ready, and that probably he will continue the work of the preparation of such forms. I do not mean that he has yet begun to any considerable extent, but his purpose, as I understand, is very shortly to begin to carry on the work of the preparation of the forms with a view to collecting the revenue under the present law, but not spending any more money than is absolutely necessary to be on the safe side, and not going any further with the work than is absolutely necessary for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I noticed a statement the other day—and I am simply asking the Senator in order to fortify that—to the effect that the semizone system has been fixed by the bill at 200 miles.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; the committee changed that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Or 150 miles?

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to say that at first we did agree upon the 200-mile zone, but it was found that that would involve complications. The country is now divided up into postal zones, and no postal zone would fit in with that arrangement; so we changed that, and we apply the exemption from the increased poundage tax only to the circulation outside of the first and second zones, the first zone being 50 miles and the second being 100 miles.

Mr. SMOOT. Or a total of 150 miles.

Mr. SIMMONS. A total of 150 miles.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. May I ask if the committee agreed on that part of the bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think so; I think they are unanimously agreed on that part of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I beg the Senator's pardon, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I am probably in error about that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The vote was not unanimous.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, I think, if we were to speak from the vote, that there were three votes cast against it, but I do not understand that any of the Senators casting those votes had any purpose to make any protest or to file any minority report as to that action of the committee. However, I do not know; I am not advised as to that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am not advised as to the purpose of other Senators as to that particular proposition.

But, Mr. President, I desire to say, if the Senator from North Carolina will permit me, that, while it is indicated by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] that a dissenting report will be filed by Republican Members as to certain provisions of the bill as reported, I desire to reserve the right to file a special dissenting report. I am not certain whether or not it will be ready when the minority report is presented. It will be very brief, and I think I can have it ready by that time.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was not advised, Mr. President, of the purpose of the Senator from Wisconsin to file a separate report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from North Carolina that I have also given notice that I desire to file a further report, expressing my own views and what provision I think ought to have been adopted in relation to the imposition of a war-profit tax instead of an excess and war-profit tax.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, Mr. President, the minority report will be in the nature of several different reports.

Mr. SMOOT. There will be a minority report; but I think that all of the minority members of the committee will sign and agree to it, and these are only supplemental reports to that minority report.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, as I understand, there is no disagreement amongst the minority. As the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has explained, the minority has under consideration the filing of a minority report, and, so far as I know, all the minority will sign it; and then individual Senators will have a perfect right to file additional views of their own.

Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the chairman of the committee to have the same number of additional copies of this bill printed, namely, 25,000, as were printed of the revenue bill last year.

Mr. SIMMONS. Before taking my seat I was going to make a motion to that effect.

Mr. PENROSE. There will be a great demand for the bill, and I think we ought to have that number to begin with.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the printing of 25,000 additional copies of the bill for the use of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT subsequently said: Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the fact that the unanimous-consent order for the printing of 25,000 additional copies of the revenue bill will cost more than the law allows the Government Printer to incur by direction of either House. The law provides that not more than $500 worth of printing can be done upon the request of either House of Congress. Therefore I am going to ask the Senator to modify his request so that the number to be printed will fall within the $500 limitation as provided by law.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask leave to modify the order made for the printing of additional copies of the revenue bill so as to provide for the printing of as many copies within the $500 limitation as is prescribed by law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

ADJOURNMENT TO TUESDAY.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, after a consultation with Senators on both sides of the Chamber and with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock noon on Tuesday next. I have been induced to make this motion by a wish expressed to me by a number of Senators that they might have more time in which to examine and consider the revenue bill before it is taken up on Tuesday for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. From the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the bill (S. 5038) extending the use of the special fund for vocational education provided by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act approved June 27, 1918, and authorizing the Federal Board for Vocational Education to accept gifts and donations for specific purposes, I report the bill favorably with an amendment and submit a report (No. 618) thereon.

Mr. President, the bill for vocational rehabilitation authorized the Federal Board for Vocational Education to accept gifts from private parties, to be used only as the fund appropriated by the Government could be used. The board have found that persons may desire to make gifts with a specific direction in the interest of the injured soldiers broader than the limited provision in the act of June 27, 1918, which required the national contribution to be applied toward their education. Let me illustrate: A fund may be tendered toward aiding injured soldiers who are mechanics to buy sets of tools and things of that kind. The board desire that authority to receive such gifts for the use of the soldiers be given to them.

That is the substance of what this bill provides. It is an amendment of the act of June 27, 1918, and is reported favorably from the Committee on Education and Labor, with a further provision that the board shall not only report any funds received but the names of the donors. As it is quite important that the bill should pass at once, I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with an amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if the act of which the bill reported by him is amendatory is the one which was under consideration some time during the past year and to which there was opposition?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all; the act of which the bill now reported is amendatory received the unanimous vote of the Senate. That act provided for rehabilitation work amongst injured soldiers. The Government made an appropriation, which was put in the hands of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, to aid in the rehabilitation of injured soldiers. That act carries a provision that the Federal board may receive donations from private sources to be used also toward the vocational rehabilitation of wounded soldiers, but it limits the outside donations to the uses designated in the act, which are entirely educational. The board find a desire in certain directions to make contributions to soldiers from private sources and to designate the purposes to which the contributions shall be devoted, as, for instance, a fund to those soldiers who are mechanics, to aid them in procuring the tools to enable them to set themselves up in work. The extent of the bill now reported is to permit donations from private sources, subject to the approval of the board, the money to be used in the interest of the soldiers in a somewhat broader way than is now authorized by the law. Nothing comes from the Treasury by this amendment.

Mr. KING. Then, as I understand the Senator, the pending bill does not increase the appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all.

Mr. KING. Or permit the use of the appropriation heretofore made for other purposes than have been designated?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all; but it will allow the board to accept donations from private citizens and act in a manner as trustee for injured soldiers for such funds where private citizens desire to designate some other use than that to which the appropriation is limited. For instance, a soldier may be in position to start in a small business if he has a little help. That is not a matter for national contribution, but private contribution is seeking to help him; and the Federal board asks the privilege of receiving such contributions in the interest of soldiers in a broad way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment reported by the committee.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 17, after the words "report of all gifts and donations offered and accepted" it is proposed to insert "the names of all persons making the same," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the special fund for vocational education, authorized by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act, approved June 27, 1918, is hereby made available, in addition to the purposes therein prescribed, for such other expenses as in the discretion of the board is deemed necessary and proper in the performance of the duties imposed upon it by said act, including payment of necessary travel, lodging, subsistence, and other expenses of disabled men while under investigation by the board to determine their eligibility for training under the act, and the purchase of supplies, equipment, and clothing for disabled men when ready to enter employment, and the traveling expenses of such men to place of employment.

The said board is also authorized and empowered to receive gifts or donations, from either public or private sources, offered conditionally, provided the same may be used for a purpose or purposes which the board deems necessary and proper in connection with the care, training, or placement of disabled soldiers and sailors, including donations given on the condition that the same shall be used for the purpose of making gifts and advancements of money in necessary cases to disabled soldiers and sailors. All moneys received as gifts or donations for specific purposes shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and shall constitute a fund to be used under the direction of the said board for the specific purpose for which made, and a full report of all gifts and donations offered and accepted, the names of all persons making the same, and all disbursements therefrom, shall be submitted annually to Congress by said board.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia whether the change in the law appears upon the face of the bill? Is it indicated in the bill itself?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. This is an amendment to the existing law, to the vocational education act.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I inquire whether a section of that act is reenacted or whether otherwise the change in existing law appears upon the face of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The amendment points out clearly the change.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Secretary to read the bill. We have not had it read in full as yet.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia to explain a litttle more fully what this special fund is. Most of us have forgotten.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The bill authorizes the Federal Board for Vocational Education to accept from private citizens donations, to be used, in addition to the appropriation made from the Treasury, in the interest of the vocational rehabilitation of injured soldiers. Under the bill as we originally passed it the fund must be placed in the Treasury and used solely for the purposes provided in the original bill, just as the $2,000,000 appropriated from the National Treasury may be used.

As I understand the request from the board, it is that they be permitted to receive funds for purposes other than simply the educational rehabilitation of the soldiers. I am advised that funds are probably within their reach to aid the soldier even after he finishes his rehabilitation training. The suggestion is made to me that there would be soldiers who would go into industrial lines who would need their own private sets of tools, their working apparatus, who would start a small business, who would need tools and perhaps a little funds to begin. The board is of the opinion that contributions may be made, to be handled through the board, in the interest of this still further contribution toward the active work of the soldiers after they have been rehabilitated, and their desire was that the limitation as to the use of the funds might be modified to the extent of permitting them to receive these contributions, to be used according to the wish of the giver, provided that wish receives the approval of the board.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I now have the bill before me, and I think it is very much broader in its scope than the Senator indicates. Under the language of the bill, as I read it, the board would have the authority to use all of its special fund for administrative purposes. In other words, Congress in the regular appropriation bill may appropriate for the administration of this board such an amount as Congress thinks is a sufficient amount for its administration; but under the language of the bill, in addition to that amount, the board is authorized to use the whole amount of any special fund for its administration. Does the Senator think that ought to be permitted?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think that is the case.

Mr. LENROOT. Let me read:

That the special fund for vocational education, authorized by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act, approved June 27, 1918, is hereby made available, in addition to the purposes therein prescribed, for such other expenses as in the discretion of the board is deemed necessary and proper in the performance of the duties imposed upon it by said act.

I should like to ask what limitation there is upon the board with reference to the expenditure of this special fund, with that language?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the fact that section 7 of the original bill is limited to gifts. It does not apply to the appropriations made out of the Treasury. It applies to the gifts; and the object of that first provision was to permit these general gifts, where no purpose was specified, to be used to aid the soldiers as to their travel, lodging, subsistence, and expenses of that character not provided for by our national appropriations. It was to broaden the use of the gifts already made; and the balance of the act is to authorize broader gifts for specific purposes from citizens who desire to contribute toward the soldiers.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but the Senator does not get my point. While they are gifts, under the law as it now stands those gifts, I take it, can not be used for the general expenses of this board. One of the purposes of this amendment is to permit those gifts to be used for such expenses. In fact, there is no limitation upon the board, if the amendment is adopted, as to the purpose for which it may use these special gifts. Congress itself loses all control over the administration of the board and the amount that it may expend, if the gifts are large enough so that the board may use these special gifts to make up in administration that for which it feels Congress has not given it a sufficient amount.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator desire to limit the provisions of this bill?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I shall be glad to hear what amendment or restriction the Senator would put on it.

Mr. LENROOT. The one that occurs to me now is that the words "such other expenses as in the discretion of the board is deemed necessary and proper in the performance of the duties upon it by said act, including" should be stricken out, leaving it:

In addition to the purposes therein prescribed, for payment of necessary travel, lodging, subsistence, and other expenses of disabled men.

That would permit the use of this special fund for the specific purpose named in the bill; but the board ought not to have the power to use these funds for purposes for which Congress ought to appropriate, and if Congress does not appropriate for it they ought not to use special funds for this purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They can use the funds now for anything that Congress has provided. The present bill permits all of these donations to be used broadly for the purposes for which Congress appropriated the $2,000,000. The object is to give them a wider discretion and to permit private donations to be used for the benefit of the soldiers along lines for which Congress does not think the public money can with propriety be used.

Mr. LENROOT. Let me put a case to the Senator: Suppose an estimate comes in of $100,000 or $500,000 for the administrative expenses of this vocational board. Congress in its wisdom, and the Committees on Appropriations after investigation, conclude that $250,000 is sufficient for that purpose, and Congress makes the appropriation for that purpose and limits it to that purpose. Under this amendment, if it is enacted, if there is a special fund here of $250,000, they may expend $500,000 for administration, using the $250,000 of this special fund which Congress refused to give them. That is my objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But suppose it is given by private citizens to be used in that way. Is there any objection to it?

Mr. LENROOT. But it is not so limited. Here is a special fund that may be given unconditionally. This or any other board—and that has been the practice of Congress—ought not to receive special funds to be used for their own administration.

Congress itself ought to appropriate, and ought to direct by appropriation, the amount that these boards should expend for administrative purposes.

Why, if the Senator will recollect, only a few years ago we had revolving funds for our national parks. Congress itself changed that, and in most cases required the funds to go into the Treasury and to be reappropriated. That was so that Congress might have some control over the expenditures of these departments. If this amendment should be adopted, Congress will have no control over the expenditures of the board. Every dollar of these special funds might be used, not for the benefit of a soldier, but for traveling expenses and for expenses of this board. Surely, the Senator can not intend that that shall be possible.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think it includes any traveling expenses of the board.

Mr. LENROOT. It includes any expenses that the board deem necessary. It could not possibly be wider in its scope.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not agree with the Senator as to the meaning of the language; but if he desires additional language used to restrict the possible meaning that he thinks might be applied to it, and will offer an amendment carrying out his idea, I shall be very glad to consider it. It is quite important, if the effectiveness of this work is to go on, that a broader discretion shall be given as speedily as possible to the Federal board; and unless we can get this measure out of the Senate before the revenue bill comes up we will find difficulty in getting its consideration.

Mr. LENROOT. I certainly would have no objection to this special fund being used for the particular purpose that is named in the bill; but certainly this board ought not to have the authority, without any limitation, to use this special fund for any purpose that it may see fit. I have already suggested an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is it offered?

Mr. LENROOT. I will offer it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin will state the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, as the bill seems to be about to take up considerable time, I think I ought to ask, in the interest of morning business generally, that we suspend its consideration until Senators have a chance to dispose of such morning business as they wish. I do not desire to obstruct the morning business.

Mr. LENROOT. I think we may be able to agree upon an amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Of course, I have unanimous consent for its consideration now, and I dislike to lose this advantage; but I also dislike to obstruct Senators who have morning business they wish to present. I had not anticipated any objection to the measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What does the Senator desire to do?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to obtain action on the bill this morning, but I do not wish to obstruct morning business. I should like to yield temporarily to Senators who have anything they desire to present in the morning business and then come back to this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to that method of procedure? The Chair hears none, and the bill is temporarily laid aside.

PAYMENT TO HON. CHRISTIE BENET.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to enter a motion to recommit Senate resolution 363, calendar No. 561, relative to the payment to Hon. Christie Benet. I call the attention of the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON], who is the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. THOMPSON. As chairman of the committee I will state that it is perfectly agreeable to me to have the resolution recommitted. Several members of the committee desire to have an opportunity to consider further certain features of the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be recommitted.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If there is no other morning business, I ask the Senate to return to the bill S. 5038, that we considered by unanimous consent. I think we can dispose of it in a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection now to return to the consideration of Senate bill 5038?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5038) extending the use of the special fund for vocational education provided by section 7 of the vocation rehabilitation act, approved June 27, 1918, and authorizing the Federal Board for Vocational Education to accept gifts and donations for specific purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move to amend the bill by striking out, in lines 8 and 9, on page 1, the words "performance of the duties imposed upon it by said act," so that it will read:

For such other expenses as in the discretion of the board is deemed necessary and proper, including payment of necessary travel, lodging, subsistence, and other expenses of disabled men while under investigation, etc.

Mr. LENROOT. This amendment removes all the objection I made to the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Pending the passage of the bill, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia whether the board has filed with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate, as required, the itemized account of expenditures, salaries, and so forth, as provided by section 9 of the act.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know. I have not looked into that, but from my knowledge of the board if the time has come to make the report I feel sure they have made it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING OF REVENUE BILL (S. DOC. NO. 310).

Mr. JONES of New Mexico submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 375), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, as reported to the Senate on December 6, 1918, be printed as a Senate document in 10-point type, and that 6,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS FOR PEACE.

Mr. LEWIS. I gave notice a few days past, Mr. President, that I would on this morning address to the Senate some views touching the proposed league of nations for peace. A discussion of this kind necessarily is prosy. It will not justify my eminent colleagues remaining from their lunch or their several committee meetings to hear it so far as entertainment is concerned. Having to deal as it must with many features of history it must be more or less dreary in its recital, but, Mr. President, I have felt that it is very important that Senators early express whatever view they may have upon this very impending and serious problem.

To the mind of the ordinary American it may appear that it is rather a distant thing so far as the present Senate is likely to be called upon to act. Mr. President, it is here I greatly differ from all those whom I have heard express themselves as to this view. It is my judgment, Mr. President, that the very first move on the part of those who are called the peace commission will be to ascertain if there is a foundation sufficient upon which to build this construction of some league of peace. This will be entered upon with a view of ascertaining what nations are going to consent and what particular provisions they will urge as a condition precedent to their entering upon it. When that has been determined they will then take up such other questions as they deem ought to be determined between them, but they will first, in my opinion, sir, reach a decision as to whether there is a spirit on the part of these nations participating to establish the foundaton of an international peace. If there be no such disposition, contentions and demands at the peace table will take a different form and take on a spirit of more national self-service than if there should be disclosed both the capacity as well as the willingness to come to some understanding upon a general basis of amity and unity for all future relations. Should such be disclosed by established results, then there will be the spirit of a liberal form of contention and a more generous decision.

That brings me, sir, to address to you the thought that I expect to see this tribunal meet this question first, and when it is met to promptly send it to the different Governments interested to be either ratified or rejected by those Governments through such machinery or agency as is existing in those Governments for such purpose.

Mr. President, I expect to see this particular undertaking not only entered upon as the first undertaking but decision speedily arrived at in its negative or its affirmative. And, Mr. President, be not surprised if we shall find that by the 15th day of January there shall be presented to this body upon the return of the President of the United States some form of understanding upon this particular contention as one of the basic preliminaries essential to all other proceedings.

Mr. President, when the congress of Vienna assembled to settle the fate of the world in 1814 there were less nations by one-third than there are now engaged and whose fate hangs in the determination of this particular assemblage at Versailles. Mr. President, notwithstanding the fact that in those days there were no cables; there was no rapidity of mails such as we now have; there were no rapid steamships; these nations nevertheless began their discussion on the 9th of November and concluded their proceedings in the following June. If, sir, at that time, with the impending and important questions those nations had, they could conclude their proceedings within that limit, let it be reflected upon for a moment that with the flash of cable, with the haste of mails, and with the present wireless—as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] kindly suggests to me—and with the other methods of communication this particular conclusion will not only be speeded because of these accommodations but hastened because of the world necessity. Therefore, Mr. President, I may be called upon to cast my vote yea or nay in the matter of the ratification of this particular and important document as to this particular and essential branch at an early date. For this reason, among others, Mr. President, I have found it agreeable to tender my views this morning that they may at least be promptly known to those of my constituency, as well as my country, for whom I may be called upon to speak in a more binding manner.

What is this thing that is suggested? It is some proposal by which the modern thought of the world may reach a conclusion as to the future peace of mankind. Things are not to-day, sir, as they were on yesterdays. It may interest us to recall that romantic episode—reported as having transpired when there was a peace concluded in the conflict between France and Austria. Napoleon and his aids had assembled in a city in the Austrian dominions, together with the grand dukes of that land, to celebrate this peace. The soldiers of France and the soldiers of Austria commingled in one fête and one great display of triumph. The soldiers were marching by the reviewing stand, when, sir, Napoleon beheld his own soldiers rived in face with saber stroke, delimbed of arms, crippled and hobbled—their bodies deformed—and with a degree of pride turned to the grand dukes, saying, "What do you think, sires, of men who could bear scars such as these?" When one of the grand dukes who had commanded in the battles opposing these French said to the surprise of Napoleon, "And you, sire, what will you say of soldiers that could give scars like those?" For a moment Napoleon was benumbed for reply, when a little French sergeant, passing and overhearing the remark, cried out, "Tell him they are all dead, sire; that they are all dead."

Mr. President, we may well paraphrase that reply and when asked as to the kings who had gashed our Nation with their strokes of insolence and Emperors who struck our children to death with their slashes of murder, we answer—

"They are all fallen, sire—and, sire, all fleeing."

Mr. President, for more than a thousand years the striving of mankind has been for peace among all people. From Christ came the appeal to God for peace on earth—good will to men. It was the counsel of Paul to the Romans, "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men."

Yet, it has been seen that it is only possible for men to have peace with all men when all men are moved to peace by the profit that it is to all men that they shall live in peace one with another. When nations are left alone—to pursue the objects of desire or of the profit of pride such nations fall to dispute, then to conflict. Then the land is darkened by swarms of soldiers, the fields are trampled down; mothers wail for the loss of the first-born, and strong men cry in their hearts for the sons who are fallen. The sky is clouded, the sun is hidden, blackness sets on the earth, and life bleeds out, while God's land perishes before the eyes of angels. Shall man know no end of this returning and ever-returning destruction?

Is there no covenant of men, or league of people, but that of a covenant with death, and league with hell? To-day the record of time—in the most perfect era of Christ and church, in the most advanced age of wisdom and civilization—is 20,000,000 of earth's mankind slain, dead or dying, hungering and perishing, their lands seared and bleeding, their homes crushed and fallen, their cities sacked and wasted, their possessions all ashes, and their days of happiness for their children gone forever—nothing but misery remains. In their prayers to God in Heaven for a future deliverance is their only hope. Is there no promise in men on earth? Is there no method of government that can promise peace and secure the future to preserve life, save governments, and perpetuate a Christian civilization? One device, one system of all others has had the thought of patriots, and the service of Christians. It is to band together the peoples of the nations into some common cause of mutual interest to preserve peace and by this reciprocal advantage, to those who engage with each other, create a bond that pledges for all.

As the peoples can not speak in their individual or collective voices, it is only through their organizations of society and government, called nation, that the authoritative counsels can be had and the binding decisions come forth. So it is that the thought of a council of peoples through their nations—termed a league for peace—has sprung forth. This consummation has been the expression of the statesman's wish, the patriot's dream, and the Christian's prayer for all the generations in which God has been accepted as Ruler of peoples and Christ as Savior of men. It is to this hope revived that the President of the United States has so imploringly confided. It is this as a solution of the problem of war that he brings to us as a solemn wish that we give it our earnest consideration and profound study. He asks for our cooperation in the construction of the enterprise and our indorsement of his efforts in this behalf.

Though promising fame and honor in the execution, the project is not presented by our President as new. The knowledge on his part that such design has been accepted and presented in seasons past from sincere sources of profoundest human wisdom strengthens his purpose with an approval of the world's mature reflection.

In De Monarchia the Ghibelline poet seeks to solve the riddle in saying, "In quietness the individual grows perfect in knowledge and in wisdom." Clearly, then, it is in the quiet or tranquillity of peace that security as a whole is best fitted for its proper work, which may be called "divine."

The first requisite for the attainment of the goal of human civilization is peace. How to evolve order out of chaos, how to make impossible for the future recurrence of the catastrophe, how to rebuild upon the ruins of a shattered civilization a more stately and more stable edifice—this is the problem upon which for many years to come the best thought of the best minds must now be concentrated. Ever since the break from isolated nationalism to fraternal internationalism, this question with its myriad replies has with obstinate recurrence presented itself.

I offer instances of individual effort as gathered from history. (I acknowledge debt to Mr. J. A. Marriott, of the English Parliament, and Mr. Thomas, of the French, for sources of information imparted to me when I was lately a guest of the cabinet of the countries of these statesmen.)

After the war periods of the sixteenth century, when the contest for supremacy lay between unified French and the Austro-Spanish empire of the Hapsburgs, Henry IV of France, under the guidance of his great war minister, Sully, drafted the famous "Design," which was not given to the world for a century later. This was presented by the Abbé of St. Pierre. Henry IV in this design advanced the thought of a western Europe as a peaceful confederacy of free states. There was provided a council to arbitrate in international disputes. It was to be composed of Catholic, Calvinist, and Lutheran. The supreme council or senate was to consist of 64 plenipotentiaries representing 15 confederate states of Europe and empowered to decide all disputes arising between the component states. These were to determine all matters of common import. It will be noted that before this project was published, Hugo Grotius, the Dutch lawgiver, in 1625, had issued his De jure pacis et belli. He was impressed by the havoc wrought by the wars of Spain in Holland. Sir James Mackintosh of Britain characterized this work as the most complete on the subject in his time. However, the weakness of the plan of Grotius was, as is pointed out by Mackintosh, the lack of any method for enforcement of the decree of those tribunals.

Therefore, we find that in the latter half of the seventeenth century, while Louis XIV—the arch disturber then of the world's peace—was ravaging people and despoiling lands, the Abbe St. Pierre and the Abbe de Polignac, at the conclusion of the treaty of Utrecht, published the famous Projet de traité pour rendre la paix perpétuelle. The details are not dissimilar to the great design of Henry IV. The one noteworthy exception is that the abbe proposed that the congress was to act as the organ of European confederacy and that the powers should enter into a mutual compact to define the cases which would involve offending States. That these offending States should be put under a ban, and the States so banned to be punished by common action until the offender should have submitted to the common will. Kant, in his famous essay on perpetual peace—which was in 1795—laid down two definite articles of civil constitution for each State and the law of nations to be applied to the federation of free states, Kant asserting that nature brings about union not by awakening competitive forces, but through the equilibrium of these forces in active rivalry. This was but the acknowledgment of the theory of Aristotle saying: "Intimate union is achieved by common work for a beautiful cause."

When Kant published his perpetual peace, Europe was in the third year of the Napoleonic wars. Nine years later, in 1804, the Czar Alexander first dispatched his representative Nikolai Navosiltsar on special mission to England to lay before Pitt the Czar's scheme on the lines of a Christian republic for universal world's peace. This was afterwards perverted into the doctrines of the Holy Alliance. The object of the league was the maintenance of peace in Europe. This project failed, first in Italy (notwithstanding the approval of the King of Naples), because England, through her foreign minister, asserted her purpose to execute the principles of the Congress of Vienna.

Then followed the protocol of Troppan (1820). This was for a league of kings sent out to combat the proposed league of small nations for the support of republican form of government. Here our reflection brings us to note the advance of the idea of league government. We now recall the league of control of Egypt by France and England from 1876 to 1882—and that of the control of the Persian Provinces by England and Russia in 1907—and the Macedonian commission of 1908. These and each of them were governed by a joint court, whose members were named by the league—a joint military force under joint command and a joint board of administration in all civil affairs. Yet these leagues of peace for an oriental people who had become inane in the sloth of personal neglect of their human rights only followed doctrines of the sentimental statesmen philosophizing on this basis. A half century past Victor Hugo, writing beautifully, said:

Dès à présent, dans nos misères
Germe l'hymen des peuples frères.
Volant sur nos sombres rameux.
Comme un frelon que l'aube éveille
Le progrès, ténébreuse abeille,
Fait du bonheur avec nos maux.

Or, if I may be permitted to translate—

Even now, in our desolation, the union of the brother nations is germinating, flying over our darksome state, like an insect awakened by the dawn. Progress, an obscure honeybee, transforms our misfortunes into good fortune.

The Roman Empire preserved peace under the Cæsars by a league of provinces, so long as it served the people of these provinces. When the peoples were absorbed by an Emperor and became subject to his imperial edict, the provinces were brought to wars for the aggrandizement of conquest—just as was the history of the German federation when absorbed and disposed of by a Prussian Cæsar, the Kaiser. Interesting it must be for you to know that the German custom zollverein and the British and English postal union were patterned after the form of these Roman provincial leagues—modernized by English and German Christian civilization. In England since 1841 to 1918 there have been 200 intergovernmental conferences, involving all nationalites and all questions for regulation and adjudication. It was after the order of these that the English representative at The Hague presented in 1897 and 1909 the project for a league of peace, the latter ratified by 35 votes and only 5 opposing—Germany, Austria-Hungary, Greece, Roumania, and Turkey; sad has been the lot of each as a consequence of their views and principles opposing this policy of communal peace—yet this opposition in face of the enjoyed results of a league of peace by the States of Austria and of the small kingdoms of Germany before confederation under military government dictated by the Kaiser.

We can now recur, Mr. President, to the support of the proposition of President Wilson carried in the indorsement and cooperating approval of Lord Grey for the lords of England, Lord Curzon seconding.

Mr. President, when the eminent Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] gave us, on a day past, a contribution on this subject worthy indeed of him, as it was worthy of the place; while the eminent Senator from Minnesota was presenting his views so attractively and insisting, as I understood him, that these eminent lords of England did not at that time see their way clear to suggest a final method, and did not give to the scheme their whole approval, but showed a spirit toward it, if it were impracticable, I asked the eminent Senator if it were not true that Lord Curzon, in that debate, did not specifically call attention to the fact that the success of the scheme would revolve around the mere fact of having the consent of all nations. The eminent Senator may recall such as being the basis of his theme, or, rather, what might be said to be the foundation of his view of what might or might not make success.

Seeing the eminent Senator in the Chamber, I call his attention to but an episode of that debate. Said Lord Curzon in his speech in the House of Lords, after other things which the eminent Senator has correctly quoted:

However, it is essential that there shall be a general agreement among the nations. All the nations on earth must become parties to it to obtain the useful result.

I think the eminent Senator will agree with me, therefore, that, of course, such would be essential. Otherwise we would have some nations staying out, and they would be charged with an inimical motive of remaining out—that is, of opposing the design.

Mr. KELLOGG rose.

Mr. LEWIS. Does the Senator wish to interrupt me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; if such is the desire of the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. I did not understand, however, that Lord Curzon placed his objection to a supergovernment whose decrees should be enforced by a military international force simply upon the position that all nations must agree to it. I understood him to state that it was his belief that such a scheme was not practicable.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, upon that matter of enforcement, I will reach it shortly, but I was at this time particularly interested in calling attention to a verification of the view I expressed to the Senator when he allowed me to interrupt him during the debate. I was then reciting my memory of those debates of Parliament, having previously studied them, and since then having refreshed my mind to be sure that I was accurate. It is only to one point that I wish now to address myself in that connection, and that is the necessity of a concurrence of all nations with an object which will be seen in a moment very necessary to consider. I will reach later the point the eminent Senator has referred to and will, of course, reply to his suggestion, as it deserves notice.

Interesting to recall that after Lloyd George had given his approbation to the position of Wilson, Chancellor von Hertling, now deposed, broke from his Kaiser to proclaim his indorsement and his adoption of the policy as the most promising for any hope of future cessation of world wars. Sir Frederick Pollock and Lord Bryce followed with their affirmance. Then Mr. Asquith, for Britain, and Baron Sonino, for Italy, on February 23, 1918, each in their nation's parliament, gave their adherence to the policy and their encouragement to the undertaking of this commendable design. Now, for America we recall that President Roosevelt in 1907 called The Hague conference to adopt a league of peace. In this he was just ahead of the newly regenerated Czar of Russia, Nicholas II. It was attended by representatives of 44 of the world's then 57 States, double that of the first representation of the 1897 meeting, and for America the then Secretary of State, Mr. Root, said the work of the conference of 1897 made that of 1907 possible. Said he:

The achievements of the two conferences justify the belief that the world has entered upon an orderly process through which, step by step, there may be continual progress toward making the practice of civilized nations conform to their peaceful professions.

We now have the example of success of a league such as is sought in the leagues of arrangement of the British Empire, based on mutual reciprocity and contributing profit to each. Likewise in the Pan American Union of Southern and Central Americas. Formerly, as must be recalled, it was a monthly eruption for the Central American States or an annual event for the South American countries to war among themselves or against each other. Boundary questions or conflict of commercial interests had brought the peoples in strife with one another, to the event where the older nations solemnly charged these romantic sovereignties with inability for self-government. Now the interdependent relation balances all differences, and stimulating this disposition is pride in maintaining the high esteem of their central council, while the compensations from mutual concessions of advantages reward these lands for yielding up the privilege of personal insistence on claims and contentions heretofore the incentive to conflict.

Mr. H. G. Wells, the eminent sociologist of Britain, as was pointed out by the analytical résumé of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], has lately drawn attention to the compact between our States as an illustration of a successful league which he tenders as a parallel and precedent for a league of nations for the establishment of peace. The weakness in this illustration, so far as serving as complete parallel to the tasks and responsibilities involved in the creation of a world league of peace, is in the fact that as to the States we have a homogeneous people, the exceptions being only the foreign nationalities which have not yet absorbed our American customs or adopted wholly the use of the American language. There are no conflicts for territory or boundaries as between the States. These have yielded to the Supreme Court of the United States as a tribunal of settlement for such, this being the method provided by our Constitution and laws. Nevertheless, when one reflects upon the discordance of views when the federation of States was first established and revives to mind the bitterness to which this distraction reached, leading at length to the blood atonement between the States in the tragic Civil War, one is brought to note that it was only through the spirit of resignation to the concessions necessary for complete union that these States yielded their hostilities to harmonize in common object with a central authority and united general government. In all general respects the States of the American Union of the United States of America can be presented as a controlling parallel, inspiring to emulation those who would seek a basis for a league of nations to preserve peace and comity.

Now, Mr. President, we are met with an inner interrogation on the part of all hearers as to the method on which this league may be formed and through what measures it may execute its object. Without assuming to speak the method which the convocation of world delegates may present, I offer that which to my mind is feasible and adaptable. I tender to the American thought the figure of a national convention of our great political parties assembled to name a President and Vice President. I summon to their mind the platform which is ever adopted. Also I recall to their consideration the ever-present contest for seats, presented to the committee termed "committee on credentials." By these illustrations I invite them to reflect upon the similar branches of the convention to indicate the many methods adopted for any uses of such national gathering.

We will assume that the invited States banded themselves into a league, had done nothing further than to agree to the league, and proceeded no further in execution than to become a party to the purpose. Each of these nations will send their delegates to the central point. When assembled they organize. This organization, by the method it may choose, selects first a certain number of delegates who would be the court having to do with the disputes between nations and between countries. These especial representatives will naturally present in themselves forms of qualifications, particularly addressed to ability and experience needful to this particular branch of dispute. Then, next, these delegates to form a body constituted from the convention for the hearing and settlement of disputes between citizens of different countries as to claims involving commercial rights and shipping. This body would be made up of men of attainments fitted to this line of duty. A third constituted for the purpose of hearing and disposing of contentions within each State where the parties choose to submit the personal conflict, where they may agree to do so in view of the fact that the conflict may be one growing out of race or religious disputations, which have long been the subject of honorable and conscientious dispute among many of our peoples of the earth.

We now have drawn in the three features that have heretofore disturbed nations and produced conflicts. The next step is that the whole body name the court of appeal in matters that shall be designated to a final tribunal made up from the convention. This shall sit for the purpose of appeal upon all the questions upon which appeal is allowed.

I propose that it is ever to be provided that in purely internal disputes in any country involving the mere form of government or matters of the claimed rights of citizens yielding allegiance to the constituted authorities within their government should never be the privilege of the tribunal nor ever be placed within the jurisdiction of this tribunal to enter upon or to have any supervision over in any wise whatever. This latter guaranty makes impossible that such matters as internal uprisings for the remedy of local hardships or change of form of governments from kingdoms to revolutions or similar aspects could ever be within the jurisdiction of this court unless, as is herein provided, those who are parties to the conflict internally shall elect among themselves to submit the question to the tribunal and choose to accept the arbitration as the disposition. In no other instance is the tribunal to assume any jurisdiction of any nature whatsoever of the internal or the purely personal matters of any state or its people. One of the fundamental provisions of the constitution of this assemblage must give this guaranty.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the Senator yield for a suggestion?

Mr. LEWIS. Surely; I am glad to yield.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask the Senator what becomes of our territorial controversies. Take a State like the one in which I live, bordering upon Canada. Are we to pass over controversies arising between Canada and the State of Michigan to foreigners, for instance? Are we to be deprived of our voice in the Senate in protecting our State from incursions of that character? If so, we are deprived of a very great privilege and one that may become highly important to the States.

Since I have been here we have had many controversies over territory with Canada and rights in our abutting waterways. We can not afford to pass such matters over to strangers. They are local and yet they are international under the classification described by the Senator from Illinois, and the power to deal with them here is important to the State and must be protected.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, there is great pertinency in the observation of the Senator from Michigan. He is merely putting his finger on some of the difficulties, without which it would never have been necessary to discuss this proposal, so universally would it have been accepted. Of course, there are many opposing suggestions to be made, one of which, for example, is the one the Senator has made. It is one that shows a difficulty. I reply to him that if Michigan shall have a dispute with Canada concerning her boundary, Michigan's dispute is only that of a part of the United States, Canada as only a part of the British Empire. Such from both has been met before. When one of our Territories called Alaska contributed serious dispute to us in its dispute as to boundaries with Canada, it was then submitted to a tribunal made up of officials of the Governments of Britain and of the United States, and was disposed of in a finding and in a manner just as I have assumed to describe to the Senate—one that avoided conflict and cemented the bonds of peace. So it would apply in similar matters throughout all the affairs that might arise from any other country represented by the league.

Mr. POINDEXTER rose.

Mr. LEWIS. There is this to be said, that in any matter such as the Senator from Michigan alluded to I can not conceive our country not having a representative from Michigan when such dispute should arise from the State of Michigan. Nor could I conceive how Britain would fail to choose in that case some one in that league who knew all the conditions and, to use the Senator's very appropriate words, the locus quo. Therefore I think that would solve the difficulty he has in mind.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let me suggest to the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I suggest that under the rule of the Senate a representative of my State could insist to the very point of defeating any proposition that his State regarded as unfortunate or unfair in a controversy with our friends on the north. The Senator will recall that this Chamber rejected the general arbitration treaty with Great Britain sent here by President Taft providing that all justiciable questions should be solved by an international tribunal. I think that treaty was signed by Lord Bryce in behalf of Great Britain, and Lord Bryce himself had said that the American Senate was absolutely unnecessary in the consideration of international problems and ought not to have any power to effect treaties. That is a doctrine so wide of the plan of the fathers of the Republic and so unwise in its effect upon our domestic independence, peace, and order that it seems to me anything calculated to delegate this controversy to a special select tribunal, losing touch with the local communities affected, would be very serious and would incur, as it ought to incur, great opposition.

Mr. LEWIS. Before I reply to the Senator from Michigan I will yield to the Senator from Washington, who desires to interrogate me.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I rose to interrupt the Senator at a point where he spoke of the settlement of the Alaskan boundary dispute, a very appropriate instance of international dispute, which was settled without war between Great Britain and the United States, with satisfaction to both parties to the controversy. The Senator cited that in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan as to a possible boundary dispute between Canada and the United States as matters in which Michigan was peculiarly interested. Since we were so successful in adjusting the Alaskan boundary dispute without war and have had actual experience as to the feasibility and success of the adjustment of a dispute in that way without a league of nations and the surrender of all the privileges and powers that would be necessary for the United States to surrender if it entered into a league of nations, what is the object and what the necessity of such a league in view of the ease with which these disputes can be settled without it?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, first replying to the Senator from Michigan, there is a great deal to be said in favor of the preservation of the right of the Senate and the representatives of the different States in this body to preserve their States according to the early theory upon which the Senate was constructed; and it may be, as Lord Bryce said, and to which the Senator made an allusion, I think, that the Senate would have to give up some of its prerogatives if this plan should be carried out. I am compelled to answer the Senator from Michigan first by saying that to every measure of advantage there is a measure of disadvantage. In other words, to each governmental policy of profit in one direction mankind must suffer some policy of loss in another. Here and there some individual will have to give up personal gain for the general good of any undertaking we devise for government. But this much I further reply to the Senator now—that his State, under the example he gave me, could lose nothing. The Senator here would still have a voice. Why? Because the person representing Michigan, whether it be a delegate appointed specifically or a member of the tribunal, would submit back again, of course, to this country his findings.

Mr. President, the appeal from that is provided for in my system. It is an appeal to the final tribunal. If the eminent Senator feels that in the construction of any tribunal there would come no justice, then we must pause and refrain from the construction of any kind of a human tribunal. But I have provided an appeal by a tribunal of revisory power to the trial branch of the league. Let us believe that in that plan that the Senate would have had in the exercise of the right of a Senator to object to a treaty it would still retain to express its views as to the conclusions of the league.

Mr. President, I have never insisted, and can not of course now insist, that any proposed new plans for a future will not disclose somewhere some opposition to some system, if one is going to insist at the same time on all the systems of yesterday being preserved in all the inventions and reformations of the to-morrow.

Now, the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] propounds this question, which I would later reach, anyhow: It is that if the settlement between this country and Britain over the Alaska boundary could have been so effected without a league of nations, why have one? I answer: In that instance it was successful because of the neighborly relation between Canada and our country, and thus there was every incentive to peace, every stimulus to tranquillity and none whatever to conflict; also because of a common tongue, common relationship, and like institutions. But I would also answer my friend, How about when we went to war with Spain? Had we then had a tribunal which other nationalities could have assembled to which we could have submitted disputes such as we are now alluding to, will it be conceived that we might not have avoided that war?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. I take the liberty of reminding the Senator from Washington also that the result of the system to which he alludes has not always been as happy as in the case of the settlement of the Alaskan boundary dispute. It will be recalled that the results of the Webster-Asburton treaty have never been accepted with any particular degree of satisfaction by a vast number of the people of this country, and that the controversy over the Nicaraguan Canal, to which the Clayton-Bulwer treaty related, was not settled in a way that was at all satisfactory to the people of this country, if one is to judge from the repeated denunciations of it on this floor and the subsequent action of our Government. So we have not always been uniformly successful in getting what we wanted under the existing system, and we might, as a matter of course, not get all we wanted in case of the submission to some other plan that might be devised in place of it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Montana for his pertinent contribution, particularly to the Nicaraguan matter, to which I was about to allude. He has rendered that unnecessary by the suggestion that has comprehended it entirely.

Mr. President, I now come to the final feature that interests us all alike, the manner of the enforcement of the decree and judgment of this tribunal, assuming the tribunal to have been constituted after the manner to which I have alluded, and shall have been organized and performing the functions which I have described.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Before the Senator takes up the important question of the manner of enforcing the decree of the international tribunal, whatever it is, let me ask the Senator does his scheme contemplate any encroachment upon what is known as the Monroe doctrine?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I will advise my friend that in a few moments I had expected to discuss that.

Mr. BORAH. I am sorry I interrupted the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. No; I welcome the interruption.

Mr. BORAH. I shall be very glad to wait until the Senator reaches it.

Mr. LEWIS. I had expected to make allusion to it later, unless the Senator prefers that I speak of it now.

We now approach what method can be suggested as to the enforcement of the decrees of the assemblage.

Each proceeding must be left to itself. The provision for enforcing the decree must leave to the particular tribunal's discretion and judgment steps most appropriate, under the particular circumstances, to be adopted as the method of enforcement or penalty for disobedience. This is what is done in every equity proceeding in any courts of English and American jurisprudence. It is the principle prevailing as to the French courts, even as to criminal law. This is the doctrine as to jurisprudence prevailing in Holland and in Italy in all matters of civil nature, with the exception of suits for specific money damages under specific terms of declared contract. One may see, therefore, that this is the best of all methods and most suitable to those countries enforcing our form of common law or the doctrines of the Napoleonic code or still clinging to the ancient doctrine of the civil law as propounded by Justinian and transmitted in the corpus juris civilius.

Let it be recalled that in many instances a provision prohibiting for a certain length of time commercial intercourse with a foreign people, qualified or unlimited, or an appropriation of the customs to be applied to the damages suffered by the injured, or any form of money judgment to be paid, to be collected by the usual methods by which a money judgment is collected from one nation due to another, could be appropriate as judgment.

As to the question of enforcing these judgments by army and navy, let it now be asserted by me that no judgment that is to be enforced by army or navy will ever be enforced. Wherever armies are to be called in and war is to follow, this is an announcement that the tribunal has failed and the purpose of it has fallen. The moment that any army is called in to execute a judgment of the league, the armies of the country or the people who are being assailed must resent it, and their friends sympathizing with their cause or having similar contentions or similar claims which they may present against other nations will surely come to the rescue for their own preservation in the future, and we will be confronted with another hemispherical or semihemispherical warfare. If this court in its method is not sustained in its procedure by public opinion because of the rightfulness of the decrees, they can never be enforced.

Mr. President, if a decree should be rendered which is so apparently unjust that it ought not to be enforced, no country would permit its armies or navies to attempt to enforce it; public opinion would not tolerate such. If it is a judgment that ought to be enforced, it is the public opinion of the day, enlightened by experiences from late events, which gives to it its force and enforcement. This disposition makes unnecessary the consideration by this league of nations of the question of the disarmament of armies and the dismantling of navies. That question of the limitation of navies and of armies is a matter to be left wholly to those nations which wish to league with each other as to that separate question, and these limitations should be based altogether upon the corresponding relations that the Governments of the large navies bear to each other and to the world, as well as being guided by consideration of how far navies are essential auxiliaries and aids to commerce and how far the navies are aided by commercial auxiliaries. It must be seen that the question of limitations of navies turns rather upon the commercial relationships of countries to each other and to themselves than to the matter of the military relation or the relation of conflicts over peoples or boundaries.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LEWIS. Of course, I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON. If the Senator believes in a scheme of international scope, without any international force to enforce its decrees, and with the privilege of each nation maintaining as large an army as it shall see fit or as its legislative body may deem necessary under the conditions of that nation, then how is peace to be kept?

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Indiana has just anticipated me in a matter on which I am about to enter.

I have therefore felt, sir, that instead of there being any provision as to the general armies to be controlled by the league I would adopt the following scheme and would propose it, and I now answer the Senator from Indiana: That if armies of any kind shall ever be found necessary and accepted by us as necessary, I would propose that when this tribunal has been created and any judgment reached on any controversy, I would leave it to that tribunal to decide in each case what kind of process or verdict would be fitting to the peculiar grievance before it which was then remedied. In each instance where it was necessary to pass a judgment, whether it should be the ostracism from commercial privileges of one, the levying of a penalty of money upon another, a judgment as to boundary lines or the taking of property as to a third, or the enforcement of peace against one who threatens to assail another by a force necessary to do so, I would in each instance leave it to the tribunal to be the judge. Then, sir, when it was adjudged, the popular opinion of those nations, with their representatives being a part of the tribunal, would maintain it. I would not lay down, if Senators may understand me, a general doctrine applicable to all circumstances. I would permit, sir, in each case the privilege of such a judgment as fitted the case that would call for it, and the amount of force then and there that would be essential.

Mr. WATSON rose.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON. Enforce it how? The Senator said that there should be no international army, no international navy. It is proposed to have a court without the power to enforce its decrees. How is a decree to be enforced?

Mr. LEWIS. No. The Senator must not assume that I said "without power to enforce its decrees." What I said was that I would make no provision granting such a league the power to maintain an international army for the purpose of enforcing its decrees.

Mr. WATSON. Precisely. That is the question I am asking the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the Senator from Indiana that, instead of maintaining general armies for that purpose, I would vest them with the power of invoking as to each judgment, as the particular circumstance may demand, a force which would be sufficient in order to execute the judgment. Then I would vest in them the power to call upon such nations as then were the subjects of their jurisdiction for such contributions of the kind and form of force as in their judgment was then essential.

Mr. WATSON. I think I am somewhat dull of apprehension, but——

Mr. LEWIS. No; it is not an easy question.

Mr. WATSON. But I can not understand how we are to have an international court without having an international army or an international navy to back up and enforce its decrees. Here are two nations, under the scheme as I understand it—and if I am in error the Senator will inform me—and under the Senator's scheme each nation is to be permitted to maintain an army as large as the legislative body of that nation may see fit to maintain, and there is to be no effort at disarmament, as I understand, by this international body, for I understood the Senator to say that he was not in favor of having an international body interfere with the domestic affairs of any nation so as to say how large an army it should maintain, but that it should rest exclusively with the legislative body as to how large an army such a nation should maintain. With each nation maintaining just as large an army as it wants to maintain and with an international court to announce decrees, and yet with no international army or navy to enforce such decrees, and with every nation having just as large an army as it wants, how in the world does the Senator propose to enforce peace under those conditions? The powers the Senator describes, it seems to me—and the Senator will understand that I mean it in no offensive sense to him—are somewhat nebulous and misty, and I do not see how two nations armed to the teeth could be prevented from plunging into war long before this international court of the kind the Senator describes could even begin to enforce its decree to prevent war.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the deductions of the Senator from Indiana from my argument are, of course, his; but the placing in my mouth statements which I assure him are quite apart from what I said I can not accept.

Mr. WATSON. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. LEWIS. I realize they are misconstructions purely. I have never said that I was not in favor of an international tribunal placing a limitation upon armies and navies. I said that this particular league for the enforcement of peace should not be the one that should have vested in it the power of enforcing such agreement respecting these limitations, but that such subject should be submitted to a tribunal made up of nations of equal proportions who have navies and armies of fairly equal size.

Let me be specific, then. I should decline to give Nicaraugua and Haiti the judgment as to what should be the navy of Britain and of the United States, but I do recognize that Britain and also Germany—if she were in her former state in the pristine power of her navy—Italy, France, Japan, and the United States would then be fit equals in any court as between themselves to settle the question as to their navies. That is what I meant; that is, in this tribunal one must understand that if each nation has a single vote—if the big nations have a single vote and the small nations have a single vote—15 little nations would outvote the only 5 nations that have any navy at all, and would remove from them any expression of policy in naval matters when the lesser nations themselves might have no navy nor need of any whatever to be involved in the dispute. That is what I meant, sir.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. Pardon me, but there is one other feature now as to which I desire to reply to my able friend from Indiana.

My able friend from Indiana misapprehends the theme. I say there must be power to enforce the judgment of such a court, but I deny that it is necessary that this league shall have the power of itself to maintain an international army; to the contrary, that it shall have power to make its decrees, and then, when necessary, to invoke of the countries which may have an army and navy, after they had settled upon the limitations, such power from them and such numbers from them and such force from them as would be necessary to enforce the judgment. The difference between my friend and myself is that I do not hold it essential that this league should maintain a standing international army, constituted in its entirety as such, but that from the armies or the navies of the different countries there may ever be drawn when the nations consent sufficient force whenever force shall be essential.

Mr. WATSON. Now, will my friend permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly. I shall yield next to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. WATSON. How would such an arrangement as the Senator from Illinois proposes have prevented the war out of which we have just emerged?

The nations in Europe under his arrangement having as large an army as each nation wanted, when the difficulty began between two nations, long before his league, without power to enforce its decrees, could get into action German troops would have been on their way through Belgium and down to France. If he had called on the other nations to withstand the onslaught of the Germans he would have called on no more nations than finally were arrayed against her, and the war would have been on with all its horrors and consequences. In other words, what I am trying to get at is that I do not see how the Senator is going to have the kind of scheme which he proposes—and to which I am opposed—without having behind it international force enough to enforce its decrees. In fact, the very title of the bill which, as I understand, the Senator from Illinois is espousing, is one providing for a league to enforce peace. How are you going to enforce peace without force?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I have tried to make my position plain, and I shall again attempt to do so. In the first place, sir, if this league were now constituted and given the complete sway for which the bill calls and Germany should attempt such a war as she has waged, we would have to call the very force to which the Senator alludes. But, Mr. President, what I wish to impress upon the Senator is this: Whenever a decree is issued by a court in Indiana giving a man property under a writ of ejectment, it is assumed that the sheriff will deliver him the property; but if, sir, the conditions were such that a posse of citizens should meet the process server and seek to obstruct the judgment, what would the court do? It would promptly give enough assistance of local force to that sheriff to enable him to carry out its order; and if, then, riot followed and it was necessary to call out the State guard, following in aid of the posse comitatus, that would follow. Then if the condition grew so menacing that the national Army had to be invoked, that would follow. That is the policy that would be followed by a United States court; that is the procedure that would be followed in the case of every court we have in civilization. Then, if my theory be at all practicable, this is the way it would operate: Instead of creating an international army that stands constantly on guard, drawn from different members of the league, we would have the power vested in the tribunal, according to its particular judgment, to put force behind it to execute it.

Then if that is met by force, I may say to the Senator, the kind of force which leads the judgment to oppose it is the only other thing that can commend itself to the mind of the court—a form of force that shall overcome the opposition. Is it possible that it will be contended that a court is to be constituted, backed by an army of vast numbers and a navy, which shall at once be invoked as the whole of the army and navy for the enforcement of a judgment before the slightest opposition arises, and which, if it should arise, would be so insignificant and meager that the very smallest force might cause it to be subdued? It is for that reason, Mr. President, that I can not adopt the theory. I hold that it is not at all an essential element of the scheme that there should absolutely exist under the jurisdiction of the league one great combined international army as an existing organization. I oppose such.

My able friend overlooks the fact that I have said that I not only thought there should be a limitation upon armaments and upon navies, but he will recall that I said I wanted that question submitted to a tribunal particularly called, an adjunct to or an auxiliary of the peace league, for that very object; not, as my eminent friend would assume, that I would have every country have as large an army as it chooses.

Mr. WATSON rose.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, in what respect does the Senator's plan differ from the one that has been in existence for some time voluntarily—I refer to The Hague tribunal—where the representatives of a great many nations gathered—I do not know how many, but I think possibly——

Mr. LEWIS. Forty-five out of fifty-seven.

Mr. WATSON. Yes; and where they came to certain agreements, and where they were rapidly approaching, as we were led to believe, a stage where they were to agree to partial disarmament, at any rate, and perhaps to an international court or a tribunal of some kind that would be clothed with authority to try all justiciable cases and perhaps in some way to enforce its decrees, at least by moral suasion, if not by force. In what real respect does the Senator's scheme differ from that?

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator was probably not here at the time, but I alluded to The Hague tribunal, and called attention——

Mr. WATSON. I was called out of the Chamber. I desired to hear the Senator all the way through.

Mr. LEWIS. I called attention to how very parallel the proposal then presented was to that which is now presented, with the single exception that there was no public opinion behind it on the part of all of the agreeing nations such as we now have. I said in that connection, and now answer the Senator, which is to the point of his inquiry, that there was a lack of any method for the execution of its judgments, and there it was weak. My method, I answer, should it be accepted along the lines of that which is projected here, would provide for such a tribunal as could enforce its judgments, and I have presented the theory of how that force could be invoked and utilized.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am greatly interested in what the Senator is so well portraying to the Senate; it is a most interesting subject; and surely the Senator is presenting his views splendidly; but at the same time there is just one feature of it in regard to which I should like to have the Senator's opinion. Is the scheme that is presented by the Senator to take away any of the sovereignty of the United States; and if so, in what particular would its sovereignty be interfered with?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I take it the Senator's question is one that has to linger constantly in the mind when we contemplate any of these arrangements. I must say to the able Senator that a certain form of our sovereignty is always yielded any time we agree to any kind of arbitration with any other country; otherwise the agreement would be, of course, of no validity and of no utility. I have to answer by saying: Yes, a form of sovereignty such as the settlement of our own questions among our States by the United States Supreme Court would be slightly abandoned, proportionately limited, and to some degree surrendered to the main tribunal at large, but we can not avoid that. I must say that the question submitted by the Senator from Tennessee will often confront us as we proceed as a very serious obstruction, particularly to those who feel that no part of any sovereignty of our country under any circumstances ought to be yielded in any particle or at any time whatever for anything.

Now, Mr. President, in connection with this matter of the enforcement of judgments, there is one thought I must bring to the attention of the body. Senators, I am of the judgment that, if public opinion has not now been educated by the events which have been transpiring through the earth of late to where it can accept judgments of this kind without revolting and using force to obstruct them, we have again learned nothing from the sad tragedy that has been placed before our eyes and recorded itself in the blood and wails of 20,000,000 human beings.

As to armies—the volume, size, or limitation—each question has to be determined by the relation the country may bear to its immediate neighbor, the feeling existing between them, and more particularly to what may be essential to maintain peace within the States in the matter of their internal difficulties. Therefore, it must be seen that not until the attempt to invoke the army or navy arises does this tribunal, to which we are alluding, enter upon its offices or need to be invoked.

This disclosure of method brings us at once to the only real process which can execute the judgments. It is the sense of right educated in the modern thought and directed from the cultivated sense of justice which the growth of civilization has impressed upon man. In the final analysis, it is the feeling of the individual of his duty to man and the sense of his own heart as to its obligation to its fellow man and to the religion which he professes in his responsibility to that which is God. This comprehension of what is the basis of a true composition of the conflicts of men in nations, and the fair adjustment of nations flowing from the conflicts of men, was expressed by Cardinal Fleury when the Projet de paix perpétuelle of the Abbe de St. Pierre was submitted. Cardinal Fleury exclaimed:

> Admirable, save for one omission. I find no provision for sending missionaries to convert the heart of princes.

Thus, we must see that all of the result turns upon the heart as it is regenerated, and upon that improved public opinion which senses now for the first time in civilization the duty of respecting the right of its fellows and the knowledge that it will suffer the scorn of men and the contumely of generations if it denies these rights or assails them to their destruction.

Here I impress upon all mankind the thought that it was not only armies and navies which won the war against Germany. It was the public opinion of the world. It was not alone cannon and sword; it was the indignation of Christianity and the aroused universal hostility of refined and improved mankind. These were so shocked at the atrocities and the blood brutalities of Prussia and her allies that they rose from every quarter of the earth to explode their resentment. It was this spirit that disheartened Prussia, weakened Germany, revived the allies, strengthened the heart and purpose of the opponents of Germany; and in the consciousness that they were right and in the knowledge as expressed from every quarter of the earth that Germany was wrong those who contested against Germany found their inspiration and their support, but, above all, their encouragement and approval, and from this obtained their spirit to conquer.

Let it be now known that had part of the world believed that Germany was right in whatever were her reasons for the war, and another part believed with the allies, the war would have been continuing to-day with well-matched sides and the result in doubt. It was the public opinion of Christendom which ended the war. It is that same public opinion that will preserve peace, and if we have not in this agency the assurance of the future peace of the world, all leagues will be useless in their formation, deceiving in their profession, and a failure in their undertaking.

However, it is necessary to organize the expression of this opinion and the league organizes it into execution and expresses it in a single voice, and through that method the result desired is assured, if by methods of men it can ever be obtained.

I now advance to the objections urged. I note particularly those expressed by the junior Senator from Missouri, Mr. REED, and the junior Senator from Washington, Mr. POINDEXTER, voicing that that has often been expressed in lesser weight from many quarters. First, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], the commanding genius of the opposition on this side of the Chamber, asserts that the policy runs counter to the advice of the sage fathers, particularly that expressed by Hamilton, Jefferson, and Madison, reserved in their composite wisdom, contributing to George Washington in what he adopted and gave to the world as his "farewell address." This is also insisted upon by the master voice of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the leader of the opposition on the Republican side of the Chamber. I would have it known that none more than I respect this wisdom, born of experience as well as of comprehension. I recall the sacred admonition of the prophet to the sons, saying: "Remove not the ancient landmarks that thy fathers have set." But I wish to bring to the attention of those interested that these landmarks were set as to one condition that has no existence now and were to guide circumstances that in no wise enter into the present plan nor in any wise are comprehended in the design.

First let us make clear the statement of Washington as against entangling alliances and the effect of the allied friendship, with one awakening the jealousy from the other, of any foreign nation:

> Observe good faith and justice toward all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all.
>
> Nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachment for others should be excluded; and that in place of them just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges toward another habitual hatred, or an habitual fondness, is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest.
>
> The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible.
> Europe has a set of primary interest, which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. . . . Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. . . . Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?
> It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world. . . . Taking care always to keep ourselves, by suitable establishments, on a respectably defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Here, it will be observed, that which Washington opposed was a thing which no man in America I now know urges. He opposed our country entering an alliance with any one country of Europe in opposition to some other country in Europe. This would awaken the jealousies of the one and might not be offset by the advantage to the other, but in the final would lead us to where we had violated the object of the admonition to avoid favoritism. Above all else the admonition was to avoid political connection with any of the European countries. Here we take for consideration the distance that then existed between us and Europe or the smallness of our size in comparison to European lands. We will put aside the consideration that in those days none were dependent upon us—that in these days all are. We will forego the reflection of the weakness we then endured and the great strength which we now enjoy, and we will treat the subject as though there had been no change in the geographical, political, commercial, or military strengths of our land. We will note that in the proposed plan no nation is omitted. Every nation is invited and each upon exact equality, and to all the equal opportunity of method in the arrangement of the court or tribunal also in the enjoyment of its advantages, and in the suffering of its judgments. It will be seen that the proposed purpose avoids the dangers suggested by Washington as to the particular matters related by him and serves to obey the invocation of Washington as to these very lands and people whose friendships were to be desired or whose animosities were justly to be avoided, for in the very same address he says:

> Harmony and a liberal intercourse with all nations are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand, neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences.

It must be clearly observed that we neither violate the admonition of Washington nor by our method run into any of the dangers which he feared.

Now, the Senator from Missouri, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], and Mr. POINDEXTER, from Washington, as is urged in other places, say that treaties with separate countries could effect the same purpose. I reply that the moment we concede that we can make a treaty to the same purpose, we admit the justice of entering into the arrangement. We also admit its practicability and its compensations, or it would be folly to ask that we deal in treaties if we can not get by treaties with individual nations the same result we expect by an arrangement with the combined nations. The difference is this, that with treaties with each nation our relation is between ourselves and that particular nation, but which obtains nothing from the other nations as a consequence or compensation for the arrangement in the individual treaty. Other nations are under no obligation to enforce upon any foreign country having a separate treaty with us the compliance with the provisions of the treaty. To the contrary, it may be to the advantage of the foreign country to serve some interest of its own that our treaty be violated, and the violation be encouraged for the advantages that might come to some single foreign nation, such as granting favoritism and preference in certain matters of trade to a foreign nation that may have a large trade with the particular other foreign nation that wishes to avoid obligation to us.

Then the interdependence of one with the other and upon the other and the mutual obligations, all growing out of the same promises, the same assurances, the same purpose, the same benefits, give assurance of a general aid of all nations in the compact for the enforcement by any nation—such becomes an inducement to coerce any nation into obedience which would assume to disobey. In this way the purpose is constantly before every nation of self-preservation as well as self-compensation and national security.

I do not wish to say anything in this argument, or anywhere, that shall weaken the hopes of those who advocate this system in its entirety; but, Senators, I want you to know that I would be unfair to myself here in my place if I did not speak all the thoughts I have bearing heavily on this theme, since you have indulged me to such an extent as you have.

Mr. President, I now revive to recollection the last interrogatory of my distinguished and beloved friend, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Now, I have set forth many of the advantages of the scheme. I wish now to express my only concern as to possible disadvantages. My fears are not that the league will fail. My fear is founded on its success. I mean that I have more to fear from its success than I have from its failure. If it fails we are but restored to ourselves in the security of our isolation and in the protection of our present strengths, and this has been proven where it can not be questioned in this hour by any source, however prejudiced in national pride or darkened in the ignorance of events. I express my fear to be that when the league has succeeded and any dispute or demand touching my country has been decided in my favor and I enjoy its results, that a claim from other countries of a reciprocity from our country based on demands which may run wholly counter to some of the fixed cardinal policies of the Government might exact so much that if yielded to could weaken the future link with the future years, however much it strengthen us with the present. If denied, it places us in the position where bad faith or hypocrisy could be charged to us as the inaugurator of the movement which we professed to be for universal concord and world harmony.

I now specify. In Asia, Japan, taking China in her guardianship, will demand of Britain and France to demand of us in her favor, as a faithful ally, the abolishment of the policy of exclusion of the Asiatic from our citizenship; and if these European allies decline, they become the victims of Japan's natural discrimination in trade and of her opposition to these nations longer holding spheres in the Asiatic land. If they consent and prevail successfully on us, promptly they will exact of Japan and her associates to command of us the taking down the bars of obstruction to Europe in South and Central America, called the Monroe doctrine. From all these our to-morrows are filled with perils and our to-days with a warning.

Then, sirs, is that other—the freedom of the seas——

VOICES OF SENATORS. What do you mean by your expression of "freedom of the seas"?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the Senators: I mean that were I permitted the voice for America in the light of my convictions I would demand that all ports of all seas and all lanes of all oceans be open to the United States to the same extent as is enjoyed by the nation upon that sea or ocean to her own people, so long as we grant similar privileges to these nations in our ports and our seas. I would go even further. In the light of late events and their result and of our contribution to them, I would exact of Britain in the Suez Canal and of France in the Mediterranean the privileges in these waters to the same extent we are granting these nations in our Panama Canal and in Manila Bay. In making these demands we will run counter to a long self-serving policy of each of these lands and of their adjunct nations. We will be asking a surrender or division of benefits long held as a commercial preservation by these nations as against world competition. From these problems I recite and these demands we must present, confusion, maybe embarrassment, can follow, indeed friction, and as its ever offspring, conflict, of some nature.

I may not live to see the development of this anticipated danger and it may never arise. On the other hand, there are those in my country who feel that if these dangers which I apprehend should arise, that the conceding the demands which may be sought to avoid these dangers would be small in their loss compared to the great gains which through all the time proceeding we would enjoy from the policy inaugurated and established by this league. As to that, I must submit it to the consideration of men who weigh their to-day's action by the measure of their hopes or fears of the to-morrow's. I leave the suggestion of the dangers and embarrassments or of the success and advantages of the league, that it may not be thought that I disown or ignore them.

I express unhesitatingly here that other fear which, were I to suppress it, I would be guilty of injustice to those who honor me with an audience, as well as to my own sentiments that constantly urge for expression. With the present allies we will have no difficulty in reaching agreements to execute the best objects that the leaders of the present generations of these allies assume to be for the welfare or the general interests of the world; but after these agreements have been entered into and we come to execute them and the execution will disclose some loss in commercial prestige to one, some disadvantage in political position to another, some prospect of the diminution of prestige in some subject matter to a third, then will come the claim that the compact made by their forerunners was not intended to mean the thing which in its letter and recital it appears to. Then will arise, even as between ourselves and those called allies, frictions. From these frictions disputes; from these disputes conflicts; and in these conflicts we will be as Hamlet in the description of the after sleep, saying: "What dreams will come we know not."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I now for a moment yield to the Senator from Tennessee. I have, however, something else on the same line.

Mr. McKELLAR. I just wish to ask this question, which is going a little further than the Senator has already expressed his fear.

Suppose the international court determined that the Monroe doctrine should be abrogated, and suppose the political party then in power in this country should permit the decree of the court to be carried out so far as it was possible to do so, and suppose then that at the next ensuing election that question became the great burning political issue in this country, and the people of this country by vote selected a President and a Senate and a House in favor of maintaining the Monroe doctrine after the court had decided it. Would not that put us in a position where we would have to fight for it?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the Senator from Tennessee that if, after we had accepted such a court, the nations of the world had adhered to our theory, and we had entered upon it, our country then should have an election and elect Representatives disposed to repeal it, there is no power in the world that could prevent it. Now, sir, whether other nations, when they sought to have us abide by a decree that our people had repealed, would then visit war upon us is a matter as to which I can not say; but I must concede the right of the sovereignty of the people to repeal the tribunal, so far as it affects them, if they should choose Representatives who would not obey it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not rise, as I do sometimes, and perhaps others, for the sake of controversial discussion, but to get the Senator's views on one or two matters in a concrete form.

I want to ask this question: Would the Senator be willing to enter into any league of nations or international agreement by which we would bind ourselves to submit the Monroe doctrine to any tribunal? Would the Senator be willing to do that?

Mr. LEWIS. I have just said, and I hoped by that to make clear, that so far as I am concerned, if left to me individually, I would put a limit upon the jurisdiction of this tribunal called a league of nations. Before the Senator came in I gave some limitation of that jurisdiction as to an army or a navy, and if the Senator asks me personally I will say that I would not submit the Monroe doctrine to that tribunal, nor to any other tribunal, to decide as to whether or not America shall no longer adhere to it. But one tribunal will I submit that to—America!

Mr. REED. Very well. I thank the Senator. That is a manly, straightforward, American statement.

Mr. LEWIS. What other would my dear friend from Missouri expect from me?

Mr. REED. I would not expect anything but a manly statement, but I have known the Senator to make many statements that were not quite so clear as that when we were having a controversy on the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. Sometimes one avoids a rock ahead of him, or endeavors so to do, as against those who may lurk around it.

Mr. REED. This is too serious a matter for us for a moment to seek to avoid or to cover up.

Mr. LEWIS. Correct you are.

Mr. REED. The Senator will not submit the Monroe doctrine to this court, and I can state his reason, if he has not done so, because I know what his reason must be. He regards it as a doctrine vital to America. Would the Senator be willing to submit to this tribunal any other vital right of America?

Mr. LEWIS. That opens a question as to what is meant by "vital."

Mr. REED. No; but I mean a matter that is vital. We do not discuss what is vital, but a matter that is vital.

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; I would say there are some things that might be vital and yet not vital to such an extent that they could not be submitted with confidence. Many things that would be vital ought to be submitted, because it is what is vital oftentimes that leads us to war. I answer, yes; there are many vital things which I would submit to the tribunal.

Mr. REED. I think we shall have to define "vital." I understand a thing to be vital only when it would involve the life of the Republic.

Mr. LEWIS. And I answer that clearly in this way, that war would involve the life of the Republic. If the force were superior to ours, it might involve wholly the life of our people. If the tribunal were constituted to avoid such war and such vital prospect and danger, I would submit it to the tribunal.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator is not pursuing now that broad path of plain statement that I had hoped we had entered upon.

Mr. LEWIS. That depends upon how the Senator views the reply.

Mr. REED. I do not want to have any misunderstanding about terms. Of course, you can imagine a condition where we might have to submit anything to save our lives. We might be forced to do it by war conditions, just as Germany, in order to save herself from utter annihilation, is now submitting to a most ignominious set of conditions—not half so ignominious as I wish they were, but I am not going to complain about that.

When I speak of the submission of vital matters, I mean this: Would the Senator be willing to bind the United States now to submit matters that are vital? I do not mean if war comes on and we have to do a thing; but is the Senator willing to submit any of the vital interests of this Nation to a tribunal the majority of whose members may be non-Americans?

Mr. LEWIS. I will answer the Senator and say that had he been here earlier he would have understood that I comprehended that by saying that the jurisdiction of the tribunal should be defined, and in defining the jurisdiction of the tribunal it would involve only those matters which could preserve peace. I answer the Senator, yes; I would submit to a tribunal made up in the form that we suggest matters vital to the country, because it would be within the limitations of the jurisdiction that had previously been made as the constitution of the tribunal.

Mr. REED. That is to say, the Senator, then, is willing to set up a court the majority of which are foreigners, and to that court submit matters which, if decided against us, may mean the death of this Republic?

Mr. LEWIS. No; such an assertion was never made by me nor such conclusions by the Senator justified. To the contrary.

Mr. REED. Then what did the Senator mean?

Mr. LEWIS. I said the thing I meant—that that which involved the life of this Republic was not a matter that could be in itself comprehended within the jurisdiction of the league, save as avoiding war.

Mr. REED. Then the Senator and I agree.

Mr. LEWIS. I think we do. I do not think there is any real difference between us when we really understand each other's position. This, however, I should like to have the Senator understand:

I see a danger, an ever-recurring danger, from the fact that a majority of the court is constituted of members from countries other than our own. I gave an illustration awhile ago respecting an attempt to make us dismantle our Navy or our Army. I pointed out that Nicaragua, Haiti, or smaller countries each would have a vote, and that for them to have the right to pass upon the question of what navy Britain, or Italy, or Japan, or my country should maintain would put each in a very serious position of minority. I say to the Senator, that he may understand my position, that I can not deny the right of foreign nations to decide the ordinary questions we have put into their jurisdiction by the constitution of this tribunal while I am asking them to decide against their countries and in behalf of my own country one that involves their ordinary situations and their interests.

Mr. REED. Exactly. The Senator is possessed of such wonderful powers of expression that it is difficult to keep right on the cold, hard rock that I am trying to get his feet on, so that we will understand and the country will understand. I do not say that in criticism; I say it in compliment. Now, the Senator has said he would not submit the Monroe doctrine, and the Senator has said he would not submit a doctrine vital to this Nation, except when we were in a position where we had to submit it in order to avoid a war and we had to choose between the destruction of war and the destruction of a bad decision. That is the equivalent of the Senator's statement.

Mr. LEWIS. No; I beg my friend's pardon. I meant to say this: I assure the Senator that what I literally said was that I would submit vital matters to the court, except those questions that involved the whole life of my Nation.

Mr. REED. Very well. The trouble is the Senator and I do not understand "vital" in the same way.

Mr. LEWIS. Possibly.

Mr. REED. The Senator seems to treat the word "vital" as meaning "important." I treat the word "vital" as embracing the idea of life and death.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I would not submit it.

Mr. REED. Very well. Now, of course the matter of what is vital is a matter of our opinion. Other nations would disagree upon that proposition. We would say that certain things were vital, and withhold them. If we withhold the Monroe doctrine, and if we withhold from this tribunal everything which we regard as vital, then would not we be obliged to concede a reciprocal right to all other nations? That is to say, they would be permitted to withhold from the league of nations or from the decision of the court those things which were vital to them, would they not?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the Senator's question by saying that clearly that is true in every litigation that is ever submitted to any court. I say to my able friend, the moment that you submit a matter to a court you submit to the court the decision of a thing very vital to yourself. When the States have a matter within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States, made up of foreign members, it may be, none of them from the States of the litigation, they submit a thing vital to them. The Senator is correct in saying that our difference lies in what, in each instance, would be regarded sufficiently vital to be within the exception.

Mr. REED. That is a good deal like saying "sufficiently round." A thing is vital or it is not. I am talking about vital matters, not important matters.

Now, then, the question I want to get answered—and then I have one more, and then I am through—is this: The Senator would withhold from this court matters vital to America?

Mr. LEWIS. No; I must again say to the Senator that he quotes me contrary to what I have said. I would not withhold from this court that which is vital to America. I would vest in this court that which is vital to America, but not a thing that is vital to the extent of involving its life.

Mr. REED. Oh, well, a thing that is vital must involve the life. We are going back now to that same definition.

Mr. LEWIS. I want to keep the RECORD straight. The Senator has a different version of the word "vital" than I have.

Mr. REED. When a thing is vital, it is something that has to do with life, and that is the sense in which I am using it. I am not using it in the sense of "important."

Mr. LEWIS. Let me ask the Senator, Does he want to be understood now when he uses the word "vital" as meaning a matter that really is one upon which the very life or death of the Nation would turn?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. Then hereafter we understand each other.

Mr. REED. Yes; or so important to the Nation that it might amount to its practical destruction. Now, if we withhold matters which we regard as vital to us, would not all other nations have a reciprocal right; namely, would not they be entitled to withhold matters vital to them?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the Senator again—that brings us back to the position which heretofore I have explained on the floor—that the constitution of this tribunal defines what particular matters it would have in its jurisdiction, and there we would settle that particular question. Now, if we never agree as to what things it should take jurisdiction of, then the league will never come into formation. If we do agree in a manner by which things such as the Senator refers to are excluded we will not have the question with us.

Mr. REED. But the Senator and I ought not to misunderstand each other about that. I am talking about forming this league, and in the process of the formation we are going to agree what kind of questions are to be submitted.

Mr. LEWIS. Correct.

Mr. REED. Now, at that time it is proposed by the Senator, as I understand, to withhold all those questions which are regarded by us as vital to America.

Mr. LEWIS. Involving its life or death.

Mr. REED. Yes. Would not that, therefore, compel us to concede a similar right to all other nations entering the league?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the Senator, since now he has made it perfectly plain to me: Of course, if they demand equal exemption, it not only should be granted, but we could not ask the exemption for ourselves without correspondingly granting it to another in matters of such a nature. For this reason I say to the Senator that I do not assume that another nation would wish to give up its whole sovereignty to a tribunal of this nature. That is why, had the Senator been in earlier, he would have known that I discussed with great freedom that it should be limited to mere matters that would tend to maintain peace.

Mr. REED. Now, we have arrived at this point: The Senator concedes that the United States ought not to submit to this tribunal any matter vital to it, such as the Monroe doctrine or any other vital doctrine; that the same right must be conceded to the other nations; and that when we form this league it must be understood that we will withhold from the jurisdiction of the league all matters which each nation regards as vital. Now, that being the case, would it not necessarily follow that the nations of Europe would have the right to withhold, as we withhold the Monroe doctrine, the doctrine over there which they denominate "the balance of power"?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Missouri there, suppose we take an instance which illustrates the point of the Senator from Missouri. Some time ago, through the friendly arrangement of the Secretary of State of the United States and the Japanese Government, Japan established the Monroe doctrine for the Orient; that is to say, that those things of most vital interest to Japan should be under Japanese domination, direction, or control so far as the Orient was concerned, which is practically the Monroe doctrine. Now, if we should withhold the Monroe doctrine, of course Japan would withhold the Monroe doctrine so far as the Orient is concerned. That is to say, she would not submit to this tribunal anything which encroached upon her right to control the Orient, because that is what she proposes to do. So, on the other hand, England and the other nations would have their Monroe doctrine in a sense—that is to say, things which were vital to them—and they would withhold it. So the entire matter, it seems to me, goes to pieces at once when you refuse to submit those things which really are vital to a nation.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, it seems to me that both Senators fail to catch the distinction which is intended to be preserved by the very constitution of this league. It is this: The league is proposed upon the theory of being a court to hear the grievances of individual nations as to matters that can be composed between them by arbitration, by money settlement, by harmony. There has never, as I have understood it, at any time been submitted the scheme that every nation should submit its sovereignty of its internal policies. I have specifically pointed out that that could never be comprehended, and I am not able to understand that Senators ought to fancy that such could exist, for the reason that if the constitution of the league as we first create it is such that it shall attempt to comprehend matters which the governments could not possibly submit to it it would end right there.

Mr. REED. Now, Mr. President, we are at a very interesting and crucial part. Of course, I have not said the Senator has intimated that the internal affairs of nations were to be submitted to the league of nations. It is understood——

Mr. LEWIS. That is what the question of the Senator from Idaho involved.

Mr. REED. I hardly think so; but we will not discuss that. The question I am getting at is this: If we withhold from this league questions vital to us, other nations must be permitted to withhold questions vital to them. If we withhold the Monroe doctrine, then does it not follow that the nations of Europe would be warranted in withholding the doctrine of the balance of power——

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the Senator——

Mr. REED. And similar great doctrines which affect, in their opinion, the life of their nation? Now, could you not just say whether you think that is the case or not?

Mr. LEWIS. The trouble is I can never take one of the Senator's questions and say yea or nay. It involves so many comprehensive questions previously asked in different forms that I am compelled to respond to him exactly in what I meant to say and have said before.

In the first place, the question of balance of power I can not realize at all as an international question of government. I may say the question of balance of power is that thing which nations seek to preserve as an adjunct of their defensive armament. This is sometimes done by alliances. If a policy is pointed out or to be followed by which some separate tribunal from the league should have the question of armament as between these nations there will remain a method for a complete adjustment.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will let me interrupt him, I do not understand the question of balance of power to be a question of balancing arms against each other.

Mr. LEWIS. Then the Senator and I differ as to what balance of power means. I illustrate: Italy, with 40,000,000 people and a great army and navy, is one of a balance of power; while China, with 400,000,000 and no army and navy, is not considered in the balances.

Mr. REED. Let me give an illustration. We do not differ. If we reserve from the decision of this tribunal matters which are vital to us in the sense I use the term vital, then, of course, the European nations have the same right. That the Senator concedes. Now, does the Senator know of very many wars that have not had for their fundamental reason not their immediate and irritating cause, but for their fundamental reason some great policy which has been regarded by the people of the governments of the States having the controversy as vital?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Let me finish my question. Have you not provided now that you will withhold from the decision of this tribunal the very thing that brings on the wars of the world?

Mr. LEWIS. That is a question that is answered by admission by some and a difference by others. When I was interrupted by the Senator I was about to follow my last statement as to freedom of the seas. When finished I shall then take up his query again, to which I had intended to allude. I then ask the Senator to excuse me from replying on that phase for a second.

Mr. President, I have defined what I mean to be the freedom of the seas within the meaning of my demand.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator refer to a time of peace or to a time of war?

Mr. LEWIS. I will tell the Senator in a moment. There is the beginning and end of what I feel satisfied is a completely full meaning of the term "the freedom of the seas" in time of peace.

In time of war, answering the eminent Senator from Idaho, there must arise a different rule. In time of war to me the freedom of the seas means that the neutral nations shall have the rights to go into the ports of the country at war as freely as in time of peace as to all matters except contraband. That is the only exception I will make there.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Does the Senator mean that there must be no blockade in time of war?

Mr. LEWIS. No; I feel that a blockade as invariably declared in a time of conflict is addressed to some particular thing, and that is, of course, a policy which each country reserves for its protection that it could under no condition waive.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If the Senator would prefer it, I will not continue the interrogation.

Mr. LEWIS. I shall welcome it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If that be so, then there can not be a free entry of neutral countries into ports in time of war.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator is quite correct, if the blockade is to be universal.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They have done it now.

Mr. LEWIS. What country now?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They have blockaded now the North Sea, and it has been applied to countries both neutral and belligerent.

Mr. LEWIS. Pardon me; the Senator is referring to the past. I am referring to future conditions; the demands that will be made upon us. I say there will arise what is far more important. So I say, sir, that only a very patient people, such as ours were, would have endured the seizing of our ships as they proceeded along in their peaceful course and were in instances taken into the prize court and in other instances confiscating their cargoes, only from the fact that we realized her condition and assumed she was right in her judgment, and our ships were on their way to convey products to a nation making war upon her, and we granted her that privilege, then fixed in international law. I am now speaking of a change in those ancient policies of international law, many of which, were I at the peace table, I would unhesitatingly demand the nullification of.

For myself—speaking wholly upon my own responsibility and asking that no other be credited with this utterance or charged with its result—I put before my country this warning, that in the past the great wars of the world have been conducted between those who were previously partners, and grew from the execution of the compacts of peace, so called, of those who were called the allies. This is the history of the Congress of Vienna, which though concluded between 11 nations, resulted in two years in four of them at war with each other, three again in conflict in five years opposed to each other, and a continuous conflict through life until it led to this last unparalleled war of worlds that has just inflicted the generation of man beyond excuse of civilization or the forgiveness of Christianity.

Let it be remembered that persons who come into negotiations in private life reach the negotiation and dismiss each other in the courteous salutation of peace at the conclusion of their contract. This whether it be an arrangement between corporate interests in the form of stock adjustments and proper distributions, or that between individuals for the payment of money or the delivery of property. When the time comes for the execution of the document then it is that the litigation which has divided these former friends into hostile foes has arisen, and all the bitterness which is the inheritance of such contentions has gushed forth as streams of hatred and rivers of blood. I will not be blind to this prospect even as between ourselves and those we now call allies. It is because of this that I can not go further—and will not assume that those in whose behalf I speak ever intended to go further—than to provide a method in the hope that should these things which I fear arise the consequences may be minimized to where the dangers of a war may be avoided and the harmony of the friction and the settlement of the disputes composed upon the basis of the religion for justice of civilized nations, and upon the virtue in humanity of a Christian people.

Yet it is of this situation that I would speak to our President and his associates going abroad in the words of the Lord's special command to Moses, when in the thirty-fourth chapter of Exodus we have him saying:

> Observe thou that which I command thee this day: Behold, I drive out before thee the Amorite, and the Canaanite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, and the Hivite, and the Jebusite. Take heed to thyself, lest thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land whither thou goest, lest it be for a snare in the midst of thee.

I want it known that I have been an advocate of a different system than that presented by the President, though with the same principle in view as now contended for. In frequent addresses I have put forth a policy which now again, if left to my preference, I would urge. It is continental compacts made within and by separate continents instead of a hope of a single one unanimous arrangement by the general world—the united nations of the earth. Out of my regard for the situation of my own country, and recognizing that fixed fact in history that alliances of men, people, or nations are never cemented so strongly as when on mutual common interests, I would for myself propose a continental alliance for peace and harmony among nations between the United States of America, Canada, and the Latin countries of North America joining with the countries of South America, and that all of the countries of the continent of America should in one compact or union for peace be brought together for the preservation of interests common to each and which will be held together by the consciousness that the assault of one must lead to the assault upon the other, while the preservation of the one by any system will operate as the preservation of the other.

I hold that any country assuming to assail any one of this American-continental compact would be menaced—certainly admonished—by the knowledge that an assault upon any portion of the continent would bring upon them the combined resentment of the consolidated and united peoples of the whole continent, with all of their force against them. When we reflect that none apart from these could assail except at the long distances that must be traversed and recall the difficulty to be overcome before the engines of assault could meet the doors of any part of our continent—the knowledge that it must meet the combined continent of America in the single purpose of resentment of any attack upon any part of the continent—would make impossible, as I view it, the prospect of such danger. Add to this the settlement as between ourselves in this compact of any dispute along the lines of the method I have pointed out for the general league of nations, we have that other inducement to the sure settlement by method of peace of the mutual advantages to be had by living in close unity with those whose neighbors we will become. We of this continent will have become as closely allied as States in this Union are, when we measure the New England coast with the Pacific coast of our own land.

But I forego the insistence of my policy to yield to the larger sphere suggested, that it may be tried in the hope that the compact may be the result that is dreamed and the relief from strife and conflict that all mankind prays for.

If you will not adopt this means, if you refuse the league proposed—the only one that time seems to have suggested from its wisdom, and necessities offered to avoid a recurrence of their miseries—what will be the result? We will be subject to assaults from each nation wherever it will be the profit of that nation to assail us; particularly will this follow wherever that nation can allure other nations to join it in the enterprise. We in retaliation will assail and invite other nations who will find it profitable to put us under obligation, and in cooperation with these will lead conflict. This perennial course, indeed, this perpetual policy of warfare, would mean the discouragement of commerce, the death of enterprise, the slaying of our children, the paralysis of all advance and improvement; the end of the thing for which a republic is presumed to have been established to achieve—liberty of man, peace and happiness of country. Have we not had enough of this experience of desolation of lands and decimation of humanity to justify us in assuming some method that might serve as a restraint and in its trial can produce no injury, but from which, if we only consider the association, nothing but good can follow? May we not say in the words of Paul to the Romans, "Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace"?

Now, to those who oppose this policy I propound that test interrogation, What else do you offer? What thing do you tender to take the place of this? Is it possible that we stand still, making no effort, and are content to gravitate backward into the sloth of selfishness until our retreating course is stayed only by the trench in which we are again to be arrayed in death? Are we but to repeat the disasters of the past and the destructions of the present? Might I ask, Have all our sacrifices been in vain, and is America, that advancing Nation before the world, whose generosities have preserved mankind, whose bounties have recreated civilization and whose sacrifices of her children for a world's freedom have given the first hope of peace to mankind that the world ever knew—shall we confess that we "merely make the promise to the ear and break it to the hope?"

For myself, I picture our future as the mother of tranquillity, the guide of justice, and the director of the harmonies of the world. I am content to adopt the design upon the theory of acknowledging any enterprise which may make for peace of the world, but strengthened in the confidence that I have, that any adventure entered upon by this country, sponsored by the soul of her desire and sanctioned by her spirit of justice, can not fail. From the example of her past, wherein she has known but success, as she has amazed the world with her achievements without parallel and without rival, I salute her in the confidence of one of her sons who beholds his majestic mother as the Lady Superior of earth, from her heart sending love to nations, from her hand showering incense of happiness to people, and with her prayer invoking Heaven for its perpetual blessings to mankind.

England's great commoner, John Bright, speaking in Birmingham, England, in 1862, apostrophized this our America. Said he:

I have a bright vision before my gaze. * * * I see one vast confederation, stretching from the frozen North to the glowing South and from the wild billows of the Atlantic westward to the calmer waters of the Pacific main. I see one people, one law, one language, and one faith, and all over that wide continent the home of freedom and the refuge for the oppressed of every race and of every clime. From this bright spot shall be proclaimed the peace that shall soften the world and assure happiness through the union of love to all God's people.

Sir, we, too, have our vision! And in it dream our dream. I behold our America enthroned in her virtues, presiding as the mistress of the fates of the world. She sits in the court of nations as mediator of their differences and arbiter of their grievances; this our country vanquishing force by scorning its use. In her brow glows the star of justice that will illumine where war has blackened. About her heart is the shield of honor, in her hands neither spear of power nor the scepter of authority. She will but sway her wand of love, and beneath this will arise the genii of trust and faith to lead the nations of the world to justice, liberty, and peace—the mission of America to mankind.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it is a long step from the eloquent language to which we have just been listening to the prosaic subject of retirement legislation, but I want to take that step and to see, if possible, if we can not dispose of this legislation this afternoon.

Mr. BORAH. Was the Senator going to make remarks on this bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to have the bill passed, if possible, this afternoon.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to submit some remarks on the subject which has been under consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let us vote on the bill, and then the Senator can submit his remarks. I will forego making any remarks myself on the bill if we can have a vote on it.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator can get a vote on the bill at once I will yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield for a moment to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], who desires to make a motion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to state that yesterday afternoon I voted under a misapprehension. I was called out of the Chamber by a constituent and came in just before the vote was taken and voted "yea." I thought I was voting on the McKellar bill when I was voting on the Pomerene amendment. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. May I suggest to the Senator that he merely enter the motion? The Senator from Tennessee does not desire a vote upon reconsideration now?

Mr. McKELLAR. Why not? Why not let us vote on it and get rid of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that a number of Senators are absent I know, and I do not think he should ask for a vote on the bill to-day.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am inclined to think that we have a quorum here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENDRICK in the chair). The Senator from West Virginia enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Pomerene amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no desire to hurry a vote if other remarks are desired to be made at this time, but I wish to move to reconsider the vote. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee whether he desires now to proceed to a vote.

Mr. McKELLAR. I prefer to proceed to a vote this afternoon. We have a quorum here, and I see no reason in the world why we can not vote on the question and dispose of the bill finally. I ask for a vote on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia to reconsider. That will settle the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BORAH. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that it is not thought that there can be a vote upon this question this afternoon. I do not want to stand in the way of his proposition, but at the same time, if there is not going to be a vote and a final disposition of the bill, I wish to occupy the time of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I would be very glad to yield the floor to the Senator, but I think, after all the time we have spent in the consideration of this bill, the bill ought to be disposed of. As the Senator knows, when we adjourn this afternoon we will adjourn until next Tuesday, and on next Tuesday the revenue bill will come in, and of necessity will displace this bill. In all fairness does not the Senator think we ought to vote on the bill this afternoon, and dispose of it one way or the other? If it is to be defeated, well and good; if it is carried, well and good. Why not vote on it?

Mr. BORAH. I make it a universal rule never to make a speech when there is a possibility of having a vote. If the Senator is going to get a vote, I certainly will not take up the time of the Senate in debate, but I am told that Senators want to discuss this bill further. If that is true, then I want to discuss the other matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield to the Senator for that purpose.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senate has listened to a very able and remarkable speech upon a most important subject. I desire it to be understood that I do not rise to reply, nor even to engage in a debate with the very able Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] as to the position which he has taken in regard to this matter. I rise for the purpose of asking those who advocate a league of nations, Are you willing to follow your proposition to its logical conclusion? I have yet to hear or to read the discussion of anyone upon this subject of a league of nations in this country who is willing to follow it to where they themselves admit it must necessarily go if they follow it to its logical conclusion.

No graver or more far-reaching proposition has been proposed to the American people since the adoption of the Constitution. It may affect deeply the life of our people and impress itself upon our institutions for all time. It may be favorable, but it must be conceded that it may be most unfavorable in its effects. Certainly those who propose a scheme so fraught with possible changes in our national life, a proposition constituting so wide a departure from former practices, are under every obligation to take the people into their confidence. It is time to get away from generalities and deal with facts. It is time to say what you propose and what you do not propose. It is especially time that you should be willing to stand by the undoubted logic of your position. I have never read so much loose and general assertion and so little in the way of definite and specific plans as has crowded our literature on this subject for the last three years. Now, the people who must bear the burdens and suffer in case this experiment is not a success are entitled to know what you propose and what you do not propose.

The able Senator expressed his apprehension as to obstacles which would confront the President at the peace conference. I share with him that apprehension. I presume there are many of us who had the President consulted us would in all probability have advised against his personal attendance at the peace conference. But I doubt if there is anyone here or elsewhere who does not wish him the most eminent success in view of the fact that he has made up his mind to attend. Certainly no one would wish other than success for the President in the great enterprise upon which he has entered, notwithstanding that they have differed with him as to the wisdom of his going. We would have him achieve all that may be to the honor and security of his country.

But while I have some apprehension as to the difficulties which will confront the President at the peace conference with reference to this matter, I have greater apprehension with reference to the future of my country in case anything of the nature which has been proposed should be entered into upon the part of this Government. I am led more to that conclusion this afternoon than ever before after listening to the very able Senator who himself expressed the opinion in his concluding remarks that in all probability it was fraught with all kinds of difficulties and all kinds of troubles.

I am reminded by his concluding words of the words of another eminent statesman dealing with this subject matter about a century ago. At the conclusion of the Napoleonic wars they organized a league to enforce peace, which was known as the Holy Alliance. It operated for a few years with a reasonable degree of success, degenerating, however, in the meantime from the high principles of a Christian purpose to that of a conspiracy to destroy free government and a free press. One of the most eminent statesmen of England of that day, after observing the workings of this league for a number of years, made this statement with regard to it, which, it seems to me, contains a great truth:

> There are extreme rights to which nations as well as individuals must have recourse for their preservation and for the exercise of which no legislature can provide. The extreme right of interference between nation and nation can never be made a matter of written stipulation or be assumed as the attribute of any alliance.

That was the statement of Lord Castlereagh, who had been active in connection with the organization of this league, or, at least, who had been active in its proceedings, and this he announced as the funeral eulogy of the organization.

So the able Senator from Illinois, in his concluding remarks, very fairly and frankly stated that vital issues which involve the integrity, the honor, or the rights of his Nation he would not submit to the judgment of such a league, because he knows, as we all know, that the rights of nations as between nation and nation are often of such a vital character that they can not be adjudicated by any tribunal or any alliance. It is only those incidental things or minor propositions, such as we may delegate to a board of arbitration or to a court of arbitration, that may go to an organization which is separate and apart from the organizations of the country itself. There are many questions—the great vital questions—which no nation will submit to and which can never be measured and circumscribed by any alliance or by any tribunal other than the sovereign voice of its own people.

Therefore I say that none are willing to follow this matter to the point where it would become effective and controlling, for the reason that those matters which are of vital concern no nation will ever submit to a tribunal which is composed in a large part or a majority of which are the representatives of the other nations.

The first proposition connected with the proposed league is that of a tribunal to settle the matters of controversy which may arise between the different nations. First, what is to be its jurisdiction and power? What kind of questions are you willing to submit to it? Secondly, after you have submitted such questions as are of vital concern to you, are you willing to give to that tribunal the sanction which will enable it to enforce its judgment? Are you going to organize a tribunal with the power to judge and also with the power to enforce, or are you simply going to organize an international debating society, without any power whatever to enforce its opinions? No man has yet been willing, according to my reading, to say that he is willing to give to such an international tribunal or to this superinternational court the power to render judgment and to furnish it the police power or the army to enforce it.

Will anyone advocate that those matters which are of vital importance to our people shall be submitted to a tribunal created other than by our own people and give it an international army, subject to its direction and control, to enforce its decrees? I doubt if anyone will advocate that; the able Senator from Illinois would not do so; and yet he is perhaps as earnest an advocate of this proposition as we shall be able to find. He was unwilling to give to this tribunal an army at its command. If you do not do so, Mr. President, what will your league amount to? If it renders a judgment, which judgment is for the purpose of preventing war, and can not enforce its judgment, what does it amount to?

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. REED. If it does render a judgment for the purpose of preventing war and has the force to enforce its judgment, how is it going to enforce that judgment by force except by making war?

Mr. BORAH. Precisely so. In its last analysis the proposition is force to destroy force, conflict to prevent conflict, militarism to destroy militarism, war to prevent war. In its last analysis it must be that if it has any sanction behind its judgment at all. There is where the difficulty lies.

The distinguished ex-secretary of state for foreign affairs in England, Viscount Grey, has meet this matter very candidly in discussing the obstacles to this proposition. He was candid enough to say that without a superinternational tribunal and without an army at its command the league would be futile. Is that your program? Do you say that you propose that American citizens shall be called into military action at the bidding of a tribunal composed almost entirely of members from Europe and Asia and wholly beyond the selective or elective control of our people? Viscount Grey said:

> The economic pressure that such a league could use would in itself be very powerful, and the action of some of the smaller States composing the league could not perhaps go beyond the economic pressure, but those States that have the power must be ready to use all the force and all the economic and military and naval force that they possess. It must be clearly understood and accepted that the deflection from or violation of the agreement by one or more States does not absolve all or any of the others from the obligation to enforce these agreements.

Let us, therefore, be entirely candid with the people of this country to start with. It may be that we are at the point where we want to organize a league of nations and give it certain powers, but let us not hesitate to tell the people of the United States precisely what we propose to do. Let us be candid with them, because the day of reckoning will come, for the people of this country still vote. Let us say to them that, if we are to organize a league of any force or effect, we propose to place an army at the disposal of the court, and that the citizens of the United States shall constitute a part of that army.

What I object to, among other things, as to those who are advocating the league is that they refuse to alight, to come down to the concrete affairs of the world, to say to those who must fill the trenches and fight the battles in case the league calls for war that that is what is expected from them in the beginning. When we reach that point, however, not a single one seems willing to accept the proposition. It is explained or modified or, as in the case of the Senator from Illinois, rejected.

Mr. Balfour has been quoted time and time again as favoring a league of nations. I want to read a paragraph or two from the debate in which Mr. Balfour stated what he meant by "a league of nations," which seems to me, after he got through with it, was nothing more than an old lady's international quilting society. He said:

> It is quite easy to imagine a court representing all the nations—a court which would have the same relations to nations that the Supreme Court in America has to the States in America. But the Supreme Court of America, which my right honorable friend truly said was a court of as high authority as any court in the world, is a court whose decrees are enforced from one end of the United States to the other, and has behind it the organized police of the United States, and my right honorable friend forgot to tell us where an international police was to be found likely to enforce the contracts between one nation and another and to see that any default of public justice and international dealings should be forbidden. He must have felt, I think, himself, when he was developing this scheme of his for the enforcement of treaties, that it did want the basis on which all enforcement of contracts in a country rests; that is, it had not behind it the power of the law to enforce the decision of the court.

Then the speaker gives us clearly to understand that Great Britain will hardly turn over to a tribunal which Great Britain does not create the power to use her army and her navy to enforce the decrees of some other tribunal. He continues:

> Therefore, so far I agree that the economic weapon—the power of imposing tariffs in certain cases—may be so misused as to amount to a very great international outrage. But I do not think that any country will consent to abandon the idea of putting on tariffs if its own economic needs, honestly and modestly conceived, require that to be done. My right honorable friend is justly entitled to speak for the great organized industries of this country, but I do not believe in the long run that labor in this country would consent to give up its power of dealing, if necessary, by tariffs with the economic problems which may arise. If no doubt there was universal free trade enforced by some court of law, it might—it certainly would—add to the wealth of the world and might not greatly injure their populations. But I venture to think that that proposition is driving the abstract economic theory to impossible limits. However that may be, I think the plan which my right honorable friend indicates is one which he would not find communities would assent to. It would be impossible, among other things, because so many countries must have tariffs—

And so forth.

So he rejects also the enforcement of the decrees through economic processes. Then he says, further:

> He again told us that the league of nations could only succeed if there was general disarmament, if there was universal freedom of trade, if there was universal arbitration, and if everybody believed in the success of those methods. I thought that last proviso showed that my right honorable and gallant friend had clearly apprehended, as, indeed, his whole speech showed, what the difficulty of his scheme was. The scheme is based on universal disarmament. Universal disarmament can only be tolerated by states which believe that they are secure from invasion, and they will not believe that they are secure from invasion unless and until they feel confidence in the international arrangement which is to stop war. So that the whole scheme, I will not say moves in a circle, but depends upon people having a conviction that their scheme will succeed, and that conviction is based upon the fact that there is universal disarmament, while universal disarmament could only take place in the event of their being persuaded that the machinery for keeping the peace of the world is going to be successful.

So, Mr. President, the able gentleman who is quoted throughout the land as being in favor of a league to enforce peace, first, rejects a superinternational court with an army to enforce its decrees; second, he rejects the proposition of an economic enforcement of its decrees; third, he ridicules and rejects the proposition of universal disarmament; and, fourth—I will not take the time to read it—he rejects the proposition of universal arbitration. Now, what is there left to a league of nations? Here is one of the ablest and most famous advocates of a league of nations, and what a toy it is after it has been sheared of its virility by his incisive and all-inclusive logic. He is another of the statesmen who wants a league but will neither give power nor even respectability. Who will stand up for this noble conception when Mr. Balfour fails us and the able Senator from Illinois refuses also to follow where logic and events would inevitably lead him?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I just came into the Chamber a moment ago, and am interested in what the Senator is saying. Will he kindly let me know who the speaker is whom he has just quoted?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. Balfour.

Mr. WALSH. And what was the date and place of the address?

Mr. BORAH. The 1st day of August, 1918, in the House of Commons. This is the speech that is quoted throughout the United States to show that he is in favor of a league of nations.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I be pardoned to state to the Senator, if he will tolerate me for a moment, that the remarks just made by him might lead to the conclusion that that speech of Mr. Balfour was quoted by me as favoring a league. I did not quote Mr. Balfour.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no.

Mr. LEWIS. I especially eschewed it as an expression that means all things to all men.

Mr. BORAH. I did not mean to be understood as indicating that the Senator from Illinois had quoted it, but at the time the speech was delivered the press carried throughout the country from across the water, properly censored, I suppose, the statement that Mr. Balfour had come out in favor of the league. I am showing the ineffable beauty of the league which he favors.

Mr. President, it has been universally understood in this country that Mr. Bryce, formerly the popular ambassador from Great Britain to this country, was in favor of the league. Well, Mr. Bryce seems to be in favor of a league, but he does not seem to be enthusiastic concerning such a league as would have any power to execute its decrees or to enforce its judgments. He says:

> I do not for a moment underrate the difficulties which must be faced, and I think that we may dismiss all those grandiose notions of what has been called a federation of the world, an attempt to induce the great States to forego their sovereignty and to submit themselves to some superior authority, and to constitute an international army. All these schemes, if they ever are realizable, must belong to a very distant future; and I do not think we ought to contemplate any further limitation of sovereignty than is necessarily involved in the obligations undertaken by a treaty. But however limited and cautious our plans may be it is not to be denied that the difficulties in the way are very great, and that the questions to be solved are of the utmost complexity. I do not think anyone can appreciate how great those difficulties are unless he addresses himself to a close and long-continued study of the subject and to the various plans that have been advanced.

It may be that all this discussion under the fascinating and pleasing phrase of a league of peace means nothing more than extending and amplifying the field of arbitration. If so, there will be no opposition, I presume. I should be glad to see all questions which could be arbitrated submitted to arbitration. If that is all that is involved, we shall likely all agree in the end.

Earl Curzon, discussing the subject at the same time, said:

> On the other hand, my noble friend Lord Lansdowne pointed out the enormous difficulties that lie in the path. He thought that it would be impossible to ration the members of the league in respect to armaments. I venture respectfully to agree with him entirely. I ask this, How could you limit the number of soldiers, guns, ships, aeroplanes in the possession of the different States who would join your league? Are you to prohibit or are you merely to limit the use of the various dreadful instruments of war which have been developed to such a high degree in the present war—submarines, poison gases, armed aircraft attacking from the sky? Or are you to limit the money that is spent by the various members of your league upon these armaments? And if so, how are you to see that all these limitations are honestly observed and are not evaded?

Again, he says:

> How are you to provide—you must provide—for legitimate territorial expansion and rearrangement in the future? You can not stereotype the existing condition of affairs. You can not, to repeat a famous phrase, "set bounds to the march of a nation."

And here, Mr. President, I digress to comment. Suppose we had been a member of a league of nations immediately after the establishment of a form of government in this country, such a league of nations as had a constituted tribunal with power to pass upon the questions which are supposed to be submitted to it. In what position would we have been in 1845 and 1846, when we had our trouble with Mexico, and which resulted in our securing from Mexico some very valuable territory lying upon the south of the United States? It is generally believed by historians that there was not very much justification for our conflict with Mexico; and, had we been a member of the league of nations and had assailed Mexico for reasons which were not satisfactory to the league, but were satisfactory to us, we would have found ourselves in the position of having signed a treaty which invited all the nations of Europe here to fight us for having engaged in war with Mexico. Indeed, who will set bounds to the growth of a nation?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if it will not interrupt the Senator——

Mr. BORAH. Not at all.

Mr. REED. I should like to direct his attention to this thought: We have had some difficulty with Mexico in recent years; that difficulty is far from settlement; it may at any time spring into a more aggravated condition. Would the Senator be willing to submit any controversy we might have with Mexico, involving the treatment of our people, of our rights as a nation, to a tribunal composed of European kings or bolsheviki or both?

Mr. BORAH. No, Mr. President; and I would not care whether they were kings or bolsheviki, or who or what they were; if they did not owe allegiance to this Government they could not certify to their character to such an extent that I would submit a proposition to them which involved the honor, the safety, or the vital interests of the United States. All these questions, for weal or woe, are now determinable before a tribunal composed of the American people, and there, for my part, I shall leave them. I think their sense of justice, their poise in the hour of threatened danger, and their wisdom at all times will be equal to that, and, indeed, vastly greater than that of any superinternational court.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I wish to know whether he wants to leave this country at liberty to make another territorial grab, such as resulted from the War with Mexico? That is what I understand from the argument of the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator understood me about right. In other words, I am perfectly willing to leave the policy of this country to be determined by the common sense of the great masses of the American people who cast the ballot. When the American people decide to make a move I shall content myself with the belief that while the people are not always right, they are seldom wrong. I would infinitely rather trust their judgment, their sense of right, and their sense of propriety than to trust to a superinternational court composed of people over whom they have no control whatever.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, let me remark that everybody who considers this country alone will, of course, agree with the Senator from Idaho; but we must allow every other country to exercise exactly the same liberty, and those countries exercising that liberty drew us into the present world conflict. Now, the question is, How are we going to avoid that in the future?

Mr. BORAH. I will only say that at the time this world conflict began we had two leagues to enforce peace. We had the league composed of the allied nations and we had the league composed of the Teutonic nations; in fact, it is no trouble to organize a league of nations, because whenever you get two nations to agree that they will not permit some other nation to do something that it wants to do, you have a league to enforce peace.

Mr. WALSH. That is just where the trouble arises. Some talk was had awhile ago about the balance of power. We have tried for centuries to preserve peace by balancing one nation or group of nations against another nation or another group of nations, and it has been a dismal failure.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator evidently believes that in order that the proposed league may be a success at all, all the nations of the earth must join it.

Mr. WALSH. Unquestionably.

Mr. BORAH. Very well. Let us so assume. These leagues have no inherent necromantic power. There seem to be those, and the Senator is one of them, who believe if the league is sufficiently formidable in membership and sufficiently exalted in declared purpose that its power of incantation will be sufficient to banish strife and discord from the earth. But suppose in its membership it comprised the whole world and upon its glittering dome of purpose were inscribed the creed which was given to the race centuries ago from Sinai, it would still be this world, vexed with the jealousies and ambitions, the schemes and machinations of the most masterful minds of each succeeding age. And if anything would stir to uncommon activity and fire with unwonted zeal a Richelieu, a Metternich, a Bismarck, it would be just such an engine of power as that which is to mold and direct not alone a nation or a single people, but all nations and all peoples.

Furthermore, Mr. President, another proposition has been presented by the question of supreme interest to the people of the United States, and that is, do they want their interests determined by representatives coming from Turkey or from the Balkan States or from the countless nations of Europe—different in race, different in language, different in aspirations, different in ambitions, and different in conceptions of right and wrong—or do they prefer——

Mr. REED. And from Asia.

Mr. BORAH. And from Asia. Or do they prefer to try to do business upon the plan outlined by the fathers of our country—no entangling alliance with any European nation? If the two propositions are presented to me that I must go into copartnership with all the nations of the earth and submit the interests of the people of the United States to a tribunal composed of a majority of those nations, or submit questions of peace or war to the people of the United States, I prefer to leave it to the people of the United States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. Pardon me. That gets us back, Mr. President, to the original question. Of course, everybody would who considers the interests of the people of the United States alone; but the trouble is that every other nation will exercise exactly the same right; it will determine for itself when it will start a war, the same as we will determine when we will start a war, and then we will encounter the difficulty which we seek now to avoid.

Mr. BORAH. What the Senator from Montana is arguing for is that we turn over to a tribunal other than a tribunal constituted by our own people the question of whether we shall be at war or whether we shall be at peace upon a particular question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. The Senator assumes that if we do so that that will be likely to lead to peace. I can not conceive of anything more likely to arouse animosity upon the part of the people of the United States and to stir the people of the United States to conflict than to have a decision rendered concerning their vital interests by some tribunal constituted in its membership by those who are not responsive to the people of the United States. Besides, the Senator assumes this tribunal will always decide for peace; suppose it has a bent for war. The people of the United States will always decide for peace except when honor and security are involved.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I interrupted him merely to emphasize as much as I could that those who are opposing the league of nations always argue the proposition as if the United States were the only nation on the earth; that is to say, if whenever the question arises it is asked whether we desire to determine our own future or allow some other nations to determine it, there is no answer to be made. Of course, we will not bind ourselves; but the other nations of the world are equally at liberty to determine their own future. Germany was entirely at liberty under the existing system to determine her own future. She conceived that she would go out and conquer the world, and we were drawn into the controversy. We may be drawn into it again. That is the situation that, it seems to me, must present itself for the consideration of Senators, rather than the question as to what we should like. Of course, we should like to run our own future according to our own wishes and desires.

Mr. BORAH. And I venture to prophesy that we will.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Wait just a moment. I should like to dispose of the argument of the Senator from Montana first.

The Senator from Montana says that Germany was at liberty to pursue her own course. Now, Germany could not be bound more strictly and more in honor than she was at the time she entered into this war. She was one of the signatory powers to a treaty which bound her not to do what she did do, and she understood perfectly that these other nations with whom she was going into war were bound to prevent her from doing that thing; but notwithstanding this agreement, which was backed up by the most powerful nations of Europe, Germany conceived the proposition that she was able to disregard the treaty, and she did disregard the honor of it, and therefore proceeded.

Mr. WALSH. Quite so.

Mr. BORAH. Now, suppose that Germany was in a league of nations and that she was bound to submit her propositions to an arbitral tribunal; but suppose Germany conceived at the time that she was powerful enough to dominate the world, to disregard the tribunal, to disown the obligations of the league, would she be in any different position, as a matter of honor or as a matter of binding obligation, then she was at the time she entered the war?

Mr. WALSH. Why, certainly not.

Mr. BORAH. Certainly not.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly not. Germany disregarded her solemn treaties and obligations because she felt that she was sufficiently strong, militarily, to defy the world and to overcome the world.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely.

Mr. WALSH. And of course if you leave Germany with perfect liberty again to develop her marvelous military organization, at some other time, 50 or 75 or 100 years from now, she may entertain the idea that the time is ripe again.

Mr. BORAH. I see the angle of vision that I did not get. The Senator now proposes that this league of nations shall supervise all the different nations of the earth, and say how many soldiers they shall have, and what the size of their navy shall be. Would the Senator permit Nicaragua and Costa Rica and Bulgaria to determine how large an Army or how large a Navy we shall have? Are we to have our security determined by the 57 varieties of nations in Europe? Does the Senator think their judgment is better and wiser than the judgment of a homogeneous people imbued with a love of peace and a love of country?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the Senator is now simply adverting to some of the difficulties of representation. Why, as a matter of course we could not submit to giving these little nations the same voice that the Government of the United States would have. Great Britain would not submit to giving them the same voice. The subject of representation is one of very, very great difficulty. It was when the United States was organized. But let me add, Mr. President, that Germany disregarded her obligations because she felt that she was strong enough from a military point of view to do so. As a matter of course, disarmament or a limitation of armaments is a necessary condition precedent to a league of nations. Everybody understands that. It is for the purpose of getting rid of armaments and military establishments that a league of nations is proposed.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator says that he would not be in favor of the small nations determining these questions. That reminds me of what one of the most eminent writers on international law has said with reference to leagues of nations. He says they have always been of great binding force and effect upon small nations, but never of any binding force or effect whatever upon large nations.

Mr. WALSH. We never have had an agreement under which there was a limitation of armaments; and, Mr. President, the idea of disarmament and limitation of armaments may go on without any league of nations at all.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator says we have never had a league that provided for disarmament. The Holy Alliance provided for the disarmament of France, and kept it disarmed until such time as it permitted it to arm.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but they did not provide for their own disarmament.

Mr. BORAH. No; precisely; and the Senator has just said that he would not consent for the small nations to have any voice in reducing the armament of the large nations, and the large nations in all probability will not reduce it themselves.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, that is another difficulty that confronts the thing at the outset. My understanding is that no one has ever proposed that the armaments shall be prescribed by the league of nations. That is an arrangement that will be entered into originally and form part of the original agreement. It will be a matter of treaty between the various nations entering into the league.

Mr. REED and Mr. LEWIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENDRICK in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Missouri, and then I will yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. REED. Since the question was raised as to what were the objects of the Holy Alliance let me read just four or five lines. In fact the entire agreement is so exalted in its tone that it might be read with interest by all, but these gentlemen disclaimed all selfishness. Let me read this:

> They solemnly declare that the present act has no other object than to publish in the face of the whole world their fixed resolution, both in the administration of their own States and in their political relations with every other government, to take for their sole guide the precepts of that holy religion, namely, the precepts of justice, Christian charity, and peace, which, far from being applicable only to private concerns, must have an immediate influence on the counsels of princes and guide all their steps, as being the only means of consolidating human institutions and remedying their imperfections.

Mr. President, the signers of this instrument—and finally all the world signed but England and the Turk and the Pole, the latter two being excluded, but England indorsed it later—all agreed to these terms; and the despots of Europe, several of them, including the King of Prussia and the King of Austria, both promised constitutions to their people. I only cite it to show how exalted were the ideas of these potentates.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, incidentally with the interrogation of the Senator from Montana, I ask the Senator from Idaho if he will assume a condition where such a league as is now proposed did exist, and assume that it had existed at the time that Germany started out upon her course of war. Does the Senator from Idaho assume that Germany would have emboldened herself in the undertaking that she did had she been conscious that there was a league of which she was a member that would have then ostracized her from commercial opportunity and punished her with such restrictions as they could apply, as well as met her with combined armies? In other words, if the purpose of this league, as he understands it, were really in existence and had been in existence at the time Germany started out, and she was a member, does the Senator assume that she would have presumed to do the things that she did in the face of the penalties that this league could have inflicted?

Mr. BORAH. Of course, Mr. President, had she entertained the same opinion under the conditions which the Senator names that she did entertain when she entered upon this war—that she could conquer and dominate the world—she undoubtedly would have utterly disregarded any league or any combination of people against her. It is all a question of a state of mind, of what the German people thought, and it would be so in every instance. Germany undoubtedly thought she was strong enough to win against all possible comers. So believing she would have disregarded the mandates of a league.

Mr. LEWIS. Is the Senator, however, of the judgment that if we had the organization in existence as he understands it is proposed from certain sources, Germany then would have felt herself able to meet and dominate it, when it had a concentrated organization that could confront her?

Mr. BORAH. Of course, if Germany had thought that there was an organization of sufficient strength to have prevented her from accomplishing her purposes, she undoubtedly would not have entered into it; but she did not think that at the time she entered into this war.

Mr. LEWIS. Truly.

Mr. BORAH. She thought she could control the situation. Now, if there had been a league of nations, instead of Germany preparing for this war as she did, it is said, for about 40 years, she might have taken 10 years longer, in order to make more thorough preparation to have met a larger combination against her, and, furthermore, she might have secretly had much support inside the league. You must bear in mind this proposition, if we interpret the situation correctly, that the German people, led by their leaders, not only believed that they were capable of dominating the world, but they believed that it was their duty to impose upon the world their theory and conception of civilization.

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. That being true, there is no league or combination of nations that you could conceive of that would put down such a nation; and let me tell you another thing: There we come to another very vital proposition.

Suppose a nation, as a member of this league, comes to the conclusion that it must accomplish a certain thing as a people—acquire larger liberty, greater freedom, expansion of territory—and that its life is involved in such a movement, and the league decides that it must not do it. What kind of a people but slaves would submit to the domination of another nation, prescribing and bounding their growth and their development? You propose to erect by this league a bureaucratic system beyond the conception of the human mind heretofore to determine when nations shall move, when they shall grow, how they shall prosper, and how they shall expand.

Mr. LEWIS. May I not ask the Senator if his very illustration does not demonstrate this: On that theory, then, the ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States that delimits the barrier between Costa Rica and her neighbor, lately in conflict, would be utterly useless, for they would then say, as self-respecting people, how could they consent to accept such fate that was against them? Would not that naturally follow?

Mr. BORAH. Just that might follow.

Mr. LEWIS. Does not my eminent friend admit that if it is applicable at all in one case it is applicable in the other?

Mr. BORAH. But this is absolutely certain: If the Supreme Court of the United States or any other tribunal renders a decree which interferes with the growth or development of a nation as it feels it must grow and develop, it is not going to pay any attention to it.

Mr. LEWIS. I concur.

Mr. BORAH. Now, let me call your attention to another thing. For 700 years Ireland has had over it a control and a domination infinitely stronger than any league that you will ever organize to control all of the nations of the world. Has it destroyed the national spirit? Has it destroyed the national purpose or the national ambitions of that little nation? And will you ever destroy it by mere domination, direction, and control of some superior force? We make a mistake, I will say to the Senator from Illinois, in not giving due weight to those passions for development and growth, for liberty as a people conceive it, which no power can control or dominate, and which you can not destroy.

Over a century ago a league of nations combined and separated, dismembered, and destroyed Poland. For a century and a half she has been a waif upon the face of the earth. There has hardly been a revolution in Europe in that time that has not been led by some Polish spirit, and to-day, after 150 years of dismemberment by a powerful league of nations, the strongest national spirit in Europe is the Polish spirit, and you can not dominate it or control it by a league of nations.

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator will tolerate me, by the test of the very illustration he gives I ask his judgment. In the first place, as to Ireland, does not the Senator's observation finally lead to this conclusion, that everything turns upon that public opinion which surrounds the judgment and the sense of justice which accompanies it? Second, does not the Senator concede that a different atmosphere and life are now ours than a century ago, and that the selfishness which produced all the evils to which he alludes at least has been relieved from in part, and that the object of the league is to prevent the very things which he says were wrongfully done to these nations?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator presents a question which I should like to answer; but I do not feel that this is the time, perhaps, to dwell upon some facts which have developed since the armistice was signed between the different nations which carried on this war against Germany. There is no possible doubt but that this war leaves the situation just about as the Napoleonic wars left the situation, with a very strong feeling in favor of some understanding among the nations by which to prevent wars; but it is just as equally true that all of these separate nations have their ambitions, their commercial desires and appetites, and their jealousies, if you may say so, in a business way, which are going to lead to precisely the same national rivalry, the same national ambitions that have always characterized the different nations of the world; and I sincerely hope that the time will never come in the history of the world when there will not be that distinct national spirit and national ambition characterizing the different nations of the earth.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho permit an interruption there?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, everybody agrees with him that there ought to be among nations a very strong national spirit to carry forward the culture and the civilization of nations, just as there ought to be among individuals a very strong individualistic feeling to carry forward individual development; but we have long since agreed that individual development must submit itself to some tribunal of arbitration when it comes to a row between him and me or between any other two people. Now, the Senator from Missouri has read the high-sounding tones of the Holy Alliance declaration. There was not anything so wrong about the tone. What was wrong was that they never meant it, and never intended to keep it, and never did keep it, and the really civilized nations of the world never entered into the agreement, neither Great Britain nor ourselves.

Mr. BORAH. Great Britain did not actually sign the agreement, but she adhered to it nevertheless.

Mr. REED. And indorsed it.

Mr. BORAH. And she met with them at three separate congresses, and sat in with them, and decided their policies with them, and was one of the advisers of the Holy Alliance; and she never withdrew from the alliance and severed herself from the alliance until she found that the alliance was engaged in the destruction of free government, and then she separated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is no difference between the Senator and me about the historical facts. Great Britain did not enter into the agreement. She did let it go with an arrière pensée of her own; and at the final time, when she found what the holy alliance was trying to do, not in accordance with its previous agreement, but in violation of it—to wit, extinguish free government from the earth—she did then suggest to the United States what we now call the Monroe doctrine, and we adopted it in order that the South American Republics might have their freedom.

There is no difference between us as regards the historical facts; but what I am talking about now is this: Suppose they had meant what they said; suppose they had done what they said they were going to do; and suppose that Great Britain and the United States had entered into it. Can the Senator have any doubt, or can I have any doubt, that there would have been much longer preserved peace of a much more just character than the world ever afterwards met with?

Now, then, suppose that at the end of this war we agree and Great Britain agrees, the two of us controlling the seas; Japan agrees, the only other power threatening the seas; and France agrees, the only other marine power—Germany being crippled—that we will not permit any civilized nation to go to war with another civilized nation unless it has first either consented or offered to leave the question in controversy to arbitration. Suppose we mean that, and suppose we do what we mean. Does the Senator suppose that anybody will ever defy the amphictyonic council of the civilized world and its opinion in that respect?

Suppose another thing. Suppose that as a result of this war we say that no nation shall keep over half a million men under arms. Let us just suppose that.

Mr. BORAH. It is a nice thing to suppose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to suppose it, because I think it is a good thing, and the only thing I am leaving in doubt is the number; but suppose it was 500,000, half a million men. That is as much as Great Britain needs, even on her far-flung battle line. That is as much as the United States needs. That is as much as Russia or France would need. It is not beyond the power even of Belgium or Switzerland to provide. It does not take away from any great, strong nation its natural advantages, because they have the natural advantage of reserve force and resources and man power behind them. There is nothing unfair about it. Suppose that were agreed to—four hundred thousand or five hundred thousand—and suppose we entered into an agreement that if any nation dared arm itself any further she would become the enemy of the civilized world, and we would so declare her and so treat her. Does not the Senator think that that would lead to a greater hope, at any rate a more assured hope of permanent and just peace in the world?

Now, one more question, and then I am through.

Mr. BORAH. I hope the Senator will not take up my time, because I have got to close. It is near adjournment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One more observation, one more sentence, and then I am through. Now, if the Senator will add this reflection to what has gone before—that the world in the meantime has become democratic, and that the faith expressed now by nations will not be the faith of the despots who happened to control them, like the King of Prussia, and the King of Austria, and the Czar of Russia in the old time, but the expression of the will of the people themselves in all these countries—does he not agree with me that it is much more apt to be carried out than if it were the mere will of despots, subject to a revolution at home?

Mr. BORAH. Yes, Mr. President. These people who have fought and won this war in the name of democracy are about to organize a tribunal, which tribunal is to have the power to decide upon great questions of national interest, and which tribunal shall have the say as to how that shall be enforced. Now, who is to control this tribunal? What say will the people of the United States have with reference to who shall control this tribunal? They could not have any say as to more than one of them at most, and they would have only a third or fourth time removed control over that particular one.

Is it proposed that this tribunal shall be in any way selected, elected, or confirmed by these people whom the Senator talks about? This scheme removes the power to declare war farther away from the people than it is now. I think it is already too far removed from those who fill the trenches and fight the battles; but now it is proposed to give it to a tribunal which is still farther removed, which is an appointive tribunal selected by the different nations, over whose judgment the people will have no control whatever—a fitting conclusion to a war waged and won in the name of democracy! If you will demonstrate to me how the masses of the people can control this tribunal, direct its decrees in case they are not satisfied with them, or make it unmistakably responsive to the people, you will present a question much more to my liking than the one we have now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, do I understand, then, that the Senator thinks it is absolutely hopeless to organize any system of civilization where each nation shall not be its own judge and its own jury and its own executioner?

Mr. BORAH. I do not think it is hopeless.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should hate to believe that, and I think the Senator would hate to believe it.

Mr. BORAH. The trouble with the proposition of the Senator from Mississippi and all these gentlemen who are discussing the league to enforce peace is that they assume that the league to enforce peace will bring peace. We who are opposed to it think that instead of "a league to enforce peace" it ought to be named "a league to promote war," because we believe that is precisely what it will do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But, Mr. President, I assume——

Mr. BORAH. Yes, you are assuming, but I am not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I assume that any expressed will of humanity, through its organized agencies as nationalities, to do a certain thing shall at least have a bent toward that thing, and that it shall not have the opposite effect. I believe that the will to preserve peace goes a long way to preserve it, and that if it is expressed through the organized authorities of society in the world, representing humanity and the democracy of humanity, it must have at least a tendency toward the purpose.

Mr. BORAH. That is precisely what Alexander the First thought.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. In that connection let me say this, and then I will not disturb the Senator any more: Alexander the Czar did say about that, and he meant it, and he was the greatest one of the men around that council table; but he was subsequently overslaughed and overawed by a great many other forces.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely. The Senator has stated there the defect of the whole proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There was but one man to deal with. Every man that wanted to fix Alexander just had to see Alexander. He did not have to see a whole lot of free countries; and Alexander finally became a slave to the orthodox church, and he finally went back on everything that he had ever advocated; but he was just one man. Now we are talking about a scheme of nations, and democratic nations, and we say that they would not be likely to be controlled by one man.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will permit me to proceed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BORAH. I must close, and therefore I have to ask the Senator to let me proceed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. By the way, I want to beg the Senator's pardon. I did not intend to make the last outburst.

Mr. BORAH. That is all right.

Mr. President, the Senator has referred to the fact that Alexander changed his mind. Indeed he did. He started out with a league based upon the principles of Christianity. He ended up as the most violent advocate of a conspiracy to destroy free government and a free press. The power, however, which had been lodged in him as a Christian was still in him as a barbarian; and that is one of the defects of this league. Who is going to keep it from under the control of a Metternich, as the holy alliance came under his control? Who is going to keep it from under the control of a Bismarck? If that is true, who is going to keep them, when they are once members of this tribunal, from changing their minds from the aim of a league to enforce peace to that of a league to promote war?

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator will yield, I do not understand that there is any desire to have fixed judges for the determination of these matters. I understand it is advocated for a league of nations that certain persons shall be selected upon each side and the odd man determined by lot if he can not be agreed upon, and the matter is then submitted to them.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course I do not know whether the Senator has reduced his proposition to form or not, but the only forms I have seen so far are those for a tribunal of a permanent nature, with power to decide and power to enforce.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I understand they are not to be——

Mr. BORAH. The Senator says he understands. From whom does he understand?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is the situation now at The Hague. It is the manner in which they are selected there.

Mr. BORAH. The Hague has been rejected and put aside, and we are now dealing with another proposition.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is an advanced stage over what has been in the way of arbitrating matters. For instance, if you have a controversy between Belgium and the United States it seems to me that Belgium could select three judges of her own and the United States select three judges of her own, and let the six select the seventh. Surely that would be a fair tribunal, and it would not be subject to the decision of six judges. I recognize that there is great difficulty in getting judges of different nations who are to determine matters. I understand that a decree made by a tribunal of this kind is a final decree subject to no change or modification whatever, and that being the case the little nation as well as the big nation is fairly treated. If you have as a basis justice and right, which will prevail in the case of a controversy of that kind, you are not going to have the incentive to war which it gives in ordinary times.

Mr. BORAH. Of course I do not know from whom the Senator understands this program. If it has official sanction back of it, of course it is an interesting proposition. But the proposition that has been submitted to the country does not contemplate that kind of a program at all.

Mr. President, we have seen in the discussion of this league to enforce peace that very few, if any, have been willing to say that they are willing to create a superinternational court with power to render judgment and a police force to enforce it. There are very few who are willing to say that they are willing to submit the vital matters, those matters which involve the life and death of a nation, to the court. Now, there come the other exceptions, and let us deal with them for a few moments, and I will close.

The able Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] says he does not understand that this league to enforce peace, the membership of which will be composed of all the nations of the earth, will in any way interfere with the doctrine which was announced by the Father of his Country in his Farewell Address, to wit, that there should be no entangling alliances on the part of this country with the governments of Europe, his idea being that Washington had in mind an entangling alliance with some particular one nation as against some other nation of Europe; that as this league will comprise all the nations of the world it will not be subject to the inhibition which was given to us by Washington in his Farewell Address. I have never understood that to be the construction of Washington's Farewell Address. I have never read it in that light. I do not know of anyone else except the able Senator from Illinois who has. Let us see if it will bear that construction. He says:

> The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is in extending our commercial relations to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with peffect good faith. Here let us stop.

To what did he refer? He referred to our treaty arrangements with France, the only treaty of alliance we ever had, and that was a treaty with one nation. He said, so far as this particular treaty was concerned, or so far as our former engagements are concerned, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop with all foreign nations. No alliances with foreign nations. Let there be commercial alliances, commercial understandings, and commercial agreements, but all political connections or all political arrangements or understandings are prohibited by the advice of the Father of his Country.

Now, how do you construe this?

> Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Certainly, Mr. President, that can not be construed in any other light than that the Father of his Country, whatever his wisdom is worth to us now, was opposed to any foreign political combinations, arrangements, or understandings of any nature or kind whatsoever; that he excluded Europe from any political combination or understanding as a whole, because Europe had a set of primary interests of her own with which we had very little or no concern. This is the understanding of all men for more than a century. Not until the advocates of this league appeared has it ever been attempted to explain away or emasculate this doctrine. It is too late now to trifle with the last will and testament of him of whom it was said by a great Englishman, "He was the greatest man of our own or of any age."

While it is said that transportation has brought us closer to Europe than we were when Washington lived, Europe's primary interests are just as distinct in a multitude of the nations of Europe to-day as they were when Washington was upon the earth. There are some interests common to Great Britain and this country, interests common to France and this country.

These nations are advanced in the arts and in government and far progressed; but what is there in common between Bulgaria and Turkey and Asia and this Nation to-day different from what it was when Washington wrote his Farewell Address?

It is the proposition of this league that it shall include all these nations, the fifty-odd nations and perhaps one hundred and fifty when this matter shall be finally adjusted after the war, all of which are to be represented and all of which are to be members of the league. Politically we are just as far apart now as we were then, and if Washington were alive to-day he could announce his doctrine with the same accuracy, with the exception of two or three nations at most, just as emphatically and just as pertinently as he did when he bade farewell to his countrymen.

So, Mr. President, again I say, let us be candid.

I appeal to those who advance the doctrine of a league of nations to be candid with the American people and say whether it means the abandonment of the doctrine of Washington, that his Farewell Address has spent its force, has become antiquated, and should no longer have effect. It may be that the people of the United States are willing to abandon that doctrine. It may be that they are impressed with the proposition that we have entered upon a new era, but let us be candid with them and tell them that any practical league of nations means that we are to enter into entangling alliances in Europe, and all Europe, and all Asia, and all Africa.

We come now to the Monroe doctrine. I appreciate the candor and commend the Americanism of the Senator from Illinois when he says that the Monroe doctrine would have to be excepted from any league which he would indorse. But, Mr. President, a very distinguished educator at the head of one of our great educational institutions, an advocate of the league to enforce peace, has said that the league could have no more to do with the Monroe doctrine than it would have to do with the price of sugar; that he was not in favor of excepting it, because it does not affect it. Let us see whether it does or not.

The Monroe doctrine was based upon three propositions: No further colonization by European powers on the Western Continent, no extension of the European system to America, and no interference with established governments. It was called into existence by reason of the activities of the league of nations called the Holy Alliance, to which I have already referred. When this congress met at Verona in 1822 it took up the question of the Spanish-American colonies. The rising tide of democracy was sweeping away the Spanish possessions in South America. Spain was not able to control the situation, therefore this league to enforce peace had some business to attend to. Peace must be restored, and underneath the restoration were to be placed the crushed hopes and aspirations of people struggling to be free. And here let us remember that some wars are as holy as liberty itself. Peace when freedom is the price is fit only for slaves. Thus the Monroe doctrine was born. It was thrown up as a dyke against the threatened flood of foul inundation of this league of nations. It dedicated the western world to liberty. It was the new Republic's bold challenge to this unconscionable conspiracy bent upon the destruction of free governments. It is this doctrine which I contend any league of nations composed of foreign powers will destroy.

Let us illustrate. Why did we purchase the St. Thomas Islands? They were situated on one of the routes leading to the Panama Canal. It was known or feared that Germany wished to secure these islands. We would have no right to object to her securing them except the right which arises out of the Monroe doctrine. As a sovereign nation Denmark had a right to sell. As a sovereign nation Germany had a right to buy. Had she purchased and had we submitted to it, the Monroe doctrine would have been at an end. Suppose she had purchased the islands and had undertaken to take possession of them. Would we have consented for Germany to have those islands on the route to the Panama Canal? Would we have submitted to an international court the question of whether or not we should maintain the Monroe doctrine? Or if we had submitted it and it had been decided against us, would we have given up the Monroe doctrine and permitted Germany to acquire the islands? Suppose Germany had purchased them and started to take possession and we had moved our battleships to the waters in the neighborhood of these islands to prevent her taking possession. Under this league to enforce peace that would have put us in the wrong and we would have found ourselves a member of a league by the terms of which we invited all the nations of Europe to fight us because we refused to submit the Monroe doctrine to a tribunal or refused to give it up. Do you think we would have submitted any of these questions to an arbitral tribunal composed entirely of foreign nations? If it had been submitted, do you think the people of the United States would have sustained the treasonable administration that had done so? I repeat, Mr. President, I thank God the American people still vote and they will control the policy of this Nation in matters which touch their vital interests and involve the security of their country.

Take another proposition. A few years ago Germany made a move to purchase the Galapagos Islands near Ecuador. They, too, were not far from the Panama Canal. It was during the time Mr. Root was Secretary of State. Through correspondence we prevailed upon Ecuador to refuse to sell. But suppose Ecuador had refused to accept Secretary Root's suggestion. As a sovereign nation she had a right to sell, and Germany had a right to buy.

Suppose she had purchased and undertaken to take possession and we had disputed her right to do so. Would not the Monroe doctrine again have been directly involved and would we have submitted the question of whether Germany should have these islands, which would involve the safety of our whole country, to an arbitral tribunal? But if we had refused to submit it according to the principles of the league of nations, all other members of the league would have had to send an army here to whip us into submission. We would have found ourselves the signer of a contract which would have invited every nation of Europe to take part in the affairs of the Western Continent. President Wilson once said most correctly: "The Monroe doctrine was proclaimed by the United States upon our own authority. It always has been and always will be maintained upon our own responsibility." No, indeed, we want no foreign powers settling the difficulties of the Western Continent. We have gotten along splendidly under the doctrine of Washington and Monroe without their aid or assistance.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator spoke about the Galapagos Islands a moment ago. The question came up under the McKinley administration, and Mr. Hay, then Secretary of State, served notice in form to Ecuador that there was but one purchaser for those islands if they were for sale. When it came to Mr. Root and the question arose again, Mr. Root said: "I did not propose that we should be in a position where we had to buy the islands, and I told Ecuador those islands were not to be sold to anyone."

Mr. BORAH. Precisely.

Mr. LODGE. That is the Monroe doctrine, and that would go to the winds if we had a league of peace with foreign powers.

Mr. BORAH. I thank the Senator. I have read somewhere this illustration which I make use of: A few months before the commencement of this war the President of the United States appeared before Congress and asked permission to use the armed forces of the United States to enforce the rights and protect the dignity of the United States in Mexico. Before the authority was actually given a clash of arms took place between the United States and Mexico, and some two hundred Mexicans were killed and perhaps 75 or 100 Americans killed. We gave the authority, and in due time our force in full appeared upon the scene. Suppose we had been a member of this league of nations, a league which provides that every nation before it proceeds to hostilities shall submit its question to arbitration or to the decision of an international court. Would we have submitted to European nations the question of whether we should protect the dignity and enforce the rights of Americans upon this continent? Would we have abandoned not only our rights, but abandoned the Monroe doctrine, by inviting foreign nations to settle it? And at the time that we appeared at Vera Cruz, under the conditions which existed we would have been subject to ostracism by this league of nations and would have, according to the very treaty which we would have signed, invited all the other members of the league in company with Mexico to fight us.

Not only that, Mr. President, but at the very time the President appeared before Congress and asked for this power we were in a solemn treaty with Mexico binding us in honor and good conscience in case of any controversy, before resorting to hostilities, we would undertake to arbitrate or settle it in some way in order to maintain the friendship between the two nations. It was not believed at the time that conditions permitted our adherence to this treaty. Would our honor or our conscience have been any more under the control of a treaty which was the basis of a league of nations? Would it have been any more binding upon our armies, unless it be assumed that we would refrain from fear and not from honor?

Yet these men who are advocating a league of nations, a league to enforce peace, with a court to decide difficulties, pretend to say to the American people that it would in no wise interfere with the Monroe doctrine. I repeat again, let us be candid with the people of this country and tell them what this scheme of a league to enforce peace means. Let us deal with them in the utmost candor. If anyone knows what it means, he should say so. If he does not know what it means or where it is going to lead, in Heaven's name let the people know that also.

Mr. President, let us be perfectly candid with the people of this country and tell them what this scheme of a league to enforce peace means. It means the creation of a superinternational court and turning the Army over to their direction if it has any virility. It means the abandonment of Washington's Farewell Address. It means the abandonment of the Monroe doctrine. It means that we will enter into entangling alliances with Europe. I am not in favor of it. I am not in favor of any league of nations which infringes in the least upon the sovereign power of the people of the United States to direct and control the destiny of this Nation.

Mr. President, I concede to the ideal its great place in human affairs. I am glad we have with us always the idealist. Life without its music and its poetry, the great, throbbing heart of humanity devoid of sentiment, and this world of struggle without its ideals would be the place that Byron in his gloom tells about, where all were "chilled into a selfish prayer for light." But while the ideal has its place, into that land of promise, like the patriarch of old, the legislator is not permitted to enter. He must deal with concrete things and things practical. If possible, he must know in advance to what results the plan proposed leads. He must seek to measure its effect upon those whose lot it is to tread the homely paths of life. His material is human nature as it is and as it always will be—struggling up and moving on, hoping, aspiring, but human nature still. If the uglier passions were dead and love of power were banished, if race prejudice and national rivalry and commercial hunger were at an end, if we could only realize in practice that the Creator made of one blood all nations to dwell upon the face of the earth, the task of the legislator would be easy.

But you and I are to deal with a world tortured and twisted by selfishness and greed, vexed and driven by rivalry and ambition as well as honored and ennobled by self-denial and self-sacrifice. We can no more in wisdom ignore the former than we should disregard the latter. And above all, the thing which seems to confound all purposes and frustrate the noblest schemes is that inscrutable and tantalizing fact written upon every page of human history, the fickle friendship of nations.

Six years ago had we formed a league Germany would have been welcomed and as a friend, though at that time she was preparing her war for world dominion. We would have had within the league, operating under cover of friendship, the secret forces of an avowed enemy of peace. Turkey, I presume, would have been admitted, as we never yet have felt the necessity of declaring war against her. Thirteen years ago Russia and Japan were at war. In 1917 they formed a most friendly alliance. In 1918 they are at war, or near war. It has not been long since Bulgaria and Serbia stood and fought together against the Turks, though they have since been engaged in deadly conflict against each other. Speaking again of the Turks, the most cruel and remorseless of nations, in the last hundred years, at different times, every Christian nation of Europe has been willing to enter into some kind of an alliance with her. Within the last decade Germany and Austria stood by and assisted while Italy seized Tripoli from Turkey. Since then Germany and Austria and Turkey have been at war with Italy. A powerful league was formed between France and Britain and Russia in 1914, to the effect that no peace should be made until it was made together. In a little over two years Russia had made a separate peace. Great Britain and France have been during the last century and a half more often enemies than friends. This Republic has friends now who were not our friends in former days. This is the story told from the beginning of history. There is no such thing as friendship between nations as we speak of friendship between individuals. Any plan based upon such a theory is built upon shifting sands. Equally futile are schemes to boycott in an economic way erring nations. People and nations will trade where interest and advantage invite them to trade. The Paris economic conference was a ridiculous affair, an affront to human experience. With deep insight the President disowned its purposes. Nations and peoples act from self-interest—buttressed and sustained by race rivalry and national pride, and also, thank God, by patriotism, which is love for your own country, your own government, and your own people before and above all other countries, governments, and peoples. Without that patriotism, that sacred passion, which reached its sublime heights at the Marne and at Chateau-Thierry, the world would not be fit to live in. Whatever plans we have, let us build them in the light and under the inspiration of the proud traditions of the Republic and the teachings of Washington and Jefferson, of Jackson and Lincoln.

You will read that on the night before Alexander started on his conquest of the world he visited his old tutor, Aristotle, for a last interview. The aged philosopher said to the youthful conqueror: "You are about to start upon an enterprise which will bring you into many lands and among many nations, some already celebrated in arts and in arms, and some savage and barbarian. But this last counsel I give you: Withersoever your victories lead you, never forget that you are a Greek." But Alexander did forget that he was a Greek. The self-restraint, the poise, the fine sense of justice, the philosophy of the Greek gave way to the unrestrained revelry and reckless debauchery of the savage and the barbarian. Conscious of his great strength he tossed prudence to the wind. That which promised dominion and glory and power ended in a premature grave in a foreign land.

Sir, I fully understand that we have as a people come into a wider circle of influence and under graver responsibilities than we have known heretofore. I acknowledge in full our duty toward the peace of the world, our deep and vital interest in sustaining and extending and strengthening the domain of international law. I would shirk from no duty; I would meet every obligation. But as we are brought into contact with many nations, some advanced and enlightened in the ways of free government, some far below our standards and conception of right and justice, we should never forget that we are Americans. Through it all we should cling to our traditions, our principles and policies by means of which we have risen to leadership in the great struggle for free institutions. Americanism, the most vital principle in civilization to-day, the hope of the world, is not to be compromised, much less abandoned. The political creed under which we have attained unto greatness, the tenets of that faith which lighted this noble experiment on its way, are not to be disregarded simply because we are now victorious and strong. The simplicity, the justice, and the demonstrated wisdom of the two great underlying principles of our foreign policy are not to be bartered for the imaginary plans of an imaginary world. They harmonize with our tastes, they conform to our habits as a people, they fit into and buttress our free institutions, and for myself I do not want to give them up. "Observe justice and good faith toward all nations; have neither passionate hatreds nor passionate attachments to any, and be independent politically of all." That is the political chart with which we put out to sea over a century ago. It will be a fateful hour when overbold and too conscious of our strength we conclude that without this chart we can withstand the storms which we are bound soon to encounter. True to these principles, true to our teachings, we can still discharge every obligation toward peace and for the advancement of mankind.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I take it for granted that there is not an American in the world who will forget that he is an American. I take it for granted that the spirit is as widespread in Mississippi as it is in Idaho. Alexander ceased to be a Greek, as the Senator said, but for the very simple reason that he never was a Greek to start with; he was a Macedonian.

The whole sum and substance reduced to its last analysis of all the Senator said most eloquently is that he contends we have a right to be the judge in our own quarrels ourselves. That is all. If he were to announce that as a principle of philosophy among individuals the whole world would unite in putting him in a lunatic asylum or sending him to prison. It is absolutely wonderful that men who live in a state of civilization, where they leave to fair arbitrators quarrels between themselves, should contend that they lose independence and suffer indignity whenever as nations they agree to let justice and right prevail, instead of having each nation act as its own judge.

The Senator has drawn a picture of what might have happened in our quarrel with Mexico. What would have happened if we both had been members of a league of nations would have been this: In the first place, Mexico never would have fired upon the American flag. If she had fired upon the American flag—as she did fire upon it—then it would not have been we who had started the war, but Mexico. Then the league of nations would have made Mexico the common enemy of all mankind, instead of merely our enemy.

Mr. President, I believe in a God of justice and righteousness. I believe in the utterance of Tennyson, that a day will come when "the common sense of most will hold fretful realms in awe," and I do not believe that any nation has a right to say what the Senator has just said, assuming me to speak for this Nation, any more than any individual has a right to say what he has just said, if he spoke for an individual, whether himself or any other individual. I do not believe that any individual or any nation has a right to say: "I shall be the sole judge in my own quarrel; I shall try the case; I shall give judgment; and I shall execute the judgment."

There are two ways of keeping the peace of the world. One is by an amphictyonic council of the civilized world, which we are trying to secure; the other is by the domination of one great world power that shall make its will known to all the world. That is what Prussia and Germany attempted. At the bottom of the heart of the Senator from Idaho he seems to have the same idea, except that he would not have Germany do it, but he would have us do it. Of course, you can keep the peace of the world if you let one nation rule the world, and rule it with such force and such power that nobody else dares defy her. At the bottom of the Senator's heart is that notion; but it is not a right notion; it is not just; it is not fair; it is not civilized; it is not enlightened; it is not righteousness. You have no right in a dispute between me and you to be the sole judge of the controversy; and America has no right in a dispute between her and anybody else to be the sole judge of the controversy. The only reason why hitherto a nation has been the sole judge in a controversy is because it did not limit its own power to be so, if it thought it had the power. It is no less barbarous for a nation than it is for you or for me to say: "We will admit nobody else to stand in judgment; we will ourselves be the sole judge, the sole court, and the sole executioner of our own decrees."

If you are going to carry on this miserable mad world the way it has been carried on for a long while, why, go ahead with it; but it must result after a while, if you are going ahead that way, in one thing. It must result in the carrying out of the German idea by somebody else and not by Germany. Somebody must conquer the world and rule it and keep it in peace. If you want America to do it, all right, if you think you can, if you think the game is worth the candle. I do not. I would infinitely rather that the "common sense of most should hold fretful realms in awe."

When the Senator comes and tells me about what failed to be done under the Holy Alliance, with six despots gathered around a table, to agree upon things that they never intended to carry out, it has nothing to do with what we are proposing here to-day. There was only one of them that ever did intend to carry it out, and that was Alexander of Russia, and he forced it upon the council. He was an idealist, a sentimentalist, a fine fellow, except that later on he went all to pieces. But a democracy is not going to do that.

If you think we are the only democracy in the world, you are again mistaken. The Government of England is more democratic than is our own. The voice of the people of Great Britain is put upon the statute books within a few weeks after a general election, and the voice of ours may never be, and frequently has not been. France is as democratic as are you and I. Italy is almost as much so. Belgium is very nearly as much so.

If you want to carry on this mad, barbaric, insane business of any nation getting mad with another because a grand duke has been assassinated and declaring war, leading to a war of all the world, why, go ahead with it. But God will not bless you in it, whatever else you may say or do. I imagine that a different verb would suit the situation rather than the verb "bless."

The Senator from Idaho, under it all, is of the opinion that every man is in his quarrel, that he would like to settle it for himself; but we have long since agreed, in the interest of civilization, that we could not do that. It is better for a quarrel to be settled wrong now and then than it is to have both parties to a quarrel, each one to settle it for himself, the only upshot of which is that one must kill the other. So the Senator's philosophy, reduced to the ultimate analysis, is that, as between nations, each nation must be its own judge, and, in the long run, must proceed to murder all the inhabitants of the other nation.

The Senator from Idaho would say, "I am an American; I must not forget that I am an American and that I am all sovereign; I can not allow anybody else to interfere"; or, "I am a Frenchman; I must not forget that I am a Frenchman, and in all quarrels to which France is committed I alone must be the judge"; or, "I am a Briton; I look away back beyond a long line of ancestors; I am proud of them; and in any quarrel in which a Briton is engaged I alone must be the judge; the United States and France shall not have any voice at all." You had better just say, "I am a barbarian" and be done with it. "I insist, as the barbarian does, upon settling all my quarrels to suit myself." That is the only difference between a barbarian and a civilized man. A savage settles his own quarrel to suit himself, if he can, and if he can not the other fellow settles it to suit himself, and one of them dies on the spot.

Great Austria sends an ultimatum to little Serbia, saying: "One of my grand dukes has been killed, and you must kneel upon your knuckle bones and come in, and not only apologize but let me run your country for a while, while I settle this question to suit myself." Then Germany comes in and says to Russia: "Yes; you must let her settle this to suit herself; she is sovereign, and, being sovereign, she is the only judge of her own controversy."

There is a higher enlightenment coming to this world than the Senator from Idaho has thus far dreamt. It may not come now, but it will finally come. There will be a time when no man will dare stand in any deliberative body and assert the doctrine which he has just asserted, when no man will dare stand up and say for a nation what no man now dare say for an individual, to wit, "You must not touch the sovereignty of the nation in the slightest degree, because unless each nation settles its controversy to suit itself it has lost its self-respect." Why, I do not lose my self-respect when I go to court with you or you with me.

Now, as to leaving controversies in which the United States are concerned to a biased and a partial arbitrament with separate interests of a European character, as the Senator says, that is not and never was involved in the proposition. Nobody ever said, except a few extremists who have never been listened to much, that every nation was to be represented in a council that was to settle all difficulties. The only question was that they must settle them, and that if they did not submit to fair and impartial arbitration, then the civilized world would taboo the country that did not.

Mr. President, you may talk all you please, you may say what you choose to, you may quote all the bad men and barbaric history that has ever been written—and there is lots of it that is quotable in favor of the position that the Senator from Idaho has just taken—all that is back there; all that is behind us so far is barbarism internationally; and we have got to get away from it somehow, at some time, now or hereafter. You may argue all you choose about it, but when you get through talking about it, it comes down to this: Are you fair? Are you just? Are you generous? Or, on the other hand, do you insist that you shall be the sole judge in your own quarrel? That is all; there is not anything else to it. Are you fair? Are you just? Are you honest? Have you that sense of honor that makes you give some consideration to the other man's assertion of his right, or do you stand like a savage and say, "I will be the sole judge of my own quarrel"? And when you say it as a citizen of a country or undertake to make your country say it, you are none the less criminal as an American, but you are a hundred million times more criminal than if you said it just for yourself, because you are undertaking to say it for a hundred million people.

I should like to be the judge of my own quarrel always in a way. I believe I would be generally right about it, and I reckon you think you would be, but that is not what civilization has decreed for me or for you, and that is not what civilization ought to decree for nations.

Oh, I wish the Senator from Idaho would think for just one moment about the men and the women and the children of Belgium and Serbia and Poland and of France, and what this barbarism has led to. Murder, robbery, rape, and everything else in the world; and why? Because of the absurd notion that every nation has to be the sole judge of its own quarrel, and that it was lacking in honor and lacking in self-respect and lacking in patriotism if anybody else was invoked to try and settle the controversy; that is all. Every murdered man and every ravished woman and every robbed bank or robbed household in all Europe to-day owes the guilty fact to the advocacy of the very theory that the Senator has just been talking for. The whole thing would have been avoided if, upon the suggestion of Earl Grey, Austria had been willing to leave it to arbitration. The whole thing would have been avoided if, upon his further suggestion, she had even been willing to leave it to The Hague court. It was put up to her trebly—leave it to arbitrators, to The Hague court, or leave it to the concert of Europe; and Great Britain, France, Italy, Germany, and Russia will meet and decide it. She refused all. Why? Not upon the plea, "I am an American, and I must never forget it," but upon the plea that "I am an Austrian and I must never forget that." And Germany refused to interfere upon the plea that Austria was Austria, that Germany was an ally of Austria, and that she could not even consider a proposition of having Austria submit to arbitration a question of honor, as the Kaiser called it. A question of honor—the killing of a grand duke! It amounted to no more than the killing of anybody else anywhere else, except they thought the idea of sovereignty was involved, because he was a member of a reigning house.

Mr. President, I have said upon this floor more than once in my time, I have repeated the language of Thomas Jefferson, my passion is peace, and I am so fond of peace that I will fight for it any day in the world whenever it is necessary or possible. My family has fought for it, and will continue to do so. I am so fond of peace that I do not believe that even my own country has the right to be the judge in its own quarrel, and to avoid peace when peace can be brought about with self-respect.

The Senator has instanced two or three cases in which he says, What would the American people have done under those circumstances if there had been a league of nations?

I will tell you what they would have done. The question in controversy would have been settled, and if it had been settled either way we never would have been worse off. In all the cases that have been cited, my own opinion is that the controversy would have been settled in our favor. But suppose it had not been. Suppose that a Senator owes me $25 and denies it, and goes into court, and a jury takes his word for it, and I lose my $25, and he keeps it in his pocket. Is not that better than having me kill him or having him kill me? Is that not better than to have him come and invade my household and go into the house and take my silver in order to pay himself? I am assuming a case where I believe I was right.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator always is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it not infinitely better that I should lose the $25 than that I should go into his house and take his silver pitcher and his silver cups and his spoons and carry them out and sell them in order to indemnify myself? Is not the Senator lawyer enough to know that it is infinitely better to have cessation of litigation than it is even to have every judgment absolutely correct?

If we can not appeal to the conscience of the civilized world to stop this miserable barbarism of murder and rape and arson, this insanity that we call war, which now and then, under the present system, the best people in the world must resort to, just as we did this time, then where is the faith in God and the hope for enlightenment? What is the use of living? What is the use of pretending to be civilized? If I have got to go out into the world and fight for everything that I want and need and ought to have, and nobody is to be a common judge of what is right and just between me and an antagonist, then what is the use of all this structure that we have built about us—libraries, and schools, and churches, and dreams of poets, and visions of prophets, and the balance of it? Had we not better just go back frankly and butcher one another whenever we feel like it?

Aristotle's last words to Alexander were: "Remember that you are a Greek." I would hate to tell any American that the last word I had to say to him was: "Remember that you are an American." I would infinitely rather say to him: "Remember that you are a human being and a creature of God, and that, whether you are an American or not, you must not set up to be the judge in your own quarrel. You must do justice; and, for fear that you will not, you must try to organize some power that will do it, somewhere—your own power, in which you have half say; fair arbitration."

I do not know what you think about it; I do not know what you will do; but during the whole time I was practicing law I had a positive contempt for any man who refused to leave to the arbitration of his neighbors a quarrel between him and another neighbor. I never knew one of them to be right.

Patriotism, yes; nationalism, yes. They are amongst the most sacred words in the world, because they lead to the extension of our culture—not German kultur, but real, civilized culture. The only reason why the Germans spelled it with a "k" was because Great Britain had all the "c's," as somebody said in a paragraph in Life, I believe, or some other funny paper.

I would have understood the speech the Senator from Idaho has made if some other Senator had made it; but, I declare, it does not sound like him. He is the sort of man upon whom I would place my hands and say: "If there is an American in the world, the product of enlightenment and civilization, that wants to open a new vista for humanity, a new hope for it, and do away with past barbarity, here is the man." You do not imagine you can do away with past barbarity as long as you keep the door open for every nation to settle its own quarrels to suit itself.

"Oh, but it may involve the Monroe doctrine"! Well, suppose it does, and suppose you can supplant the Monroe doctrine with a world Monroe doctrine. What was the Monroe doctrine? It was that no European country should by violence extend its conquest or its system of government upon this continent. Now, suppose we say to all the world that no government whatever shall by conquest extend itself or its system of government anywhere, not only in America but all over the world. Is that not merely an extended Monroe doctrine, much higher in its character and much more enlightened in its scope?

"Somebody might have gotten the Galapagos Islands"! What harm would it have done anybody if they had? It is like the fellow who after the Spanish-American War went around speaking as if we would have been ruined if we had not had the Philippines, when most people never knew where the Philippines were before. The only thing we had ever heard about them was that Manila hats came from there. Then they tried to work us all up to a feeling of strong patriotism that if we did not keep the Philippines somebody else would get them. We had to buy the people at so much a head to subject them to American "kultur"—this time spelled with a "k"—loaded rifles. We would have been just as well off without them. We are just as well off without the Galapagos Islands as if we had them. We do not want them anyhow. What would you do with them if you had them? And what harm could anybody else do if they had them? I mean harm to us. Of course, if Germany had them she could have done a heap of harm to the natives in her barbarous way, as she did in South Africa; but she could not have harmed us.

Mr. President, I absolutely deprecate the doctrine that patriotism or loyalty or nationality demands that my people shall be the sole judge in any controversy arising between it and any other people; and so far as I am concerned, I am willing to accept all the disapproval that may come from people pretending to be more patriotic than I on account of that opinion. I would be ashamed of myself if you and I had a controversy, and I met you and said, "I will be the sole judge of this controversy"; and I would pretty nearly murder you if you told me you would be the sole judge.

Mr. President, there is no difference in the law of ethics and morals when applied to an individual and when applied to a nation. Germany has contended that there was. She has contended that the State was an independent sort of entity, and that you must do things for the State, and you must be the creature of the State, and you must, in a way, worship the State. That never has been the American doctrine. The American doctrine is that the State is the mere instrumentality of the will of the people, and that it is erected by them, and can be thrown down by them whenever they please. They not only have the right to overcome it, but the duty to do it, if the State fails them as an instrumentality. You can not take the position that a state—a government—must be the sole judge of its quarrel, unless you go a step farther—to state worship. The law of morals and of ethics is the same as between individuals. There must be mutual concessions, and there must be common and impartial arbitrament, and as between nations there ought to be the same thing.

Now, gentlemen may call this sentimentalism, they may call it idealism, but it is the highest form of practicalness. Everything else is theoretical except that. Everything else is not only sentimental but narrowly sentimental, except that; and that flag above all other flags on the surface of this earth has hitherto emblemized that idea. We have never carried it anywhere except with the idea in our minds, at any rate, that we were so nearly right that we would have left the question to arbitration if the other side had agreed.

Why, this American Union is a mere illustration, every star on that flag is a mere illustration, of the general principle. New Jersey was ready to go to war with New York; Rhode Island was holding out; North Carolina was saying that it could not come in because of its sovereignty; and yet we came in, and we had peace within our borders and interstate trade, guaranteed by a fair Federal arbitrament that we ourselves had erected. If there is any pattern for a league of nations in the world to-day, it is the American Republic, this Union of indestructible States, still remaining States, but giving up a certain degree of independence in order to accomplish a grander result.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, a resolution came over from the House providing for the payment of the employees of the two Houses on the 21st of December. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I ask unanimous consent that that committee be discharged from its consideration and that the Senate proceed to consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 356) authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1918.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOUTHERN PORTS.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD two very short articles on southern ports as ports of export.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SOUTHERN PORTS.

Secretary McAdoo, in the capacity of General Director of Railroads, has made a visit to the South to meet and confer with railroad officials in that section and incidentally he made a visit to Mobile and Pensacola. He has spoken since of the fine harbors of those Gulf ports, of the advantage that would come of their development, and the foreign trade that might be in that way conducted. Secretary McAdoo will give up control of the railroads January 1. It is to be hoped that his successor, or those on whom the work of railroad direction in the future may devolve, will continue of the same mind and show some zeal in behalf of this needed improvement.

It would be to the advantage of the Nation at large if the Gulf ports should become more important in the country's commerce and do a larger part in both importing and exporting than has appeared to be possible under old conditions.

As long as the railroad systems of the country were controlled mostly by the capital congested in the East, only the lateral lines leading to the Atlantic seaboard were important; all other railroads were mostly for "feeders" or for local convenience. It is not for the best interest of the country at large, certainly not for that of the great Middle West or the trans-Mississippi country, that it should be so. Government management of railroads should take care that there is no discrimination and that the country is served for the general public good and not for local advantage.

But it does not appear that the Government contemplates such a policy despite the interest manifested by Secretary McAdoo in Mobile and Pensacola. A short time ago a statement made of Government plans for new steamship routes included lines from New York only to Latin-American ports; some of them to Mexico and Central America in a comparatively short distance of our great ports. Possibly what Secretary McAdoo said about Mobile and Pensacola gave indication that the former plans may be amended or supplanted, giving greater advantage to the southern ports.

Not only the Gulf ports but the South Atlantic ports, Jacksonville, Savannah, Charleston, and Norfolk, could be used to better advantage than under present conditions. The Jacksonville Times-Union presents the fact that there is great waste of time and transportation in sending South American imports to New York to be reshipped over the continent. Nashville, for example, might get these imports from Jacksonville in a few hours, when much time and considerable freightage is added by sending them to New York and thence to Nashville by rail.

Now that the war is over the traffic through the Panama Canal should be greatly increased and through means of the canal an active trade with the Pacific coast of South America should be developed. This could be most effectively done through the Gulf ports.

Mexico, Central America, and the portion of South America bordering on the Caribbean Sea can also be easiest reached through southern ports.

As it was one time said that "all roads lead to Rome," all the railroads in America have a long time led to New York, or at least to the north Atlantic seaboard, and that fact furnished one reason for the great congestion of wealth and industry there. It would profit the country if there were a wider distribution of railroad termini and Government direction of railroads should lead to that end.

Nashville would profit by the development of the Gulf ports that would place it in the line of the new north and south trade that would be in that way established. Such development would add to the upbuilding of the South in general.

[From the Jacksonville (Fla.) Times-Union.]

SOUTHERN SEAPORTS.

A number of delegates from South American countries will attend the Florida State fair. They come to the fair here instead of going to others, because Florida is nearer to their countries than any other State is and they regard this State as the logical place of departure from the United States of commerce destined for Latin America.

Senator FLETCHER thinks this meeting is one of great importance to the State, and refers to the opportunity that Jacksonville and Florida have of reaching out after Latin-American trade. One would think from its geographical position that our ports would play an important part in the inter-American trade. That is the way it looks from the map.

But as a matter of fact, by the routes of commerce, Jacksonville is not quite as near to Latin America as Chicago or as Grand Rapids, Mich. Everything must go nearly a thousand miles northward before starting southward.

New York has practically monopolized the commerce of the Atlantic coast. She has had the money and the power and it is not strange that she used both for her own interest. But a few weeks ago a statement was made of the plans of the Government for new steamship lines. As announced, the lines were from New York to Buenos Aires, New York to Rio Janeiro, New York to Colombian and Venezuelan ports, New York to various ports of Central America, New York to Vera Cruz, New York to Tampico. Lines from the United States were to reach to all foreign countries, but they were to carry scarcely any American commerce that was not first hauled to New York. In some cases there were ports not one-fifth as far as New York from the foreign country to which the ships were to sail. In some cases the haul to New York was three or four times as long as the haul to the foreign port would have been, but for some reason the Government's plan seemed to contemplate New York as almost the only seaport.

Unquestionably it would be better for this country to have its commerce take the shortest possible route. Southern products shipped through Jacksonville, Savannah, or Charleston would have little more than a thousand miles to go to reach the ports of the northern coast of South America. By New York they would have 3,000 miles to go. By New York no part of the United States is nearer than 2,000 miles to the nearest part of South America. By according to New York a monopoly of our trade we push the South back as far from South America as the Great Lakes are.

We throw away our ability to supply the people of the South American countries over a line not one-third as long as the line to Europe and supply them over a line almost as long as that to Europe. In doing this we throw away our ability to sell cheaper than our rivals in South America because of lower freight charges. We throw away our opportunity to acquire commercial supremacy in the Latin-American markets and place ourselves on terms of equality with our rivals by using a route that is fully as long as the one they have to use. In fact, it is longer by the distance to New York for the products of the greater part of the country.

The man who says the South has not produce to sell sufficient in value to support direct trade with South America does not know what he is talking about. The South has iron and steel and textiles and varied industries. Of course, it does not sell much to South America, but this is because it is by trade routes so much farther from South America than the North and East are. Our factories and foundries have to send their goods from 600 to 1,000 miles to New York, while those of the North Atlantic States have to send theirs only 100, 200, or 300 miles. Shoved in the background as we are we have no opportunity to trade with the nations that we could supply at less cost than any other section or country if we could send our products directly.

Every section of the country would be benefited by drawing off our surplus products toward South America. With the port of New York the only outlet, our products are forced into competition with the products of the northern and eastern factories. If everything is to go to New York, we are as near as the balance of the country to Europe. Our products compete with the products of the North and East in their home markets and in the foreign markets that they are located for supplying because all location is abolished by the exclusive use of the port of New York.

To the extent that the Government is controlling or influencing the shipping business it should endeavor to straighten out trade routes. We are in competition with foreigners and our success will depend on the ability to deliver a good quality of goods as promptly as possible and with as little cost as possible; in other words, our success will depend on the elimination as far as possible of waste in distance and cost of transportation.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 7, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Earle Wilfley, pastor Vermont Avenue Christian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our God, we thank Thee for the multitude of blessings that Thou hast vouchsafed to us, and for this moment this morning we wait in Thy presence to ask for Thy blessing and Thy guidance.

We would remember this morning in our prayer and good wish the Chaplain of this House, who is ill. We pray that in Thy providence the hands that minister to him may minister wisely and to his restoration.

We pray this morning for Thy guidance upon the business of this day, upon each Member of this House, and may the business that shall be transacted and the great plans for our country have Thy divine blessing.

Be with the President upon the high seas, going as he is upon a mission of justice and peace. And to Thee, O God, will we give all the praise, through Jesus. Amen.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having inserted an article on farm land for returned soldiers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an article on land for returned soldiers. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask whose article it is?

Mr. PRICE. It is an article by Mr. George H. Stephenson, president of one of the farm-loan banks, who offers some very practical suggestions, using the Federal farm-loan banking system in connection with this project. It is a very able article, and I think will be interesting to all of us to read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks and observations on the battle front. They are my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD his observations on the battle field. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. LEVER, on account of a death in his family.

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates Mr. LEVER, of South Carolina, to preside that day and wishes that he may be so notified. The gentleman also asks leave of absence for 10 days for his colleague, Mr. LEVER, on account of death in his family. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 9, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. KITCHIN.

The Rev. Earle Wilfley, pastor of Vermont Avenue Christian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou whose holiest and tenderest name to us is Father, before Thy throne this morning we come to make our peace with Thee and to win from Thee Thy guiding blessing. May this be a good day for truth and justice and right, and Thy holy spirit attend us. Make us think aright, plan, purpose, and act aright. Lord, we pray Thy blessing upon our country and all its holy interests, and in this day, fraught with so many possibilities, may we be true to our own better selves, true to our country's interests, and to Thy great cause.

We ask it for Thy name's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, December 7, 1918, was read and approved.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR BROUSSARD.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Sunday, January 26, 1919, be set aside by the House for the purpose of paying tribute to the life, character, and public services of the late Senator R. F. BROUSSARD, of Louisiana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that Sunday, January 26, 1919, be set aside for eulogies on the late Senator BROUSSARD, of Louisiana, Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DAWSON SPRINGS SANATORIUM.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last I called at the office of the Surgeon General of the United States Army—and that was during the argument on the Dawson Springs Hospital—and was there informed that an offer of a hotel at Dawson Springs had been made to the Government for a hospital, and that the offer had been refused. I at that time told the officer who told me that I would not use his name. Afterwards, in conversation with the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr.

REAVIS], I told him of this circumstance, and he asked whether the information might be used. I told him it could, but the name of the officer could not be used, because I had given him my word it would not. Afterwards, in a controversy between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS], a rather embarrassing situation was presented, which I think it proper to clear up. This morning I went to the Surgeon General's office and am at liberty now to give the information. I informed Mr. REAVIS of this fact, and at the Surgeon General's office this morning I was informed that on the 19th day of June last Theodore Troendle, president of the Dawson Hotel Corporation, came to the Surgeon General of the United States and offered him a hotel owned by this corporation at Dawson Springs for the purpose of turning it into a hospital, which offer was considered by the Government, and finally the project was rejected by the Surgeon General. The information relative to this can be obtained from Col. Winford Smith, in the office of the Surgeon General, and he is the gentleman from whom I obtained the information. He has told me that I might use it on the floor of the House. I make this statement out of deference to and in order to relieve the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] of what is a somewhat embarrassing situation.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Did they reject it on account of the location or on account of the building?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I am informed by Col. Smith, my only source of information, that about all the information he has is found in a card found in a card-index system in his office. I have given the facts as they substantially appear on this card. He says he does not remember the conversation accurately, though considerable material is filed in his office relative to the offer.

Mr. FOSTER. So he did not tell you he rejected it on account of the location at Dawson Springs or on account of the building?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. He told me they considered it and rejected it.

Mr. FOSTER. It might be on account of the building?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It might be so.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WOOD of Indiana, indefinitely, on account of illness (at the request of Mr. VESTAL).

To Mr. ALEXANDER, for one day, on account of illness.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13277, the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the District appropriation bill.

Mr. SISSON. And, Mr. Speaker, pending that I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] if he has any suggestion to make as to general debate?

Mr. DAVIS. I have.

Mr. SISSON. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. DAVIS. Thus far I have been approached for at least two hours and a half of general debate.

Mr. SISSON. Does not the gentleman think he might be able to cut that down a little?

Mr. DAVIS. And I am informed that they are still coming; but that is all up to date.

Mr. SISSON. Does not the gentleman believe that we might agree on three hours, an hour and a half on a side? Some of those gentlemen might cut their time.

Mr. DAVIS. I would like to agree on 30 minutes, so far as I am concerned, but the Members on this side of the House seem to want to do some talking, and objection has been made that they have not up to date had an opportunity to examine the printed bill. Hence they requested me to get as much time as possible in which to discuss it, and I am simply an organ through which to express their opinion at this time. I could not agree at this time to anything less than two hours and a half for my part of it.

Mr. SISSON. Would the gentleman agree to three hours, giving the gentleman's side two hours and our side having one hour?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will not agree to that.

Mr. DAVIS. I hardly think I can agree to less than two hours and a half. Perhaps some of the gentlemen will cut their time down. I cut one gentleman down 20 minutes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate do not exceed five hours, two hours and a half to be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] and two hours and a half to be controlled by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to five hours, two and a half hours to be controlled by himself and two and a half hours by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13277, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13277, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13277) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a brief statement. Gentlemen of the committee, I do not know that I can add anything to what you will find in the report. The clerk has made quite a clear report of what the bill contains. In fact, I have always believed that when the reports are accurate they frequently shorten the debate. Every Member of the House then, by reading the report, is able to determine what the changes are.

This bill apparently carries less money than has heretofore been carried, but as a matter of fact it does not do so. If the committee will give me its attention, I want to explain to you how it is that the bill apparently carries a million dollars less than last year and something over a million dollars less than has been estimated for by the commissioners. In the first place, we appropriated last year $910,000 for public-school buildings, none of which has been expended. We appropriated in round figures something like a million dollars for streets. A good portion of that was for the repair of streets, and quite a good deal of that money has been expended, but none of the money to be expended for streets as original paving or to open up new streets, or, rather, to pave new streets where no pavement has been heretofore, has been used at all.

Now, your committee reappropriated all of the money for school buildings. As a matter of fact, that is not absolutely necessary, because under the law where the contracts are made they continue until completed. But in reference to streets we reappropriated all the money carried that is unexpended, so that for street purposes we shall have more money expended during the balance of this fiscal year and during the next fiscal year than has ever been expended in one year before in the city of Washington for streets.

I think that explanation is proper, because the streets have not been in good condition, first, because of the excessively heavy traffic. Heavy Army trucks have damaged the streets quite a good deal and the excessive use of the streets by traffic has caused a deterioration of the streets of Washington. No improvements could be made, because the District Commissioners could not get the necessary labor. The demand for labor in this market has been greater than ever before, and when the commissioners could get labor at all the cost was more than twice what it was before. Therefore as to building new streets and paving streets never paved before and tearing up the old streets which are badly worn, the commissioners did not do any of that work. The only thing they have tried to do was to keep in reasonable repair the streets of Washington so that they might be used, so that, as a matter of fact, you may add over $1,500,000 to the amount carried in the bill in order to get an accurate idea of what will be expended on streets during the year which this bill covers.

Now, I want also to call your attention to the fact that a statement is made on page 2 of the report giving the surplus of the District of Columbia revenues on June 30, 1918. The surplus is $3,280,685.46, to which is to be added the surplus for this year, so that on June 30, 1919, there will be a surplus of $5,429,229.57. I want to call your attention particularly to this, because it involves the first item that we have placed in this bill. Now, from the figures I have named you will have to deduct whatever may be carried in a deficiency bill. As I understand, there will probably be some deficiency, running up, it may be, to $200,000; but it is not at all probable that the deficiencies asked for will absorb the $429,000 referred to. Therefore you will have a surplus in the District treasury of $5,000,000 on that date.

Now, the taxation in the District of Columbia, upon a comparison of taxes in other cities, is very much less than the taxes paid in other cities. Take an amount of money invested in property in the city of Washington and the assessments placed upon that property and you will find that the rate is less than that in any city in the country of this size. All the cities throughout the United States, in addition to paying their municipal expenses proper—the only expenses that the District of Columbia pays—pay a State and county tax. Therefore, if you were to add to the city taxation in the various cities throughout the country the State and county taxes, you would find that in most cases they are more than double what the people of the District of Columbia pay.

Now, the proposition which we put in this bill is one which has repeatedly passed the House by overwhelming majorities. Every time it has been voted on in the House in the last number of years it has carried by about two votes to one. The proposition is, briefly, a perfectly simple one as carried in the bill. This proposition was prepared first by the gentleman who is now the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. SHERLEY]. That matter was taken up by the Committee on Appropriations, and the then chairman requested the present chairman to put into concrete form what the committee then agreed upon. So the proposition is not a new one. Now, some have the idea that we are endeavoring to place upon the District of Columbia a burden which she ought not to bear. I do not believe it is in the heart of a single Member of Congress to do that; but we have reached the point where we prophesied some years ago we would reach, although we reached it a little earlier than was prophesied, when, in this bill as coming from the commissioners, there will be a request of the proper committee to reduce the rate of taxation in the District of Columbia, because it is bringing in more money than the District of Columbia needs plus the amount that is paid out of the Federal Treasury. It is well now to look just a moment into the history of this matter. It has been gone into repeatedly, but in order to refresh your memory it is well enough to go into it. For quite a while they discussed the present organic act, so called. It was under the control of Mr. Blackburn, who was then a Member of the House, afterwards a distinguished Senator from the State of Kentucky. They then worked out the present system, with some modifications since made, of the Federal Treasury responding for 50 per cent of the expenses of the District. But you must take into consideration the fact that at that time when it was done there were less than 100,000 people in the District of Columbia, and under the so-called local government at that time the indebtedness of the District of Columbia was over $40,000,000. Therefore, a city of that size could not shoulder the burden of that indebtedness and in addition keep up the city as it ought to be kept up as a capital city.

The bonds of the District were then considerably below par, and there was an effort being made to refund the bonds, but no purchasers could be had. Then it was that Congress took the matter up, went carefully into it, and as a gratuity to the District of Columbia undertook to refund in that organic act the bonds at 3.65, and they are what are now known as the 3.65 bonds. That bonded indebtedness has been paid off until it is now only about $3,000,000, in round figures. We are paying $900,000 a year on the bonds, so, I believe, in 1922 all these bonds will have been paid. The Federal Treasury has responded to 50 per cent of that indebtedness, which the Federal Government had nothing to do with creating. Not only that but the Federal Treasury has responded to the District for one-half of all the interest on these bonds during all these years. Not only that, the District gets a certain number of courts, and gets a certain amount of assistance from the Federal Treasury, where the activities are limited absolutely to the District of Columbia and her affairs but paid for wholly out of the Federal Treasury. But that perhaps is not different from the States, because you have the marshals and the Federal courts in the States. So, if anything is said about the relations of the States to the District of Columbia our judgment, so far as the local taxes are concerned, should be identical with that of the States with reference to the private activities in the District of Columbia.

Now, it has been contended, and justly so as to the maintenance of the streets, that when L'Enfant laid out the streets of the Capital City he made those streets immensely wider and put in numbers of circles and numbers of points of land, necessitating sidewalks and streets, which no city except Washington has to respond to. But we have recognized that fact, because the Federal Government has taken over nearly all these points of land. It will be only a few years when all these so-called points will be taken over and will be cared for out of the Federal Treasury.

In addition to that all of the sidewalks around most of the public buildings of the Federal Government are paid for by the Federal Government. We maintain out of our Treasury the Capitol Grounds, all the parkings and streets in the Capitol Grounds. And when you take the benefits that the citizens of the District of Columbia get out of the location of the Federal Government here, you will find that they are greater than the benefits of any other people in the world, because they have a pay roll which is not affected by the crop conditions of the country, not affected by business panics, not affected by epidemics, because every salary is paid promptly every 15 days in the District of Columbia, and the average salaries paid to the employees of the Federal Government are certainly, in time of peace, greater than the average salaries paid anywhere else in the country.

Now, to show the benefit that they get from the Treasury I have mentioned these things, but that would be true wherever the Capital might be located, and I do not begrudge these people that benefit. But what the subcommittee and practically the full committee have asked for repeatedly is not that the people of this District should give up any benefits that accrue to them by virtue of the location of the Capital here, but that every taxpayer in the District of Columbia shall pay a reasonable tax upon his property, reasonably assessed, and that that shall end the contribution of the taxpayer to the expenses of the District of Columbia, and that whatever amount Congress desires to appropriate for the beautification of the National Capital shall then be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. That being true, under this bill the Federal Government will contribute nearly $4,000,000 to the support of the District of Columbia, which I think is really more than its share, but I do not begrudge that. I call your attention to the fact that in the District of Columbia the taxpayers do not pay on a rate of taxation like that on which the people of the States pay, but this does not disturb that rate of taxation. This does not disturb the property valuation in the District of Columbia. During the next current year, and until legislation shall change it, the rate of taxation and the rule of assesment will be identically the same as now, and unless a man's property is increased in amount, no resident of the District of Columbia will pay a cent more next year under this bill than he pays now. It does not increase his taxes one dollar.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Along that line I want to know what the rate is here in the District of Columbia as compared with other tax rates?

Mr. SISSON. Of course it varies in the different States; but in the District of Columbia a tax of 1½ per cent is fixed upon a two-thirds valuation. That is to say, the 1 per cent rate is fixed on real property and upon what they call visible personal property; that is, they pay 1 per cent on a full valuation and 1½ per cent on a two-thirds valuation.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. What is the tax on mortgages, bonds, stocks, and so forth?

Mr. SISSON. Choses in action, three-tenths of 1 per cent.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. It is very much lower than in the States?

Mr. SISSON. Very much lower. In the States choses in action and solvent accounts, invisible personal property, as it is designated in this bill, have to pay a tax on a full valuation in most States. But in the District of Columbia they only pay one-third of 1 per cent. Now, I will say to the gentleman from Maryland that there are no such taxes in Baltimore. The taxes there are a little more in the city than they are here, and in addition they pay a State and county tax. A resident of the city of Baltimore pays on a dollar invested in Baltimore twice as much as they pay in this city.

Mr. LINTHICUM. We pay 15 mills as a city tax and then the State and county tax in addition.

Mr. SISSON. Baltimore and the county are practically the same.

Mr. LINTHICUM. No; Baltimore and St. Louis are the only cities that have an absolutely distinct corporation.

Mr. SISSON. But you do not have a county separate from the city; the city takes it all.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Absolutely.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. In addition to what the gentleman has said, we have, notwithstanding the lowest rate of taxation in the country, perhaps the largest surplus of any other city in the country.

Mr. SISSON. I do not know of a city that has as much surplus as they have in the city of Washington. We have so much, and it is growing so rapidly that, notwithstanding we have the lowest taxation of any city in the United States, notwithstanding the fact that by virtue of the half that we have contributed from the Federal Treasury that surplus is growing so rapidly that they are here now asking the Congress to reduce that low rate of taxation.

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly there is no excuse for any dereliction in the performance of the duties that the District is required to keep up the streets.

Mr. SISSON. No; nothing in the world.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman allow me to call attention to this fact, which I think can be proven by any Member of the House? I do not think there ever was a time, not since I have been in the city of Washington, when the streets were as dirty or when they were so dangerous as they are now. On yesterday—Sunday—with the streets full going up and down the Avenue, I drove from one end to the other, and I venture to say that there is not a principal street in any city of any size in the United States that was as dirty as Pennsylvania Avenue was on yesterday. It is a disgrace to the city of Washington, and it is a disgrace to the country.

And on every day, almost, from 5 o'clock until 7 o'clock it is unsafe for women or children to be on the streets of Washington because of the fact that almost everyone seems to be riding or driving with an automobile and driving at an excessive rate of speed, violating every day on every street in hundreds and thousands of instances the ordinances of the city. It certainly seems to me that these conditions ought to be remedied.

Mr. SISSON. I do not suppose the gentleman heard the statement which I made as to the streets in my opening remarks. I referred to the fact that we appropriated last year every dollar asked for streets. We did not appropriate for opening up out in the suburbs for certain real estate activities some of the streets asked for, but every dollar for laying new pavements where the old was worn out, every dollar asked for resurfacing all streets, laying new pavements, was granted. The statement is made by the commissioners, and we all know it to be true, that it was physically impossible to get labor.

Not only that, but you could not get the War Board to release the material, the raw material, and therefore none of the appropriation for new pavement has been expended. A great deal of the last year's appropriation bill is carried over and carried in this bill as a reappropriation. Therefore having given in this bill every dollar asked for by the commissioners, we reappropriate all the money carried in last year's bill not expended, all carried over because no new streets were laid. A great deal of resurfacing is carried over, and we also give them every dollar for resurfacing at this time. And by the way, the District Commissioners say that this is all that they can spend. We give them all they can spend in one year for streets.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLE. Does the lack of labor extend to lack of policemen in checking the speed of automobiles?

Mr. SISSON. There has been a time when they had much difficulty in getting policemen because many were taken into the Army and Navy and into various war activities. The result was that when they tried to get men of proper physical strength and proper physical condition they were unable to do so. There have been hundreds of places vacant, and they will tell any of you that if you will bring a man they will be liberal of examination and would take him. Maj. Pullman says he has taken a number of policemen that he would not have taken in peace times. They have requested that a certain number of soldiers be taken to police the city and a certain number have been detailed.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Has the full amount asked to keep the streets clean been given?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; every dollar. By the way, you know they had a strike in that class of labor of short duration, for cleaning the streets, and it has been very difficult to get sufficient labor to clean the streets of the District because the demand was so great that the District Commissioners, although they paid twice as much a day as they did formerly, could not get them. And that is one reason that that appropriation was not sufficient perhaps to carry on the street cleaning, and I think there is going to be a deficiency in that particular, but this bill does not cover deficiencies, of course. But the streets referred to a moment ago by my friend from Iowa, if they have not been as clean as they ought to be, it has been because it cost twice as much to get the labor, and I am afraid that we are getting about half as much labor out of each laborer.

Mr. DENISON. Does the gentleman know what pay these men now get for cleaning the streets?

Mr. SISSON. They pay, I think, about $3.20 to $3.40 for eight hours.

Mr. DENISON. When that question came up before the Committee on Labor, of which I was a member in the last session of Congress, it was shown that a great many of these men were working for $60 a month.

Mr. SISSON. Not for that class of labor, because they are paid on a per diem basis. They get from $1.60 as I recall—and I hope the gentleman will not bind me to the absolute figures, and members of the subcommittee will correct me—I think at that time they got from $1.60 to $1.70 a day, but their wages have been practically doubled, and these $60 kind were not the street-cleaning men.

Mr. WHEELER. If the gentleman will yield, on page 25 the appropriation for garbage is $621,000. That is a considerable increase over the last appropriation by about $200,000.

Mr. SISSON. I will show that in a moment. That is a matter of bookkeeping. It really costs less to take care of the garbage.

Mr. WHEELER. It seems to be an increase over the appropriation for last year.

Mr. SISSON. It cost about $75,000 to $80,000 the preceding year to take care of the garbage. We will get it this year for about $135,000 or $140,000. We take over the garbage plant, and this apparent increase is a bookkeeping matter. I want to call attention also to the fact that in this bill we increase the salaries of the District Commissioners from $5,000 to $6,000. They did not ask for any increase for the last two or three years. Part of that time, I do not know that the present commissioners have ever asked for an increase, but we looked this matter up and found that the salaries of the District Commissioners were fixed in 1878, when they had about 60,000 or 70,000 people in the District of Columbia. Since that time their duties have increased quadruple, and I do not know of any three gentlemen in Washington who have more arduous duties and more hard work than these District Commissioners, and while some members of the committee did not think perhaps we had increased them enough, we finally unanimously agreed to increase their salaries from $5,000 to $6,000 a year. Now, in addition to their duties as commissioners, they are a utility commission, too, and during the last three or four years they have had an enormous amount of work to do as a utility commission in valuing plants under that act which we passed by which we caused the valuation of railroads throughout the country.

Mr. WHEELER. Has there been any decrease in salaries in this bill, as, for instance, police drivers and patrolmen; did not they receive $120 more than what this bill provides?

Mr. SISSON. I will state when we get to that proposition. There are no decreases in salaries.

Mr. WHEELER. According to this bill, there must be decreases.

Mr. SISSON. No; not in salaries. We have not put the $120 in. I will explain that. Well, I had just as well get at it now. I want the committee to understand the situation which we found ourselves in. All the departments of the Government, including the District of Columbia, by executive order were required to submit estimates for increase in salaries to the Executive and through the Executive to come in one budget to the House. Now, as a matter of fact, that can not be done under the law, and the chairmen of the various committees, after consultation with the members of various subcommittees, agreed that it would perhaps not be fair to the Government at that time to undertake to fix the basic salary, and therefore we will endeavor to take care of any injustice that might be done by the so-called low salaries and take it up in a separate resolution as we did before the question of increase for the current year. That is how we got the $120, not in the bill, but in a separate resolution. So that matter has not been considered by your committee.

Mr. LITTLE. Have we lost any commissioners by reason of the size of the salaries or the character of the work?

Mr. SISSON. No; we have lost none of the commissioners. I do not think that either one of the commissioners would resign, if the gentleman wants to put it that way, on that account.

Mr. LITTLE. If the gentleman from Mississippi will permit, the salary is almost as large as that of a Member of Congress, and are not Members of Congress at much greater expense than these residents are?

Mr. SISSON. I do not think that they are.

Mr. LITTLE. Where does the gentleman board?

Mr. SISSON. It is a question of economy. If we economize, we do not spend as much. The gentleman and myself are economical, and we get along with our salaries and we do not spend carelessly, but still we get $7,500.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman is talking for himself in saying how well we get along on the salary in this town at this time.

Mr. SISSON. And in addition to the $7,500 we get the perquisites, such as mileage, stationery account, and so forth.

Mr. LITTLE. If the gentleman will permit, we are not all like him. He has only 4,000 votes cast, whereas in our district we have 85,000 and——

Mr. SISSON. I am afraid if we had to put the salaries so as to enable men to pay their campaign expenses that we would have to increase——

Mr. LITTLE. We spend a great deal of money in many ways besides campaigns. The gentleman has only 4,000 votes cast in his district, and he is not troubled very much with correspondence from people who do not take enough interest in public questions to vote. Eighty-five thousand people who vote and take an active interest in public affairs devolve on a Member twenty times as much correspondence and twenty times as great responsibilities as fall to one who is sent here by only 4,000.

Mr. SISSON. As a matter of fact, that is the vote that is cast in the general election. Come down to the primaries and I will show you a different story.

Now, all the other increases in salary have been for some minor places. For instance, we increased the salary of some nurses who were getting $1,000. Graduate nurses get $1,200 throughout the country, and your committee increased the salary of nurses here to that amount.

Now, just a word as to public schools. We gave last year every school-teacher asked for. We also gave them portable buildings, which are being constructed—and I presume a great many have been already constructed—to take care of the overflow of children. Now, we could not complete the school buildings in two or three years necessary to take care of the children. They could not get the material and could not get the labor. Therefore the Congress last year authorized the construction of portable buildings. This year in order to take care of the surplus children we have increased that appropriation $87,000 to erect portable buildings.

Mr. LINTHICUM. How much are you paying the school-teachers?

Mr. SISSON. We are paying the school-teachers now more than is paid in any city in the United States, even including Boston, which pays the highest salaries for teachers of any city in the United States.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I know; but they are not getting sufficient in most of the cities of the country, and I wanted to know how much they get here.

Mr. SISSON. The District of Columbia can not cure all the ills outside of the District.

Mr. LINTHICUM. With the great surplus you have on hand and the taxes so light, I was wondering why you did not pay your school-teachers sufficient salary.

Mr. SISSON. I will tell you. In the first place, we have the longevity law, which fixes it, and the Appropriation Committee undertook at one time to go into that matter, but it is one of the most difficult of all the tasks one could undertake to figure out the longevity law and exactly where you are at. Because under the longevity provision the teachers teaching five years have a certain amount added to their salary, and then when they go from a certain class to another, from A to B, or from B to A—I get it confused in my mind—where the base pay is higher than the base pay where they have been teaching five years, when they go up to that base pay they do not give up the longevity. If the original base pay plus the longevity is more than the base pay in the succeeding higher grade, the teachers get less. So you can not tell by looking at this bill or by looking at the longevity law what the school-teachers in the city of Washington are actually getting.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Who does know?

Mr. SISSON. It is figured out by the auditor and by the clerk of the board of education, who keeps the teachers' entire record. But you will find in this bill an item of something like $400,000 to care for longevity pay. So you can add $400,000 to what you see in the bill for teachers' salaries and see what they are actually getting.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman find out exactly the amount paid for teachers' salaries? I would like to know.

Mr. SISSON. That is quite a task.

Mr. LINTHICUM. There must be some base salary.

Mr. SISSON. If you go back to the base law, $720 is the lowest basic salary now paid in the District of Columbia. Then you can add to that whatever the longevity pay is. Up until your present subcommittee took the whole matter in hand some of the salaries of the minor teachers were as low as $500, and a great many $600. We have increased it so that the base pay is $720. But that does not tell the story. Because they begin on $720, plus the $120 we gave them, and that was taken into consideration last year, and it makes the lowest salary $840 for nine months' work.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Seventy dollars a month?

Mr. SISSON. You are taking 12 months. The gentleman must take into consideration the fact that that is the base pay of the teacher and does not include all the other. I agree with the gentleman that throughout the United States the teachers' salaries are very small, but the people back in the States—the people in your State—have not seen fit to increase their salaries as radically as they have been increased here.

Mr. LINTHICUM. We have increased our salaries very largely, but we have not this great surplus and this living under the eye of Uncle Sam that you have here.

Mr. SISSON. There is no great surplus, as the gentleman knows, in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I mean to the credit of the District of Columbia. There is over $5,000,000, is there not?

Mr. SISSON. As a matter of fact, that is a bookkeeping account, and the lawyers differ as to whether or not that is a claim that the District of Columbia may make against the Federal Treasury. Some lawyers claim that is collected and paid into the Treasury the same as the other and becomes a part of the funds of the Treasury. I am not expressing an opinion about it. I have some definite opinions, but do not care to encumber the RECORD about it, but that money paid into the Treasury does not represent the ability of the Federal Treasury to respond. And when I pay out the money of the Federal Treasury to the officials and to the employees of the Government, just as it is paid out to pay the employees in the city of Baltimore, I want it understood that the Federal Treasury ought not to bid against Baltimore and ought not to bid against all the communities throughout the United States, when you are bidding with their money. We have got to be fair; we have got to be just to the Treasury, and at the same time fair and just with the employees and with the school-teachers.

Now, I want to call your attention also to a provision that the committee put into the bill enabling the District of Columbia to avail itself of any property which the Government of the United States bought during the war which would become useless; for instance, typewriters, trucks, automobiles, where automobiles are used in the District of Columbia—in the fire department and in the water department—and the typewriters that may be used. We put in a provision here which authorizes the officials of the District government to buy from the Federal Government at a price not to exceed the price paid by the Government for these things, and, if they have been used, to pay not more than a reasonable price, taking into consideration their use. In that way we felt that the District of Columbia might get those things which it needs and which it has to buy very much more cheaply, and therefore when that is done they do not have to go into the open market or let bids for those matters, and they are not restricted by the regulations when they buy actually from the Government.

Then we also put a provision in the bill to the effect that the board of education should be selected by the District Commissioners. For many years the board of education has been selected by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. Every member of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia says that he ought not to be burdened with that job. Every one of them says that. And, by the way, a gentleman formerly a Member of this House, and at one time one of the distinguished members of that court, makes a very strong argument as to why it should not be done. But it goes further than the fact that they never pay any attention to the schools. They have no way of going into the schools and no control of it except the mere selection of the board of education, and they would forget it but for the fact that some member of the school board calls their attention to it; and, not having given the school system any study and not knowing much about it, they must depend upon the recommendations made by the District Commissioners. With the exception of the school board, all the other officials are selected by the District Commissioners.

This item was put in the bill once before and went out in the Senate, but at that time there was an organized fight made against it by the teachers of the District of Columbia. I understand now, however, that many members of the board of education openly express themselves as saying that the schools of the District would fare infinitely better if the appointing power of the board of education was the power that came before the congressional committee and made the statements with reference to the schools and looked after the financial statements, because the District Commissioners and the District officials have to look after all the financial statements of the schools and audit the accounts and everything of that sort. It is a peculiar history to get into as to why it was that the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia made the appointments. Perhaps it is better at this time not to go into that history. But we believe that that is proper, and we believe that almost all of the business activities of the District of Columbia believe that it is wise, so that your committee puts that in.

We also amended the law in reference to the construction of bridges across railroads so as to include the building of a bridge across the canal. Some of the bridges are necessary now to be built across the canal, and there is some doubt as to the authority to assess the canal company with the actual cost of the bridges across their physical property. I wanted to call your attention to that because that is a matter of legislation.

We also put a little amendment into the bill authorizing the District Commissioners to prescribe a schedule of fees for the examination of buildings, and so forth, but especially in reference to the inspection of elevators. There was some question raised as to the right to charge for the inspection of an elevator after it was installed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. In a moment. Most of the hotels and business houses that have had elevators to inspect have gone on and paid the fees without question, but some question has been raised as to the right to charge them anything except for the first installation inspection. We all know that we want the elevators inspected at stated intervals, and the District Commissioners think they should be examined at least once in a quarter, and they want to charge, as they have heretofore been doing, the cost of actual inspection, and we have given them authority. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. Referring to the appointment of the board of education, I understood the gentleman to say that he did not care to go into the reasons why the power to select them was conferred upon the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. Now, if you are going to make a change, I should think we ought to know why.

Mr. SISSON. It is a good long history to tell you.

Mr. WALSH. I do not mean any long history, but could not the gentleman state it briefly?

Mr. SISSON. As a matter of fact, they once had a condition here where all the people of the District of Columbia voted, and they had what they called a "feather-duster legislature." That was prior to the time when the Federal Government took over the government of the District of Columbia. Then they thought that local politics entered into it entirely too much. Therefore they put the burden upon the supreme court judges simply of selecting the board of education.

Mr. WALSH. It is a relic of the old times?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; it is a relic of old times.

Now, I believe, gentlemen, that that about concludes the statement that I desired to make.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. You were speaking of the changes you recommended in the laws in certain matters. Do you not think there should be some change in reference to the automobile laws and regulations that you passed, by which you make every Marylander coming into town procure a license and pay the amount that the citizen in the District pays?

Mr. SISSON. Does not the citizen of the State of Maryland pay the same as in the District?

Mr. LINTHICUM. He does, and the State of Maryland has provided $24,000,000 worth of roads for the comfort of the people.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman must know that it is not within the province of this body to change that law, and only in cases where, in consultation with the other committee and matters that intimately affect appropriations, has this committee undertaken to change the law.

Mr. LINTHICUM. This does affect the revenues of the District.

Mr. SISSON. Well, we are collecting the same revenues now from the issuance of automobile licenses as heretofore, but the license is very small in the District of Columbia as compared with other States.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Do I understand the gentleman to state that there was a time when the people voted here and that there was a legislature of some kind? Will the gentleman state when that was?

Mr. SISSON. The act of 1878 took over the government of the District. That was when that went into effect. Prior to that time they had a legislature. That is not a very inviting bit of the history of the District of Columbia. That was during the régime of Gov. Shepherd. Whether Gov. Shepherd was a good man or a bad man I do not know. There are two sides to that. There was quite a controversy about that.

When we had that government here the District of Columbia affairs got in very bad shape. They ran it $40,000,000 into debt, the bonds were sold very much below par; indeed the time was pretty near at hand when they would have to refund some of these bonds, and there was no sale for them. At that time Blackburn in the House and Blaine in the Senate are the names that I find intimately connected with this matter. They took it up and had this organic act passed, I think in 1878, and then that act was amended several times immediately after that. Prior to that time they had a vote in the District of Columbia, and the citizens of the District voted for the legislature of the District of Columbia, and that legislature, with a governor, controlled the city very much as a State is controlled.

Mr. DENISON. But prior to that law, briefly, what was the plan of taxation here? Did the Federal Government pay any part of it?

Mr. SISSON. No; nothing at all; not a dollar.

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend allow me just a word?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman speaks of Gov. Shepherd and the debt of the District. I came here in the Forty-third Congress, and that was the time that Gov. Shepherd went out, as I recall. He went out seemingly under a cloud, but there was investigation after investigation, and they resulted in unanimous reports justifying Gov. Shepherd. Then came the legislation for the half-and-half proposition. Gov. Shepherd went to Mexico a bankrupt, lived down there for many years, and finally came back and had a great reception. He laid the foundation upon which was built the present city of Washington. Of course, those men are all dead and gone. When Shepherd became governor of this District Washington had the dry rot, and he inaugurated a new era, possibly with a waste of money here and there, and there was the devil to pay and no pitch hot, but finally, by the action of the people and with their approval, there was erected in honor of Gov. Shepherd the bronze statue down on Pennsylvania Avenue, which shows him standing there in his cutaway coat, and I have no doubt that he is entitled to much of the credit for the greater Washington of to-day and of the future.

Mr. SISSON. I am not endeavoring to take from Gov. Shepherd any of the credit that may be due him. I simply stated that there was quite a controversy. A great many people contended that Gov. Shepherd was a great benefactor to the District and a great many people contended otherwise. But there is this to be said about Gov. Shepherd: You know L'Enfant made the plan for the city of Washington. As I understand it, George Washington employed L'Enfant, a great architect and landscape gardener, and he laid off the District with an eye to its defense. These circles were intended to be the site of forts, and if you will study the map of the District you will find that by putting cannon in these circles they command every street, and you can not get out of a street into an avenue without coming under the range of the cannon. In that way he proposed to defend the Capitol and the White House from any invasion. But up until Shepherd's time, as I understand it, nothing had been done toward carrying out the L'Enfant plans, and Washington was growing up very much like Topsy.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think also history tells us that L'Enfant made the little squares and circles with radiating avenues to meet such emergencies as confronted the French Government during the French Revolution.

Mr. SISSON. During the French Revolution; yes, for the purpose of defending the city from a mob.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. L'Enfant actually saw what happened over there in Paris at that time, he being there at the time of the French Revolution.

Mr. SISSON. Now, gentlemen of the committee, I have said all that I desire to say, because all other matters are simply matters of detail. They are mentioned in the report, and I want to congratulate the clerk of the committee, Mr. Shields, on the very splendid report he has gotten out, because Members may be assured of being informed what we have done, if they will read that report.

I want to say in conclusion that I believe it to be the duty of every Member of Congress now to help unscramble the eggs. It is a very easy matter to scramble eggs, but a very hard matter to unscramble them. Now, the task that lies immediately before us is to help the War Department and Navy Department cut off useless expenditures, and cut off those activities of the Government that ought not to be continued since the war is at an end. That is quite a task. There are going to be many people who will want to continue in their present employments. There will be many efforts made to justify their employment, and Congress desires to cut, but it ought to cut with the skill of the surgeon. We ought not to cut off necessary activities, but we ought to cut off wisely every unnecessary activity of the Government, and we must get back into our peaceful lines. We have surrendered into the hands of the Executive and the War and Navy Departments powers unheard of, and so far as I am individually concerned I want to get back to the peace times, if possible to get back where we were, and if any changes are necessary let them be made deliberately in time of peace and not under the spur of war. [Applause.]

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. SISSON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DENISON. I should like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he knows what is going to be done with these buildings and with this great, high smokestack down here on the Plaza between the Capitol and the Union Station? They are still working on those buildings. Can the gentleman give the House any information about them?

Mr. SISSON. I understand that the work has been abandoned there, except where a building was about completed. The gentleman asks me what they are going to do with them. I do not know. I have no idea what they are going to do with them. They might turn them over to the House Members of Congress at a small rental if they desire to do so. [Laughter.] They might also use those buildings down on the Plaza for the purpose of bringing down somewhat the rents and hotel rates which we are all paying here. At any rate, the buildings are there, and I can not tell you what they are going to use them for. The committee are not considering all of these matters, and I hope the Appropriations Committee, after they have gone carefully into the facts, will be able to help the gentleman find something to do with them. We are ready to take any suggestion from the gentleman from Illinois as to what ought to be done with them.

Mr. DENISON. I would be glad to give them at a later date, but I am interested in the gentleman's views on any question. He has mentioned about unscrambling the eggs. Can the gentleman give us his idea as to what should be done with the railroads?

Mr. SISSON. I do not desire to go into the proposition at this time, although I have some definite and positive views myself on the question. That has nothing to do with this bill. At the proper time I will be glad to deliver myself upon that subject.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. As long as the gentleman has given us his ideas upon some things, does not the gentleman think that something ought to be done with reference to the Saulsbury resolution by which so many people, not war workers, have taken advantage of? I know a number of cases where people not connected with war work have taken advantage of that resolution.

Mr. SISSON. I will say by way of explanation as to the reason I mentioned it at all is because every one of the war activities has been cut out of this bill. We have not left one, but have cut the bill down to a peace basis. I thank gentlemen for their attention. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I have thought it right at this time to break my rule to speak only on the bill before the House. It seems to me at this time that it is my duty to bring before the House a dispassionate review of the question of a league of nations regarded simply in the light of the history of such a league.

When I say league of nations, Mr. Chairman, I desire not to be misunderstood. The league that has been proposed and urged lately is a definite thing, a general league of all nations for mutual defense, with the understanding that armament should be reduced, that trade conditions given by each to the other should be equal, and that there should be some sort of a general council meeting regularly and able to deal with the affairs of nations. Such a league is proposed in the message of the President of the United States of January 8 last. It is proposed definitely and it should not be confused with an entirely different sort of league of a few nations—that is to say, what is generally termed as an alliance. It has been said by President Taft in to-day's papers that he favors such an alliance or league between England, France, Italy, Japan, and America, as the five great powers, for the purpose of the settlement of conditions of peace. Such an alliance at the peace table is necessary. But I hope with Washington, in his Farewell Address, that we shall steer clear of permanent alliances anywhere, and, as he says, that temporary alliances will serve the purpose. Such a temporary alliance or understanding by which Japan and the United States back up the countries really interested in settling a peace in Europe upon proper terms will be supported by the people of the United States.

The President's address was made in January, before Russia was under the bolsheviki; before it could be said, as it is in the paper that came out this noon, that Russian red leaders are to head the Berlin extremists; before Austria had broken down so that it no longer can make any treaty; before questions of boundaries had come up which will disturb all Europe unless they are settled. Nations of central Europe are to be established, taking them away from Germany and Austria and from Russia wherever they consist of people who were not Germans or friendly to them, so as to make the map of Europe, as I hold it in my hand, almost a Chinese puzzle, with Finland, Livonia, Lithuania, Poland, Czecho-Slovaks, Greater Roumania, Ukrania, Jugo-Slovaks, Greater Bulgaria, and Roumania, all new nations in prospect, that have no connection with one another, no legislatures, no laws, and no government, and for whom governments must be established. These nations, proposed in the President's address of which I have spoken, can not be regarded now as realities who can join a league.

The great crisis is upon us by which the allies, as the leading nations, must settle the boundaries of government as best they can for these new nations and leave their fate to be taken care of by a wise Providence hereafter.

That address says that Germany is to be a part of the scheme for a league of nations. What, when the German Armies have gone home intact to be disbanded, but with an organization that can be called together within three days while we have to take nearly as many years to get overseas—are we to agree that all nations shall now disband? The allies must reserve power until the settlement of peace be made. We will talk about that afterwards.

When we tell Germany to cough up $40,000,000,000, or some sum of that sort, are we to leave her power by her army to say whether she will or not comply with this righteous demand to restore countries that have been wrongfully despoiled, or are we to see that the indemnity is paid, as Germany did with France in 1871, by keeping the Provinces of France until it was done?

In our newspapers to-day our great ex-President says that the only league now can be a small league of great nations, and that when a small league has restored peace it will expand into a great league. Do not let us confuse the two. The temporary league to do justice now is necessary. The general league of nations to abandon our self-government and our arms and ammunition, Navy, and diplomacy to treaty and an international council is another question. We desire to study in the light of experience whether this is something we ought to wish or to go for. One thing is perfectly certain. No matter what is to be in the future we know that in the past the central powers have been dangerous because of their ability to unite countries all around them together into a great moving military force, and no league that admits Germany to membership can be established which does not also carefully provide that she shall not be able to use the policy of peaceful penetration by her banks, her merchants, her men, her officers into Russia and Turkey and the whole country of the east, so as to get a much larger army than she had in the last war and to be able to throttle and take over the whole world. It is important that there shall not be perfect equality among nations in their trade conditions as long as that threat remains.

But I direct attention now only to the project of a general league of nations, which is admitted to be far in the future by our ex-President, although it has not been so admitted by the President of the United States. Conditions will make it certain to him that a general equal league of nations is not possible now, impossible at the present moment.

Therefore I am considering the future possibility of such a general permanent alliance only in the light of the past. The form of such an association is defined in the President's address. It can be found and has been tried in an earlier league. In the fourteenth point it is defined as follows:

A general association of nations must be formed under specific covenants for the purpose of affording mutual guarantees of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small States alike.

Such an association would begin by a declaration somewhat as was contained in the league of American States known as the Confederation, as follows: That the member States of the league "severally enter into a firm league of friendship with each other for their common defense, the security of their liberties, and their mutual and general welfare, binding themselves to assist each other against all force offered to or attacks made upon them or any of them." That is the essence of a league of peace. It would in terms protect each member against any other State in or out of the league.

The President in his address says also that in any such league trade conditions should be equal among the members. The words were:

The removal, so far as possible, of all economic barriers and the establishment of an equality of trade conditions among all the nations consenting to the peace and associating themselves for its maintenance.

The words "the removal of all economic barriers" seem to go farther than equality of trade conditions, but it is explained by the President to mean only that each member of the league may impose what duties or other regulations it pleases provided, however, they be equal to all other members of the league. Now, it is interesting that the former league to which I have referred, our own Articles of Confederation, contains in its historic phraseology this:

The people of each State shall have free ingress and egress to and from the territory of any other State and shall enjoy therein all of the privileges of trade and commerce subject to the same duties, impositions, and restrictions as the inhabitants thereof, respectively.

While in a subsequent part of the paper, Article IX, it was provided that the league, the general league, should make no treaty "by which the several States shall be restrained from imposing such imposts and duties on foreigners as their own people are subject to, or from prohibiting the importation or exportation of any species of goods or commodities whatever."

It seems as if this article of 150 years ago had been drawn in order to carry out the President's suggestion.

Disarmament also seems to be a condition suggested by the President for such a league. He says, in the fourth point:

Adequate guaranties given and taken that national armaments will be reduced to the lowest point consistent with domestic safety.

Our Articles of Confederation, the historic league to which I have referred, provided:

No vessel of war shall be kept up in time of peace by any State except such number as shall be deemed necessary by the United States in Congress assembled (the joint council hereafter mentioned) for the defense of such State or its trade, nor shall any military force be kept up by any State in time of peace except such number only as shall be deemed requisite by the United States in Congress assembled to guarantee the force necessary for the defense of such State, but every State shall always keep up a well regulated and disciplined militia, sufficiently armed and accoutered, and shall provide and constantly have ready for use in public stores a due number of fieldpieces and tents and a proper quantity of arms, ammunition, and camp equipage.

It goes without saying that under these conditions the consent of the congress as general council of the league would be necessary, also to any special embassy or treaties by any State, or to any treaties between them, or to their engaging in war unless there was actual invasion or imminent danger of invasion by pirates, and it was so provided as would be necessary in any such league now.

This being so, any disputes as to boundaries and jurisdictions would necessarily have to be arranged by the joint council or congress and not by any of the particular States. A very careful provision was contained in the articles of league to which I refer, by which the disputants should be summoned to select a court, and that, failing so to do, the joint council might name three persons out of each of the member States, and the disputants should strike out the names until the number was reduced to 13; a court of 7 or 9 was drawn therefrom by lot, and it was left to the court to decide.

In Mr. Taft's proposition he states carefully that we must have a general court of the nations in order to settle boundaries, appointed by the five great powers.

It is hard to see how any less power than those of our confederation could be granted to any general league of nations if it is to amount to anything. It must have some legislative, executive, and judicial powers to carry on business. And in order to do this the paper that I have spoken of—our Articles of Confederation—follows a plan for a congress or joint council that they would have to use in a league now, at least in substance. Article V provided that a congress should meet once a year, to be composed of several delegates from each member State, but which would have one vote only for each State, and that Congress (Article IX) should have sole power of determining on peace and war, of maintaining diplomatic relations and making treaties and governing the seas, to appoint an executive committee of one delegate from each member State to sit in recess to manage generally the affairs of the league, to estimate probable expenditures, to borrow and appropriate money, to build a navy, and to require each member State to furnish a quota of the army, according to its population or as the council might decide. Two-thirds of all the member States would have to agree to any resolution as to war, treaties, estimates, loans, or the raising of armies or a navy, and a majority of all the member States, or two-thirds of the executive committee, was required for everything else. Any charges for war and all other expenses that shall be incurred for the common defense or general welfare were to be defrayed out of the common treasury, which was to be supplied by the several members of the league in proportion to the value of property.

It is surprising how accurately and completely this historic league conforms to all the conditions suggested by the present proposers of a league of nations. It is surprising that its provisions have not been referred to in any of the discussions, because it ought to be familiar to us. This particular league was prepared with great care by our foremost statesmen in 1777. It is known as the Articles of Confederation of the United States of America when they were free and independent States and governments; and the only change I have made in phraseology has been in sometimes changing the word "congress" to "joint council" and the word "state" to "member of the league."

We have the precedent when the United States of America formed a league in 1777, which took effect in 1781, and which went down in absolute failure in 1787 to 1789 because it was found that the affairs of nations can not be carried on either by limiting the powers of the representatives of the various components of one people who ought to be one union, or by trying to tie together people who have nothing to do with one another, like tying Serbia and Bulgaria and the Balkan States to the United States of America.

The Articles of Confederation contain nothing else of importance, except declarations of rights already possessed or recognition of existing governmental agencies. At that time every man in every one of the former British Colonies had been a British citizen and able to go into every other colony with no restriction by immigration laws of his right to be regarded as a citizen there, and that same right was declared in the Articles of Confederation. But it was a mere declaration of what existed.

There was a provision for a general post office. We run one now without any difficulty all over the world by the postal union. It is not difficult to do. But it was only declaring what had existed before the Revolution under the British rule. We can not now agree, if we wish to maintain the purity of our citizenship, that citizens of any State in the world shall come here and be citizens because we happen to be in such a league. Think of the bolsheviki, the Russians, the Serbians, the Bulgarians, the Turks, and the Armenians being told they are all citizens of the United States! But because there was then a common British citizenship that league had a much better chance of getting along than any other that we can put up at the present time. And it seems dangerous, in view of our experience, to go into the question of promising that we will make a league, offensive and defensive, with all the world.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If I have time. How much time have I left, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 40 minutes remaining.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. STEVENSON. I wanted to ask this: I notice in the league you are discussing that each power has an equal vote. Suppose we had a league in which Liberia is placed. Is it contemplated that Liberia shall have an equal vote with the United States, or what is the proposition to avoid that? I am just asking for information.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I will say that I have seen various propositions. The last proposal of Mr. Taft, which appears in to-day's newspapers, is that only the five central great powers shall rule the whole question and that the others shall come in as a sort of adjunct, to be arranged as the great powers please. A proposition I read before that, in a book edited by Theodore Marburg, was that each of the great powers should have three delegates each and the rest one. Representation was a very complicated question, as you will remember, in framing the Constitution of the United States. The convention compromised by allowing the Senate to have equal representation from the States, great and small, and the House of Representatives to have a representation according to the population, taking three-fifths of the slaves.

This league of the United States Confederation, although they were on the same continent and subject to the same dangers and in war against the common enemy, was powerless to enforce contributions of troops or of money. "It"—the articles—"gave to the Confederation the power of contracting debts and at the same time withheld from it the power of paying them" (Curtis Constitutional History, Vol. I, p. 121). What is more, prompt decisions could not be had from a council or Congress in case of emergency. The whole thing proved to be a rope of sand, even between people with the same interests. The league was dying when it was replaced, as it could be, by the union of the people of the States. But that establishment by the people of direct governmental control over persons and property would neither be possible or desirable in a world's league.

Now, this league did not work with us, and why? Are the reasons likely to apply to the new proposition for a world league? Let us begin with the last matter, of the court to settle boundaries, because it had chief consideration in forming the federation. The great western territory of the United States had just been acquired from Great Britain as far as the Mississippi. We had claims on the territory of Spain down toward the Gulf. Those territories were the wealth of the country. Connecticut claimed directly back to the Mississippi by her grant. New York claimed the great regions occupied by the Indians as belonging to her and running over the same territory. Virginia claimed that she owned the whole Northwest Territory, and if the question had been determined according to law by any court there would have been endless hatred of one State by another.

Fortunately they never got into the court of the Confederation, for before the articles of the league of firm friendship were signed Maryland said she would not sign at all unless all the western lands were thrown into a common holding and should belong to the General Government for the benefit of all the States, and for the establishment of new States as soon as might be. She had no right there herself. You might say she was a "dog in the manger"; but she achieved the greatness of the United States by seeing that the various States could not have boundary difficulties against one another.

How is it now? If we had a world league of various nations, could they settle boundary questions in the Balkans? Would the Balkans be willing to allow it? We were not willing to leave Alaska to the rest of the world, because we felt that the boundary of the world wished to have free access through the channels that run through Alaska, and that we should not have a strip of shore. We insisted upon settling this by agreement. Would we allow Mexican questions and our difficulties there to go to an assembly composed of Europeans for determination? Are we to break down the Monroe doctrine? Would not the same difficulties come in now, and would anybody agree to anything going before a world's court?

I can not learn that during the six or nine years of the Confederacy a single question was brought before any court appointed by Congress under the terms of the Confederation, and yet there were a great many boundary questions between the States which were settled.
